JOHN HOLLAND.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report a bill granting an invalid pension to John Holland, of Arkansas.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask to put that bill on its passage. This man is ninety-three years old.

Mr. KELSEY. I object. You refused, a little while ago, to let a bill pass for a man one hundred and three years of age.

Mr. FLORENCE. I did not.

Mr. KELSEY. Somebody else did.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONRAD DUVAL.

JOSEPH NOCK.

Mr. REILLY, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill for the relief of Joseph Nock; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD N. KENT.

Mr. STEWART, of Maryland, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 188) for the relief of Edward N. Kent; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

LYDIA FLETCHER.

Mr. SAVAGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Lydia Fletcher; which was read a first and second time, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD P. VOLLUM.

Mr. SAVAGE, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 336) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was laid upon the table, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES KNAP.

Mr. EUSTIS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back a bill (S. No. 272) for the relief of Charles Knap, and asked that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. KELSEY objected.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLICATION OF CERTAIN DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Joint Committee on the Library, reported a bill authorizing the collection and publication of certain public documents; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is that a private bill?

Mr. PETTIT. It was not clear to the committee whether this should rank as a public or a private bill; but, upon examination, it will appear that it was initiated by a private memorial. The labor proposed to be done under it is prescribed to be done by particular individuals, and on a particular subject. It is, therefore, I think, a private bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the same opinion.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. It relates to the publication of certain documents, to wit: the American State Papers; and proposes that the work shall be done by gentlemen who have published them heretofore. It is public work, not predicated upon any claim which they have more than any other persons. The bill involves the questions, first, whether we will have the work done? and, secondly, by whom we will have the work done?

The SPEAKER. The merits of the bill are not now under consideration.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am showing that it is not a private bill, and cannot, in the proper sense of the word, be considered as such.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if the gentleman will read the bill he will change his opinion.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Then I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I make the point of order that that is not a private bill, and is not admissible under the resolution. This work has not been provided for by any existing law. It is a mere proposal of these persons. They have no claim upon the Government. There is no law and no determination on the part of Congress to extend this publication; and certainly, under the guise of a private bill, a proposal cannot be brought in here by individuals to go on and conduct a public work or publication that has not been provided for by law.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky might be of weight when the question came up whether the bill should or should not be passed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Well, I make the point of order that it is not admissible under the resolution under which we are acting.

The SPEAKER. The bill provides for contracting with certain persons named for certain books. It does not propose to go into the market. It is not general in its character; it is special, restricting the contract to particular individuals; and if that does not make it a private bill, the Chair cannot imagine what would.

Mr. STANTON. It strikes me that the idea of a private bill is where there is some liability or obligation on the part of the Government.

The SPEAKER. And is not this a proposal to enter into an obligation on the part of the Government to particular persons?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly; but that does not make it a private bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to say, in addition to what the gentleman from Kentucky has said, in relation to the point of order, that this is no claim. There is nothing to base the bill upon; and it seems to me that it is not a private one, even though the contract is to be made with private individuals. It is for the general purposes of the Government, and I cannot see how it can possibly be construed to be a private bill. We are trying to reduce this printing business, and here is a proposition which involves an expenditure of half a million of dollars or more.

The SPEAKER. That may all be true; and yet it does not affect the question of order. It may affect the decision of the House, when it comes to pass upon the bill; but it does not touch the question of order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. A private bill is one relating to the claim of a private individual upon the Government.

Mr. EDIE. I object to debate.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Does the Chair overrule my question of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I take an appeal.

Mr. EDIE. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is the appeal debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Why not?

The SPEAKER. The House is acting this morning under a special order, which is not debatable. This question, arising incidentally under it, comes under the same rule as an appeal after the previous question has been seconded.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. My proposition is, that this bill does not come under the operation of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is the point in controversy. If the Chair is wrong, and the House should so determine, then the bill will not be before the House at all.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Very well; let us have the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects to the bill being received as a private bill. The bill proposes that the Committee on the Library shall be directed to contract with the publishers of the first series of State Papers, going on to specify the number of volumes and the price to be paid.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Which is not authorized by law.

The SPEAKER. Of course, there is no law. This bill proposes to create a law. The Chair decides that the bill is a private bill, and from that decision the gentleman from Kentucky appeals.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would inquire if the bill indicates the individuals who are to do the work?

The SPEAKER. It refers to the publishers of the first series as specifically as if they were named.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the appeal upon the table.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise another question of order upon the bill. I ask if this question has ever been referred to the Committee on the Library? And if it has not, I ask by what authority they have brought this bill here?

Mr. PETTIT. I will answer the gentleman from Tennessee that this matter was presented to the House by the memorial of Messrs. Gales & Seaton, then referred by the House to the Joint Committee on the Library, and in pursuance of such reference, is now reported back by the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill upon the table; and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay upon the table was disagreed to.

The bill was then referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to offer the following resolution, to which, I presume, there will be no objection:

Resolved, That after the Calendar shall be called through, and all cases not objected to are disposed of, the Calendar shall be again called, and five minutes shall be allowed for debate on each bill, and any amendments that may be offered, and five minutes against each bill and amendments; and the committee shall then proceed to vote upon the bill and pending amendments, without further debate.

A MEMBER objected.

Mr. STANTON. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will that be in order under the resolution which was adopted this morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the resolution conflicts with that which passed the House this morning.

Mr. MILLSON. I wish to inquire if the effect of the resolution which the gentleman from Ohio proposes to offer is that when the Calendar shall have been called over the bills are to be taken up in their order, and disposed of upon merely five minutes' discussion?

Mr. STANTON. That is the effect.

Mr. MILLSON. Well, sir, it seems to me unnecessary. When we go into committee and take up the bills for discussion, we can rise upon each particular bill and close debate.

Mr. STANTON. If we have to rise to close debate upon each particular bill, we shall not get through with more than three cases in the course of the day.

Mr. MILLSON. I want to see what cases are to come up, before I consent to close debate upon them.

Mr. STANTON. I think any bill on the Calendar may be explained in five minutes to the satisfaction of any gentleman.

Mr. RITCHIE. I object.

Mr. STANTON. At the request of gentlemen around me, I will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the motion for a moment, to enable me to submit a resolution.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I cannot.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. If the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts should be voted down, and the gentleman from Virginia should get the floor, it would then be in order for him to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. CHAFFEE's motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. CHAFFEE in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the Private Calendar. Under the order of the House, the bills were read over in their order, and such as were not objected to were laid aside to be reported to the House.

CYRUS H. M'CORMICK.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 11) upon the petition of Cyrus H. McCormick. [Objected to by Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois.]

WILLIAM NEILL, AND OTHERS.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 10) upon the petition of William Neill, and others. [Objected to by Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois.]

CHARLES J. INGERSOLL.

A bill (H. R. No. 197) for the relief of Charles J. Ingersoll. [Objected to by Mr. KELSEY.]

HENRY LEEF AND JOHN M'KEE.

A bill (H. R. No. 206) to indemnify Henry Leef and John McKee for illegal seizure of a certain bark. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

WILLIAM HEINE.

A bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition.

The bill directs that there be paid to William Heine, artist of the late Japan expedition under Commodore Perry, compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum during the time he was actually employed in such service; provided the amount already paid him as master's mate on said expedition be deducted therefrom.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, objected to the bill; but subsequently withdrew his objection.

From the report it appears that William Heine entered and served as a master's mate, under Commodore Perry, on the Japan expedition, from August 1, 1852, to April 25, 1855; that, while thus employed, he performed the duties of artist to the expedition, and, in that capacity, prepared very many of the illustrations of the report of the work called for by Congress. During the whole of his service in the capacity of master's mate, as appears from the papers from Commodore Perry and Lieutenant Maury, he "was exclusively employed as the principal artist of the expedition, in which capacity he evinced superior talents, and elicited the entire approbation of the commander of the expedition;" and, since his return to the United States, has been of great service to the hydrographical work of the expedition in sketching headlands, topography," &c., and in drawing and superintending the publication of the illustrations to the report on the same.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELIPHALET BROWN, JR.

A bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Eliphalet Brown, jr. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

KATHARINE K. RUSSELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 223) for the relief of Katharine K. Russell. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

Mr. HAWKINS. I move that the committee rise. There is no use in sitting here when objections are made indiscriminately. It is worse than puerile.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

CHARLOTTE BUTLER.

A bill (H. R. No. 226) for the relief of Charlotte Butler. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he intends to object to all of the bills upon the Calendar?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. NICHOLS. I move that the committee rise. When one member sets himself up against the whole House, it is no use for us to go on.

The question was taken; and the committee refused to rise.

JOSEPH M. PLUMMER, ETC.

A bill (H. R. No. 227) for the relief of Joseph M. Plummer and Mary R. Plummer, minor children of Captain Samuel M. Plummer. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

Mr. NICHOLS. I move that the committee rise. The last four bills have been objected to by one gentleman. It is useless to go on, if all the bills are to be objected to.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman wants to object let him go on. The responsibility is with him.

The committee refused to rise.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to submit a question of order in regard to objections. I understand that this is not objection day under the rules, but only by virtue of the resolution passed by the House. Now, two thirds of the House consented to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing that resolution, but there was not a two-thirds vote for the passage of that resolution. I submit the point that a majority vote—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no jurisdiction of the question. Debate is out of order.

Mr. HUGHES. Can a majority of the House make this objection day over the rules? That is the question.

HENRY TAYLOR.

A bill (H. R. No. 228) for the relief of Henry Taylor. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

SAMUEL GOODRICH, JR.

A bill (H. R. No. 229) for the relief of Samuel Goodrich, jr.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Samuel Goodrich, jr., of New York, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, and to pay him a pension, at the rate of eight dollars per month, during his natural life, to commence on the 1st of January, 1856.

It appears from the report that in September, 1814, Mr. Goodrich entered the service of the United States, in the militia, in Oswego county, New York, and marched to Sackett's Harbor, New York. There, in camp, he was exposed to the hardships of a soldier; destitute of barracks, exposed to the wet, sleeping on the wet ground, he was seized with the prevailing camp distemper, which soon became a bilious fever and inflammatory rheumatism, which caused the formation of many tumors upon his body and limbs, that were often lanced—resulting finally in the formation of an abscess on the left hip, injuring the hip-joint, contracting of the muscles, shortening of the left leg, making it almost useless, attended with extreme pain. On reaching home, he was confined to his bed or room one year and a half; and since that day he has continued a cripple, unable to perform hard labor, with a diseased hip incurable, and without hope of improvement.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY BENNETT.

A bill (H. R. No. 230) for the relief of Mary Bennett.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary Bennett, who is the widow of the late Captain Charles W. Bennett, of the United States revenue service, who died June 15, 1855, from disease caused by extraordinary exposure in the line of his duty while engaged in the revenue service, on the pension roll, at a compensation of thirty dollars per month, commencing with the 15th of June, 1855, and to continue to her during her widowhood, and after her death or intermarriage to be paid to her children until they, respectively, arrive at the age of sixteen years, agreeably to the provisions of the act of August 11, 1848.

Mr. LETCHER. That bill goes back to 1855. I move to amend by inserting, in lieu of that provision, that the pension shall commence with the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

It appears from the report that Mary Bennett is the widow of Charles W. Bennett, deceased, late a captain in the United States revenue service. Captain Bennett was commissioned as lieutenant in that service April 10, 1839; served at various stations on the Atlantic coast until the spring of 1850, when he was ordered to the San Francisco station, to which he repaired on the bark Polk, as first lieutenant. After his arrival, he was transferred to the revenue brig Lawrence, and remained thereon doing active duty, under Captain Douglass Outinger, until November 25, 1851, when the brig was wrecked and lost. Up to this time, as is testified by Captain Webster, of the bark Polk, there was not a more healthy or robust person in the service. On the night of the wreck he engaged actively on the beach, and in the water, in saving valuable Government property from the vessel. The weather was inclement, and he was much exposed in the water. From that time his health was broken and declined. He returned from San Francisco in 1852, under the care of Captain Webster, and during the voyage his health failed so rapidly that Captain Webster did not expect him to survive long enough to reach home. He reached home; and, from illness, was excused from duty until August 9, 1853, when he was so far restored as to be ordered to the Wilmington station, and attached to the cutter Forward. In January, 1854, he was dispatched, in command of the Forward, in search of the survivors of the wreck of the steamer San Francisco. From a report of that cruise, made by Captain Bennett to the collector of customs of the Delaware district, January 24, 1854, it appears that he was sent to sea with but one officer, to wit, a third lieutenant; that this officer, though of unexceptionable character, was too inexperienced to be left in charge of the deck during such severe weather as was encountered, and that nearly one half of the crew were disabled and sick the greater part of the time. Thus it became necessary that Captain Bennett should keep the deck during snow and rain, and in so doing he contracted a severe cold from which he never recovered. After his return he had frequent hemorrhage of the lungs, which rendered him incompetent to discharge the duties of his office, and of which he died on the 15th of June, 1855.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

SYLVANUS BURNHAM.

A bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of Sylvanus Burnham.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to place the name of Sylvanus Burnham upon the roll of invalid pensioners, and cause to be paid to him eight dollars per month, commencing from and after the 14th of November, 1850, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. LETCHER. That bill provides that the Secretary of War shall put Sylvanus Burnham on the pension roll. I move to strike that out, and insert, in lieu thereof, that the Secretary of the Interior be so directed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. That bill also goes back to 1850, nearly eight years. I move to strike that out, and to provide that the pension shall commence with the passage of this act.

Mr. CASE. In all instances, I believe, it has been the rule to provide that the pension shall commence when the proofs in the case were completed.

Mr. LETCHER. If the proof was completed then, there have been seven or eight sessions of Congress since, and it seems to me it ought to have been reached in one of them. If the amendment is objected to, I shall object to the bill.

Mr. CASE. I do not object.

The amendment was agreed to.

It appears from the report in this case, that Sylvanus Burnham was a private soldier in the Indian war, under General Wayne, for three years from February 28, 1792, and was honorably discharged. While engaged in the discharge of his duties as such soldier he was injured by the explosion of a canister of powder. By this explosion his face was burned, and his eyes nearly ruined. So seriously was his sight impaired, that for the last forty years, he has been unable to read. He had received no pension, nor even a bounty land warrant, at the date of his application.

The bill as amended, was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN HOPPER.

A bill (H. R. No. 236) for the relief of the heirs of John Hopper. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

JOHN A. HOPPER.

A bill (H. R. No. 237) for the relief of the heirs of John A. Hopper. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

RICHARD TARVIN.

A bill (H. R. No. 238) for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of Richard Farren, alias Richard Tarvin, who was a friendly Creek Indian in the war of 1813 and 1814, the sum of $600, for losses sustained by him during that war.

The report states that Richard Tarvin, alias Richard Farren, was a friendly Creek Indian, in the war between the United States and his tribe, in 1813-14, and sustained loss by the depredations of the hostiles to the extent of $600, as reported by General D. B. Mitchell, the agent of the Federal Government; that, by the treaty negotiated with the Creek tribe of Indians at the close of the war, the United States guaranteed indemnity to those Indians who had remained friendly to our cause, for whatever property they had lost during the war by the common enemy. Claims were presented against the Government for such losses, on the part of the friendly Creeks, amounting, in the aggregate to $195,417 90, all of which has been provided for and paid by Congress. In addition to the claims embraced in the above amount, a supplemental abstract of claims was presented by General Mitchell in favor of six other friendly Creek Indians, amounting, altogether, to $9,770. Among these latter claimants is found the name of Richard Farren, alias Richard Tarvin, and his damages were assessed at the sum of $600. Of the half dozen claimants included in the supplemental abstract of General Mitchell, $5,925 were paid to Peter Randall in an act passed by the Thirty-Third Congress. The claims of Arthur Sigmond, for $1,420, and of John Simmance, for $1,163, were provided for in the Indian appropriation bill of last Congress. The committee saw no good reason why the claim of Richard Farren, alias Richard Tarvin, through his legal representatives, should not also be liquidated.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

ZINA WILLIAMS.

A bill (H. R. No. 239) for the relief of Zina Williams.

The bill directs that the Secretary of the Interior place the name of Zina Williams, of New York, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 4th of December, 1855, to continue during his natural life.

It appears from the report that the petitioner was called into the service in the war of 1812, in September, 1814, from Montgomery county, New York, and marched to Sackett's Harbor, in New York, where he was on duty, without shelter, sleeping (if it all) upon the ground; sickness prevailed in camp, and on the 1st of October, 1814, he was taken sick of the prevailing camp disease and was sent to the hospital, where he was attended by two surgeons; his sickness settled into a fever; his friends sent for him; with difficulty carried him home on a bed; he was confined to his bed eighteen months, the fever concentrating in his left hip, causing great pain and contraction of the muscles, resulting in almost the entire loss of the use of the left leg; the disability continuing from that time to the present, and of a nature incurable; that he is a farmer, a sober, temperate, prudent man, and is clear from any charge of imprudence or exposure as the cause of the continuation of his disability.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 149) upon the petition of the claimants of the brig General Armstrong.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that that case be reported to the House with a recommendation that the report of the Court of Claims be concurred in.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to amend that motion by moving that the case be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would inquire whether it has not already been referred to some committee?

Mr. CLAY. It has not been.

By unanimous consent the report was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

BENJAMIN F. HALL.

A bill (H. R. No. 244) for the relief of Benjamin F. Hall.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. MORGAN. I will state to the committee that this claim has been settled by the Department, and I have just received a draft for it.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

A. BAUDOUIN AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, objected; but subsequently withdrew his objection with the understanding that the yeas and nays should be taken in the House on the passage of the bill.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts, in full compensation for the damages sustained by them arising from the sinking of a flat-boat of ice, at New Orleans, by a steamboat in the service of the United States.

The petition states that the petitioners have, by proper proof, satisfied the committee that they were, on the 21st of March, 1846, owners of a flat-boat of ice, containing two hundred and twenty tons, which boat, loaded with ice, had on that day been towed down to the landing in the first municipality in the city of New Orleans, set apart to them by the wharfinger; that just before she was properly fastened to the wharf, and whilst their boat was tied to another boat, the name of which is not given in the proof, but declared by the petitioners to be schooner Commerce, Captain Pierce, she was run into by the steamer Colonel Harney, then in the service of the United States, and commanded by the officers of the Government. The proof shows that the Colonel Harney was under a heavy pressure of steam; and that the act was apparently the result of great carelessness or wantonly mischievous, whereby the petitioners lost the boat, which was sunk, and the ice, valued at $2,000; the proof is that there was two hundred and twenty tons, and that it was worth ten dollars per ton. Suit was brought in the United States district court; and the evidence on file, which makes this case, was taken contradictorily with the United States attorney, and would, between individuals, have given the plaintiffs a judgment for $2,000; but the case was dismissed upon an exception, which was, that the Government could not be sued; whereupon the parties appealed to Congress for redress; and, on the 15th December, 1846, the case was referred to the Committee of Claims, and referred to the same committee again on the 17th December, 1847; that on the 30th March, 1848, a bill was reported to this House for $2,000, accompanied by a report from Mr. Rockwell; that the report and bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and recommended by the committee to the House for passage, but was not reached. The papers were again referred to the Committee of Claims on the 23d of January, 1850; and on the 13th of February following, a report was made from that committee by Mr. Nelson, with a bill for the relief of the parties, which report and bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and reported back with a recommendation that it do pass the House; that the report of the committee was not finally acted on. The bill went to the Speaker's table, and was not reached.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY D. HOLKAR.

A bill (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of Nancy D. Holkar.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. This bill was reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims under a deception. The committee have discovered facts which authorize them to ask the committee to report it back to the House, with a recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MARY JEMISON.

A bill (H. R. No. 252) for the relief of Mary Jemison, deceased.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not want to object to this bill if it is right, but I do not think it is. I understand that the parties named in this bill had some money coming to them upon a mortgage, and that they deposited evidence of that sum with the Indian agent of the Government. If that be the case—if they chose to go and deposit money with the Indian agent—it strikes me that the Government is under no more obligation to pay it than I am; and if Congress ever passed a bill to pay the sum, I think they did wrong.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The committee of which I am a member has a number of times reported in favor of this bill. One ground on which they reported it was, that the Indians have a right to rely upon the Government agent, appointed for the transaction of their business. In addition to that, Congress heretofore passed a bill to pay this money, but the Government, in paying it, paid it to the wrong party. The committee thought that inasmuch as the Government had originally acknowledged its liability, and having made an appropriation for it heretofore, which was paid out to a wrong party, the Government was, in good faith, bound to pay the money to the parties entitled to it.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not hold to the doctrine that if the Government has an agent, and a party chooses to deposit money with him, we are liable to pay it. I must object to the bill.

JOHN J. BULOW.

A bill (H. R. No. 253) for the relief of the heirs of John J. Bulow, jr., deceased.

The bill was read.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. This bill has been before the Committee on Military Affairs. It appears that the claim is for $63,000; that $20,000 of it was for crops destroyed by the enemy, and the remainder for other property which this man lost, as sworn to by several witnesses. The bill proposes to reduce that remaining sum of $63,475 down to $49,175. I think if we are going to pay a debt we ought to pay it according to the testimony. I therefore move to amend the bill by striking out "$49,175," and inserting "$63,475."

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would ask the gentleman whether his amendment would not allow consequential damages in addition to the loss of property?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. No, sir, it allows exactly what was sworn to as items of account, and nothing more.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall object to the bill if that amendment is adopted.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Rather than rob these persons entirely, I will withdraw the amendment; but I think the bill does great wrong.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to know something more about this bill, and I object to it.

THOMAS PHENIX, JR.

A bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr., late paymaster's clerk in the service of the United States.

Mr. QUITMAN. There is a Senate bill lower down on the Calendar which is precisely the same as this. I ask that this bill be laid aside, and the Senate bill taken up.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over, and Senate bill (No. 102) for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr., was taken up.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of War to pay Thomas Phenix, jr., during the time he was acting as paymaster's clerk, three dollars a day, deducting therefrom the salary of $500 per annum already received by him.

There being no objection to the bill, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I understand that that man was an officer, whose pay was fixed by law. We have had a good deal of fuss here about going back and giving pay. I think this is a good place to stop it; and I object to the bill.

Mr. QUITMAN. I would say to the gentleman from Virginia that this man was not an officer in the Army. He was employed as a paymaster's clerk at a fixed salary, but shortly after he was thus employed, a law passed fixing the pay of clerks, to be hereafter employed, at three dollars a day. He now asks that he may receive the same pay which others have received for similar services.

Mr. LETCHER. He was a clerk, and his salary was fixed by law at the time he took the place.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I make the point of order that the objection of the gentleman from Virginia comes too late. The bill had been laid aside to be reported to the House when he made it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The bill has been laid aside to be reported to the House, and the objection of the gentleman from Virginia comes too late.

AUGUSTUS J. KUHN.

A bill (H. R. No. 258) for the relief of Augustus J. Kuhn.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Augustus J. Kuhn, of Pennsylvania, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 25th of July, 1856, and to continue during his natural life.

It appears, from the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that the petitioner in this case was called into the service in the war of 1812, then a resident of Pennsylvania; that he marched with his company to Baltimore, Maryland, where he was stationed. At this time he was a hardy, healthy person, capable of endurance; but the camp life of a soldier, exposed as he was to cold, rain, and sleeping upon wet straw and in wet clothing, he took a violent cold, so severe as to lay him down sick; which settled in his head, making him almost distracted; causing severe pains in his head and ears, and confused noise and partial deafness; all of which increased upon him, affecting his whole nervous system, and prostrating him altogether; that he continues in this low situation, only failing and becoming more prostrated, his deafness increasing with his weakness, until he became totally deaf, or so far so that he could only hear through an ear-trumpet, and, at times, but partially even then—with his constitution so shattered as to be hardly able to walk.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House.

HECTOR ST. JOHN BEATLEY.

A bill (H. R. No. 262) for the relief of Hector St. John Beatley. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

HENRIETTA S. CLARK.

A bill (H. R. No. 263) for the relief of Henrietta S. Clark.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire if this widow has not now a pension under the general law?

The CHAIRMAN. She has.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is a bill from the Senate now on the Speaker's table to extend these pensions during the lives of widows. I think we had better pass this bill over and take that bill up in the House.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I will offer the Senate bill as a substitute for this.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman does that, the bill will have to go back to the Senate. It would be better to wait until the general bill can be reached.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman had better move in the House to take up the Senate bill. I have no doubt that the House will pass it.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I will do so.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That will dispose of all these cases.

The bill was then passed over.

MARY W. THOMPSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 265) for the relief of Mary W. Thompson.

Mr. CURTIS. That case is just like the last. It had better be passed over.

The bill was passed over.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM YORK.

A bill (H. R. No. 266) for the relief of William York. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

TIMOTHY L. O'KEEFE.

A bill (H. R. No. 267) for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keefe.

The bill and report having been read, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

WILLIAM CRAMPTON.

A bill (H. R. No. 268) extending the patent granted to William Crampton for an improvement in figure and fancy power looms for seven years from the 25th day of November, 1853. [Objected to by Mr. PIKE.]

DAVID BRUCE.

A bill (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of David Bruce.

The bill directs the Commissioner of Patents to extend the patent of David Bruce, dated November 6, 1843, for a new and improved mode of casting type, for seven years from the date of its expiration, subject to the rules and regulations now in force for granting extensions; provided it shall appear, on examination, that the failure to extend his patent occurred through an official mistake.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House.

HARRIS AND MORGAN.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 9) authorizing the Postmaster General to revise and adjust the accounts of Harris & Morgan, on principles of justice and equity. [Objected to by Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois.]

J. W. NYE.

A bill (H. R. 275) for the payment of the claim of J. W. Nye, assignee of Peter Bary, jr., and Hugh Stewart. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

MARYETT VAN BUSKIRK.

A bill (H. R. No. 276) for the relief of Maryett Van Buskirk, heir of Thomas Van Buskirk, deceased, late of Bergen county, New Jersey.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Maryett Van Buskirk, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,367 principal, together with interest from the 1st day of January, 1780, in full payment for the claim for forage, grain, cattle, and other supplies furnished to the American Army by the late Thomas Van Buskirk, deceased, of Bergen county, New Jersey, during the revolutionary war.

It appears from the report that the petitioner, Maryett Van Buskirk, is the lineal descendant of Thomas Van Buskirk, who was in his lifetime a citizen of Bergen county, New Jersey. That during the period of our revolutionary struggle he was a wealthy farmer and grazier, and a man of great influence. The evidence before the committee shows that he was one of the most ardent Whigs of the Revolution, and in a community where a large part of the population was hostile to the American cause. It further appears from the evidence and certificates on file that the American troops, at different times, under the command of Generals Wayne, Greene, and other officers, during the period ranging between the years 1777 and 1780, encamped at Harrington, (or Peramus, as sometimes called.) In the winter of 1779-80, General Washington, with the main army, were encamped at Morristown, near by. When the committee state that, as early as 1777, dates the poverty and extreme wants of the army, and the prostration of the credit of the Government, they state facts known to all men. It abundantly appears by the evidence that from this time, while our army was in winter quarters at Valley Forge, until 1780, Thomas Van Buskirk was frequently applied to by the several officers commanding the American troops for supplies of cattle, horses, forage, grain, and other necessary articles, all of which he furnished; and he frequently purchased articles from others with his own money, to enable him to supply the army. The difficult task of obtaining supplies at this time, and in a part of the State notoriously disaffected, the resort to force by our officers to obtain them, under the command of a resolution of Congress, are facts known in history. The evidence establishes the fact that it was during this time that the ancestor of the petitioner, Thomas Van Buskirk, furnished these supplies, as the evidence shows, with cheerfulness and alacrity. It is also proven that when the British had possession of Philadelphia, in 1778, and Colonel Lee had been sent into New Jersey to carry off and destroy all that otherwise might fall into the hands of the enemy, in order to cut off their supplies, among those that suffered in this expedition was Thomas Van Buskirk, who cheerfully gave up what he had.

It appears that he seldom was paid in money for his property, but, instead, received certificates, executed by the several officers in command, as proven by the depositions of parties who saw the officers sign many of the same. One of the witnesses, examined on the 1st of December, 1854, says that he was then ninety-six years of age, and that he saw Colonel Lee subscribe certificates, Nos. 3 and 5, and that he saw the property described in the certificates, Nos. 1, 2, and 7, delivered to Major Tilghman.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, objected; but subsequently withdrew his objection, with the understanding that the yeas and nays would be taken in the House on the passage of the bill; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY BOYLE.

A bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Mary Boyle.

The bill directs the name of Mary Boyle to be placed on the pension roll, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, from the 1st of January, 1858.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Boyle, have had the same under consideration, and find by reference to Niles' Register for the years, — that the facts set forth by the petitioner, relative to the remarkable and gallant services of her late husband, Captain Thomas Boyle, are abundantly substantiated as matters of history. The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, widow of the late Captain Thomas Boyle, respectfully represents that, in consideration of the remarkable services of her late husband in the war of 1812, she respectfully solicits such aid as Congress may vouchsafe her in her declining years, and to secure her from want the little time she has to stay. My husband, first as the commander of the schooner Comet, of fourteen guns, and then in the Chasseur, of twelve, during the war captured more than seventy sail of British vessels, thirty-two of which were equal to him in force, and eighteen superior. He met and beat off a Portuguese man-of-war, carrying twenty-three two-pounders, convoying three British vessels, killing her first lieutenant and five men, and wounding many more, capturing two of the three British vessels, one carrying fourteen guns, and the other ten guns. Also, he captured the ship Hop, with fourteen guns. Soon after he met and captured the ships Atlantic and Jama, in company, carrying twenty guns; Hop, fourteen guns; ship John, fourteen; London Packet, twelve; Henry, ten; Alexander, ten; Dominio Packet, ten; and brig Industry, of ten guns. On the 26th of February, 1815, he fell in with and captured, after a desperate fight of fourteen minutes, his Britannic Majesty's schooner St. Lawrence, mounting fifteen guns, four and twelve-pound carronades, and a long nine, commanded by Lieutenant James E. Gordon, royal navy, with a complement of seventy-five men and a number of soldiers, marines, and several naval officers (passengers) on board. The Chasseur lost but five killed and eight wounded. The St. Lawrence had fifteen killed and twenty-three wounded. All this, and much more, was done by my late lamented husband, and neither he nor I have ever received or asked anything at the hands of Government; and now, at the age of eighty, and poor, I respectfully solicit such measure of relief as you, in your wisdom, may think proper to grant.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

ISAAC S. SMITH.

A bill (H. R. No. 31) for the relief of Isaac S. Smith, of Syracuse, New York. [Objected to by Mr. PHILLIPS.]

COURT OF CLAIMS BILLS.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. The other cases on the Calendar, down to 319, may as well be passed over.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I offer a substitute for all these bills, which I desire to have read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think that this is the proper time to offer a general bill, because no explanation can be given, or debate had upon it, and it will be necessary to have some discussion of it.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Let it go to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It cannot be debated.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes, sir; I agree not to call for any vote on it, till discussion shall have been had.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Yes; but there are others who might not assent to that arrangement.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I will guaranty for them. Let my substitute be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the substitute, but was interrupted by Mr. CURRY, who objected.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Well; I notify the House that I will, on Monday, move to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. All the bills on page 7 and page 8, down to 319 on page 9, are on the same principle; and if one passes, all the others should pass. Therefore, until the House decides the principle, it is better to pass them over.

The following Court of Claims bills, reported back by the Committee of Claims with a recommendation that they do not pass, were passed over informally:

A bill (No. 44) for the relief of Jane Smith, of the county of Clermont, State of Ohio.

A bill (No. 45) for the relief of Lucinda Robinson, county of Orleans, State of Vermont.

A bill (No. 46) for the relief of Hannah Weaver, of Wayne county, Pennsylvania.

A bill (No. 47) for the relief of Ann Clark, of Madison county, Tennessee.

A bill (No. 48) for the relief of Mary Burt, of Scioto county, Ohio.

A bill (No. 49) for the relief of Esther Stevens, of Van Buren county, Michigan;

A bill (No. 50) for the relief of Mercy Armstrong, of Gloucester county, Rhode Island;

A bill (No. 51) for the relief of Nancy Madison, of Fairfield county, Ohio;

A bill (No. 52) for the relief of Anna Parrot, of Clinton county, Ohio;

A bill (No. 53) for the relief of Margaret Taylor, of Putnam county, Tennessee;

A bill (No. 54) for the relief of Lavina Tepton, of White county, Tennessee;

A bill (No. 55) for the relief of Lucretia Wilcox, of Wayne county, Michigan;

A bill (No. 56) for the relief of Mary Robbins, of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania;

A bill (No. 57) for the relief of Tempy Connelly, of Johnson county, Kentucky;

A bill (No. 58) for the relief of Rosamond Robinson, of Belknap county, New Hampshire;

A bill (No. 59) for the relief of Jane Martin, of the county of Harrison, State of Virginia;

A bill (No. 60) for the relief of Melinda Durkee, of the State of Georgia;

A bill (No. 61) for the relief of Sarah Weed, of the county of Albany, State of New York;

A bill (No. 62) for the relief of Mary Pierce, of the county of Courtland, State of New York; separately voted on, the Chair will be happy put them aside and present them separately.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no fault to find with the Chair.

I will state, with the permission of the Chair, that a new rule has been adopted in the Committee of the Whole House. The Speaker not being here all the time, of course cannot be expected to know it. There are some bills agreed to be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that they do pass, with the understanding that a separate vote shall be taken on each, and that that separate vote shall be taken by yeas and nays. This bill for the relief of William Heine is one of them. At first, I thought I had renewed the objection to it when objection was withdrawn, and that it was not laid aside.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman withdrew his objection on the understanding that there should be a separate vote.

Mr. GOODE. I wish to say that the rule referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee, is a new rule, adopted in committee by his suggestion. The SPEAKER. Separate votes will be taken on the bills which have been indicated.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order to move a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The House is now acting under the previous question.

The following bills, upon which separate votes were not required, were then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (No. 229) for the relief of Samuel Goodrich, jr.;

A bill (No. 238) for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin;

A bill (No. 239) for the relief of Zina Williams;

A bill (No. 258) for the relief of Augustus J. Kuhn;

A bill (No. 267) for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keefe, of Missouri;

A bill (No. 269) for the relief of David Bruce; and

A bill (No. 321) for the relief of John B. Roper.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the House bills above reported were passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY BENNETT.

The SPEAKER. The following bills have been reported from the committee, with amendments:

A bill (H. R. No. 230) for the relief of Mary Bennett.

The SPEAKER. The committee report that that bill be amended by striking out the words, "the said 15th day of June, 1855," and to insert in lieu thereof, the words "commencing with the passage of this act;" so that the pension, instead of running back, would commence when the act was passed.

The amendment was concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SYLVANUS BURNHAM.

A bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of Sylvanus Burnham.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House recommends the passage of that bill with two amendments: to strike out the word "War," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Interior," so that the Secretary of the Interior shall be directed to place the name of Sylvanus Burnham upon the pension roll; and to strike out the words "14th day of November, 1850," and to insert in lieu thereof "the passage of this act," so as to provide that the pension shall commence at the passage of the act.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS PHENIX, JR.

A bill (S. No. 102) for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House recommend the passage of that bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD moved to reconsider the votes by which the last three bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SICKLES. If the House should now adjourn, will not the remaining bills come up as the first business in order on Monday morning?

The SPEAKER. They will.

Mr. SICKLES. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion until I ask leave of the House for the withdrawal of certain papers.

Mr. SICKLES. I withdraw it for that purpose.

JOHN WORK.

On motion of Mr. REAGAN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of John Work, and others, applying for additional compensation to certain assistant surgeons in the United States Army, for the purpose of presenting them in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Separate votes have been asked on the four following bills; and if there be no objection, the question on their engrossment and third reading will be put on them together:

A bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Mary Boyle;

A bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts;

A bill (H. R. No. 276) for the relief of Maryett Van Buskirk, heir of Thomas Van Buskirk, deceased, late of Bergen county, New Jersey; and

A bill (H. R. No. 324) to allow the legal representatives of Samuel Jones five years' full pay in lieu of half pay for life.

There was no objection; and the bills were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly severally read the third time.

Mr. PHILLIPS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

MARY BOYLE.

The question was first on the bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Mary Boyle.

Mr. JEWETT demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk commenced the call of the roll, but was interrupted by Mr. SICKLES. How many bills are there upon which separate votes have been called?

The SPEAKER. Four.

Mr. SICKLES. If the demand for the yeas and nays could be withdrawn, we could take a vote by division in a short time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It was understood that we were to have the yeas and nays upon these bills.

Mr. SICKLES. Then I move (half past five o'clock) that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion, inasmuch as a response has been made on the call of the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Billingshurst, Birmingham, Bishop, Blair, Bowie, Brayton, Bullinton, Burlingame, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Clawson, Clemens, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cox, James Craig, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Daves, Dean, Durfee, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gilman, Glimmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Greenwood, Gregg, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, Hawkins, Horton, Hughes, Huyler, Jewett, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Murray, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, William W. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Powell, Prunty, Reilly, Roberts, Royce, Sandidge, Scott, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Shorter, Robert Smith, William Smith, Spinner, Stanton, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, George Taylor, Thompson, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwallader C. Washburn, Edwin B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, Winslow, Woodson, and Augustus R. Wright—96.

NAYS—Messrs. Andrews, Atkins, Avery, Bonham, Caskey, John B. Clark, Cobb, Crawford, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dodd, English, Garrett, Goode, Hopkins, Houston, George W. Jones, J. Glaney Jones, Owen Jones, Letcher, Milson, Pendleton, Peyton, Phillips, Quitman, Ritchie, Kaitin, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, Miles Taylor, Watkins, and Wortendyke—32.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I move to be excused from further attendance here to-day. As a six o'clock man, I desire to absent myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion, as the House is acting under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Then I shall take the liberty to go anyhow.

MARYETT VAN BUSKIRK.

The next bill upon which a separate vote had been asked was a bill (H. R. No. 276) for the relief of Maryett Van Buskirk, heir of Thomas Van Buskirk, deceased, late of Bergen county, New Jersey.

Mr. LETCHER. I would like unanimous consent to make an inquiry of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TAYLOR,] in connection with that bill. [Cries of "Go on!"] Is it true that the bill will require $115,684 56 to discharge it?

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I have not estimated the amount. The amount of the bill is $20,367, with interest.

Mr. LETCHER. Read the bill.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Maryett Van Buskirk, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,367 principal, together with interest from the 1st of January, 1780, in full payment for the claim for forage, grain, cattle, and other supplies furnished to the American army by the late Thomas Van Buskirk, deceased, of Bergen county, New Jersey, during the revolutionary war.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. If the House will allow me, I will read two of the certificates upon which this claim is founded:

Bergen, New Jersey, February 19, 1778. Thomas Van Buskirk, Esq., of Paramus, has contributed voluntarily cattle, horses, grain, flour, forage, and cloth, for the public service, to the value of $2,317, for which this is his claim upon Congress, with interest, to be paid in hard money.

ANTHONY WAYNE,
Brigadier General United States Army.

PARAMUS, NEW JERSEY, December.

[Date uncertain, being defaced, 1777 or 1779.]

I certify that Thomas Van Buskirk has supplied the American army with heaves, three horses, forage, flour, and other articles, to the sum of $1,350, for which the Congress of the United States is chargeable in specie currency, and interest payable in like manner.

THOMAS MIFFLIN,
Quartermaster General United States Army.

Mr. LETCHER. I understand that the original certificates are lost, and that these are only copies.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. There are gentlemen in the House who have had the originals. These are only two out of thirteen certificates upon file.

Mr. LETCHER. I wish to inquire what is the difference between this and a continental loan?

Mr. RITCHIE. I desire to know the reason why these certificates were not funded under the act of Congress authorizing the funding of the national debt?

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I should be very glad to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I also desire to inquire whether information was sought from any Executive Department of this Government in relation to this claim, and whether they could throw any light upon it?

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Information was sought from every source, but none could be found except that contained in the papers upon file in the committee-room. The certificates which are said to be lost, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE] had in his hands last session.

Mr. RITCHIE. I have no recollection of it. It may be so, but I do not remember it.

QUESTION OF ORDER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to the fact that upon the call of yeas and nays upon the adjournment, after the committee found itself without a quorum, the Clerk made a mistake of ten votes in counting the names. On that count it was announced that a quorum was present; and the House went back into committee, and then rose and reported the bills back to the House. Upon a recount, it appears that the vote lacked two or three of a quorum; so it appears that when the House went into committee, and then rose and reported the bills to the House, no quorum had answered to their names.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. That cannot make any difference now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Was there not a quorum when action was taken upon the bills in the House?

The SPEAKER. There was a quorum voting on all votes taken since the committee rose. The Chair felt it his duty, however, to call the attention of the House to the fact. But the Chair holds that the bills, having been passed by a quorum in the House, have been properly passed.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the House acquiesces in that it answers every end; but then it seems to me that unless the Chair asks the House to give its unanimous consent to that state of things, it would be setting a bad example which might sometimes work very great injury. The vote by which the bills were brought into the House was not only no vote at all, but in truth the bills are yet in a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama, that there is no official evidence that there was no quorum when the bills were ordered to be reported from the committee; but, in addition to that, even if that fact be true—if the bills have been acted upon in the House, and passed—the Chair thinks that would cure any defect which might exist in bringing them into the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not object to the bills being passed. I do not want to undo what has been done; but the precedent may be important in the future legislation of the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say that I was in the House while the vote was being taken, although not when my name was called.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. And there are several others who are in the same position.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understood the Chair to state upon official information that there was not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. At the time the bills were reported?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. When the list of yeas and nays is corrected, will it not show that there was not a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. It will show that upon that vote there was not a quorum.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That the House went back into committee without a quorum?

The SPEAKER. So far as that is concerned, although it is not true in point of fact, a quorum might have appeared before the House went into committee, and the Chair might have ascertained that fact, although the Chair does not pretend to say that he did so.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That does not satisfy me, when I know myself that the contrary was the fact.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose the better plan would be to let members who came in after their names were called, place their names on the list so as to make up a quorum.

[Loud and general cries of "Agreed!"]

Mr. CRAWFORD. How many are required? I was here and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] was here.

Mr. HALL, of Ohio. And I was here.

Mr. BUFFINTON. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, was here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was here also.

Mr. ENGLISH. I desire to have my name entered.

The SPEAKER. That is six, which is a sufficient number to make a quorum and meet the views of the gentleman from Alabama.

MARYETT VAN BUSKIRK.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Maryett Van Buskirk.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would like now to answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RICHME.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object. I want to vote.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to have one question answered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would like to inquire when this claim was first presented to Congress.

[Cries of "Order!" "Object!" and "Call the roll!"]

Mr. MILLSON (at five minutes to six o'clock, p. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. ATKINS. I should like to have the bill read.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I object.

Mr. LETCHER. I would like to make an inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. LETCHER. I have a right to make an inquiry of the Chair as to a matter of practice in connection with this bill.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to raise a question of order, he has a right to do so.

Mr. LETCHER. It is a question of practice of the House. I wish to inquire whether the Speaker knows of any instance, under the practice of the House, in which interest has been allowed on a claim for over seventy years?

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The inquiry is not in order, and the Chair cannot answer it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I will answer the question, if the House will allow me.

[Loud cries of "Order!" and "Object!"]

Mr. PHILLIPS. I withdraw the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HUGLIES. I would suggest that as the House is not full we had better, by unanimous consent, pass this bill over until Monday informally under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to that. Let us dispose of it now.

The bill was again read.

The question was taken: "Shall the bill pass?" and it was decided in the negative—yeas 17, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Chaffee, Clawson, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Massachusetts, Dawes, Gilman, Ginnier, Hawkins, Horton, Huyler, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Aaron Shaw, Robert Smith, and George Taylor—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Atkins, Avery, Billingham, Bingham, Bishop, Blair, Bowie, Brayton, Bullington, Burlingame, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Coffax, Cokerill, Colfax, Conins, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Crawford, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, English, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Goode, Goodwin, Granger, Gregg, Grov, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kelly, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, Maclay, Matteson, Milson, Morgan, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Murray, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Powell, Purviance, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Ritchie, Roberts, Royce, Ruffin, Sandidge, Seales, Scott, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Shorter, William Smith, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Underwood, Vallandigham, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Watkins, Wilson, Winslow, Woodson, and Augustus R. Wright—11.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. COX stated, during the call of the roll, that he had voted against the bill in committee, and voted against it now, because it allowed interest; but he thought the principal ought to be paid.

Mr. PHILLIPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, (at eighteen minutes past six o'clock, p. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, so as to give us time to look into the bill, and see if any part of the claim is just.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the House to indulge me for one moment. It appears that gentlemen have voted against this bill because it allows interest.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I object to it.

The motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

A. BAUDOUIN AND A. D. ROBERTS.

The SPEAKER stated the question next in order to be on the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Avery, Billingham, Bingham, Brayton, Bullington, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Conins, Cox, Cragin, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gilman, Ginnier, Goode, Goodwin, Grov, Harlan, Hawkins, Horton, Kilgore, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Peyton, William W. Phelps, Potter, Royce, Ruffin, Sandidge, Scott, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Spinner, Stanton, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thompson, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, Woodson, and Augustus R. Wright—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Bowie, Caskie, Clemens, Cobb, Cokerill, Corning, James Craig, Crawford, Davis of Indiana, English, Goode, Gregg, Lawrence W. Hall, Hopkins, Houston, Huyler, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Letcher, Maclay, Matteson, Milson, Pendleton, John S. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Ritchie, Roberts, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, Robert Smith, William Smith, William Stewart, Waldron, Watkins, and Wortendyke—44.

So the bill was passed.

Pending the vote,

Mr. SEWARD said: I was not in the Hall when my name was called. If I had been, I do not know which way I should have voted, because I do not know anything about the bill.

Mr. DAVIDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL JONES'S HEIRS.

The bill (H. R. No. 324) to allow the legal representatives of Samuel Jones five years full pay, was next taken up, the question being on its passage.

Mr. QUITMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 87, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Billingham, Bingham, Bowie, Brayton, Bullington, Burlingame, Case, Caskie, Chaffee, Clawson, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Colfax, Corning, Cox, Cragin, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Fenton, Florence, Foster, Garnett, Gilman, Ginnier, Goode, Goodwin, Grov, Harlan, Hawkins, Hopkins, Horton, Jewett, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kilgore, Lawrence, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, Maclay, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Maynard, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Murray, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Reilly, Roberts, Royce, Scott, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Robert Smith, William Smith, Spinner, William Stewart, Tappan, Thompson, Tompkins, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, Wortendyke, and Augustus R. Wright—87.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Avery, Bishop, John B. Clark, Cobb, Cokerill, Crawford, English, Foley, Gregg, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, George W. Jones, Kelsey, Knapp, Matteson, Milson, Morgan, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Ritchie, Ruffin, Sandidge, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, Stanton, Miles Taylor, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Watkins, and Winslow—38.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GOODE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. CORB. I rise to a question of privilege. I have sat here and helped to pass a hundred and odd bills, and now I wish the House to pass a little Senate bill, which is as meritorious as the best of them. I wish to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill in question was referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman can be entered, but not acted on at this time.

THE BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG, ETC.

The adverse report from the Court of Claims (No. 149) in the case of the brig General Armstrong was next taken up for consideration.

The report was brought from the Committee of the Whole House, with the recommendation that it be committed to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The report was accordingly committed.

House bill No. 249, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with the recommendation that it be committed to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, was taken up and accordingly committed.

BENJAMIN F. HALL.

House bill (No. 244) for the relief of Benjamin F. Hall, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with the recommendation that it be laid on the table, was accordingly laid on the table.

OUTRAGES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CLAY. Some days ago I asked the unanimous consent of the House for leave to introduce a bill. I wish again to ask that unanimous consent. And I wish to say that this whole country, from one end to the other, is ringing with the subject of the outrages committed upon our flag and upon our vessels, while the Senate Chamber itself has been ringing with the same subject; and it does seem to me, at this time, that this House ought to take some action in the matter. I desire to introduce a bill upon the subject for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to restrain and redress outrages upon the flag and citizens of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in cases of flagrant violation of the laws of nations, by outrage upon the flag, soil, or citizens of the United States, or upon their property, under circumstances requiring prompt redress, and when, in the opinion of the President, delay would be incompatible with the honor and dignity of the Republic, the President is hereby authorized to employ such force as he may deem necessary to prevent the perpetration of such outrages, and to obtain just redress and satisfaction for the same when perpetrated; and it shall be his duty to lay the facts of each case, together with the reasons of his action in the premises, before Congress, at the earliest practicable moment, for such further action thereon as Congress may direct.

Mr. GARNETT. Being opposed to converting this Government into a military despotism, I object.

Mr. CLAY. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLAY. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion, and tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, and WRIGHT, of Georgia, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes nineteen—not one fifth the members present. So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to.

And thereupon (at twenty minutes past seven o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next, at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 31, 1858.

Prayer by the Rev. G. W. BASSETT.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 219) for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition;

A bill (No. 229) for the relief of Samuel Goodrich, jr.;

A bill (No. 230) for the relief of Mary Bennett;

A bill (No. 233) for the relief of Sylvanus Burnham;

A bill (No. 238) for the relief of the heirs-at-law of Richard Farren, alias Richard Tarvin, deceased;

A bill (No. 239) for the relief of Zina Williams;

A bill (No. 245) for the relief of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts;

A bill (No. 258) for the relief of Augustus J. Kuhn;

A bill (No. 267) for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keefe;

A bill (No. 269) for the relief of David Bruce;

A bill (No. 277) for the relief of Mary Boyle;

A bill (No. 321) for the relief of John B. Roper; and

A bill (No. 324) to allow the legal representatives of Samuel Jones, of the eleventh Virginia regiment on continental establishment, five years full pay as captain of infantry, in lieu of half pay for life.

A subsequent message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions of the Senate:

An act (No. 102) for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr.;

A resolution (No. 47) to correct an error in a certain act, approved May 11, 1858, and

A resolution (No. 28) for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in regard to the seizure of the American vessel Panchita on the coast of Africa; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. MASON to print the documents, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the pay of the naval officers whose cases were acted on by the late naval courts of inquiry and the President, and who have been advanced to a higher grade and pay than that assigned them by the late "retiring board," though not restored to the active-service list, with a list of such officers, and the positions assigned them by said board, and those they now hold; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion to print, by Mr. IVERSON, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition of citizens of Washington, who are property holders on Pennsylvania avenue, and engaged in business thereon, praying that the bill passed by the House of Representatives for a railroad on the avenue may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING presented a petition of Samuel S. Powell, and others, praying an examination of Samuel Nowlan's plan for bridging the East river at New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of citizens of Shiawassee county, Michigan, praying an extension of mail route No. 13157, from Chesaning, in Saginaw county, to St. Charles, in the same county, so that said mail route will extend from Corunna, in Shiawassee county, to St. Charles, in Saginaw county, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BRODERICK presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of an appropriation for the payment of bonds issued by that State for the payment of expenses incurred in the suppression of the Indian hostilities within her bounds; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of the appointment of a commissioner on the part of the United States, to act in conjunction with a commissioner on the part of California, in ascertaining and determining the boundary line between that State and the Territory of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of California, in favor of the appointment of American consuls at the ports of Guaymas, Mazatlan, Manzanillo, and La Paz, in Mexico; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the joint resolution (S. No. 46) authorizing the payment of certain moneys to certain Cherokee Indians, remaining east of the Rocky Mountains; and the bill (S. No. 201) to execute the treaties of 1817 and 1819, with the Cherokees, by making provision for the reservations under the same, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He, also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of New York, praying the adoption of measures for the preservation and elevation of the American Indians, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. C. C. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee, and J. N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported them without amendment, with a recommendation that they do pass:

A bill (H. R. No. 56) making an appropriation for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, in Oregon Territory.

A bill (H. R. No. 332) for the relief of Richard B. Alexander.

A bill (H. R. No. 334) for the relief of Simeon Stedman; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bills (S. No. 110) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Turnbull, and the bill (S. No. 229) for the relief of Jane Turnbull, reported them without amendment, and that they ought not to pass.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Jones, and others, of Clermont county, Ohio, praying to be allowed bounty land for services in the war of 1812, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lemuel Worster, who served in the war of 1812, praying to be allowed bounty land, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary S. Taylor, widow of Alexander S. Taylor, a volunteer in the last war with Great Britain, praying to be allowed bounty land, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Eliphalet Lyman, praying to be allowed bounty land for his services as surgeon to a militia company in the war of 1812, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of William Fleming, in behalf of himself and others of the marine artillery who served in the war of 1812, praying to be allowed bounty land, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Henrietta Carroll, widow of William Carroll, praying to be allowed bounty land for the services of her husband during the last war with Great Britain, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 511) for the relief of Nehemiah S. Draper and William Holden, heirs-at-law of Mary Draper, deceased, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 547) for the relief of Benjamin Wakefield; and

A bill (H. R. 453) for the relief of Robert W. Cushman, formerly an acting purser in the United States Navy.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Jenkins, praying to be allowed a pension, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Plummer, guardian of the minor children of the late Captain Samuel Plummer, of the United States Army, praying the continuation of the pension heretofore granted to said children, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Frank Madison, a colored man, who served as a waiter to Major Lee, in the Seminole war in Florida, praying to be allowed bounty land, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 169) making an appropriation for the payment of clerks employed in the offices of the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon;

A bill (H. R. No. 490) for the relief of Isaac Body and Samuel Fleming;

A bill (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of Job Stafford, of the State of New York; and

A bill (H. R. No. 504) for the relief of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving child and heir of Colonel Archibald Loughry, deceased.

POST ROUTES IN IOWA.

Mr. JONES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Sioux City, Iowa, via the mouth of the Vermilion river, at the present established ferries on those rivers, to Fort Randall, Nebraska Territory; also from Neolara, Nebraska Territory, to Fort Randall, Nebraska Territory, (four miles.)

PRIMING APPARATUS.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting an amendment, providing an appropriation to the Army bill, to authorize the Secretary of War to adopt and apply to the present or future arms of the United States, the priming apparatus invented by Jesse S. Butterfield, of Philadelphia.

SECRETARY OF NAVAL SCHOOL.

Mr. KENNEDY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of increasing the compensation of the secretary of the Naval School at Annapolis, in consideration of extra duties devolving upon that office.

CIVIL WAR IN PERU.

Mr. KENNEDY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate, before the adjournment of Congress, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether the Government of the United States has, in its correspondence with his Excellency the Peruvian Minister, recognized that a state of civil war existed in Peru during the late struggle between Vivanco and Castello, and whether any, and what, measures have been taken to protect American interests in cargoes of guano purchased from Vivanco, or his officers or agents, during his occupation of any of the guano islands within the territory of Peru.

And be it further resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate, before the close of the present session, the correspondence which may have taken place between this Government and the Government or the Minister of Peru to the United States on this subject.

WAR STEAMERS.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into, and report upon, the expediency of providing for the construction of steam-engines suitable for the propulsion of vessels of war, in order that the Government may at all times have in depot a supply of such engines adequate to its probable wants, whenever the occurrence of war shall render necessary a rapid and large increase of the Navy.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A joint resolution for the relief of John Grayson.

RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That the petition of citizens of Michigan, relative to a division of the Indian agency in that State, be re-committed to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. STUART. I desire to withdraw the papers in the case of Thomas Henderson. There has been a report upon his case; but, in order to perfect some additional testimony, it is necessary for him to have the papers. I therefore move that he have leave to withdraw them from the files of the Senate.

Mr. COLLAMER. I object to it. I know nothing about this particular case, but I think it is a dangerous thing for us now to institute the practice of letting papers be taken away after an unfavorable report has been made. It is very important, in afterwards considering the case, to have the papers as they actually were when first presented. If he be allowed to take the papers away, we cannot verify their true character at the time he presents them again, when they may assume an entirely different aspect. It will do no harm to let the papers remain.

Mr. STUART. I only wish to suggest to the Senator, as I did to the Senate, that the applicant informs me that he cannot make the additional proof, which is simply the fact that a certain person, alleged to be the heir, is really the heir-at-law of an individual, without having these papers.

Mr. COLLAMER. I should want something to show that, because palpably on the face of it, unless from some extraordinary cause, that could hardly be necessary.

Mr. STUART. I will say this: that I will ask the leave of the Senate to withdraw these papers, leaving on file copies of them, so that there shall be no such difficulty.

The order to withdraw the papers was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I ask leave to withdraw the papers in the case of John A. Pitts and Hiram Pitts. It is an application for an extension of a patent which has been reported against; but the parties desire to use the papers as evidence in a trial now pending in court, to be tried about the 20th of June, at a place in New York. There is an application through their attorney. I move that they have leave to withdraw their petition and papers. The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZPATRICK, it was Ordered, That Edward D. Tippet have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

RECESS—FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to offer a resolution for a recess, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That on and after to-morrow the Senate will take a recess from four o'clock until six o'clock, p. m., until otherwise ordered.

Mr. WADE. I move to amend the resolution by adding:

Resolved, That no member of the Senate, during the remainder of the session, shall speak more than five minutes on any question, except on leave of the Senate, to be granted or refused without debate.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe that is not in order. It proposes a change of the rules, and requires a day's notice.

Mr. WADE. If it is objected to, it will lie over, of course.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator had better give notice that he will offer it to-morrow morning.

Mr. WADE. I give notice that I shall offer it as an independent proposition, and call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Do I understand the resolution of the Senator from Virginia to be before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I merely wish to suggest, that if the public business is such as to require us to take a recess from four to six o'clock, and is so urgent that discussion should be narrowed down to five minutes, would it not be better to postpone the adjournment, and transact the public business in proper manner. I can work as hard, and can endure as much, as most men; I have done it, and am willing to do it again; but to come here at eleven o'clock, sit until four, then take a recess and sit here in the night, disqualifies men from properly attending to business. It is by such a process and system that the worst legislation is always transacted, to the injury of the country. At night sessions we are always in a hurly-burly, and legislation is done when members are all tired.

When members' pay was regulated by the number of days they sat, the country could then say they had some inducement for a long session. Their pay is now fixed by law; they get a certain sum; and if we leave here, take our pay, and neglect the public business, it seems to me the argument will be on the other side of the question; that it is the pay the members come here for, and not to transact the public business. I voted for fixing next Monday as the day of adjournment; but if the public business is such as to require it, I will vote to prolong the day of adjournment, and let the public business be dispatched in a proper manner.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the mover of the resolution will withdraw it, and let me call up my resolution for the prolongation of the session, and take the sense of the Senate on that.

Mr. HUNTER. I would rather have the vote on my resolution. Let us take the sense of the Senate on that. The Senator from New York can try the sense of the Senate on his proposition hereafter.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I shall vote against this resolution, in order to take up mine.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from New York will bring up his resolution, and let us have a test vote on that.

Mr. SEWARD. I will do so the first moment I get the opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the resolution of the Senator from Virginia. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will make but a single remark on that subject. I have been an observer of the course of legislation for several sessions, and I have seen this recess system, I think, effectually tried. It seems to me that the attention of the members is rarely called to a subject under debate after dinner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will pause for a moment. The Chair regrets that he feels obliged to call Senators to order. There is great confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will raise my voice, Mr. President, and try if I can drown the surrounding noise; but I think it doubtful.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators to come to order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, I have observed that gentlemen are about the lounges and in the reception room, at evenings, after a recess has been taken and the Senate has reassembled, so that there are but a few persons attending to business. Indeed, I have often seen it when there were but three in the Hall, the President, the one that was engaged on the floor, and one other in reserve to occupy the residue of the time. I think that at evening sessions matters are hurried through without consideration, and without any degree of vigilance or care. For that reason I am not in favor of voting for a recess. I am willing to meet at any hour in the morning; I am willing to vote for the prolongation of the session; I am willing to do anything that will dispatch, in a becoming manner, the public business of the country; but I am not in favor of a recess, having the experience I have had of the manner in which business is transacted under the recess system. For that reason I cannot vote for a recess; but I think the adjournments ought to be regular; our meetings ought to be regular; our adjournments at four or four and a half o'clock, and you may say meet at nine o'clock in the morning. I am willing to do that.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer the resolution which I introduced a day or two ago to prolong the session, as a substitute for the resolution now before the Senate offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has doubts whether it is in order. The resolution of the Senator from Virginia is not a joint resolution; but that of the Senator from New York is a joint resolution.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest to the Senator from New York, whether he had not better take the sense of the Senate on his proposition separately.

Mr. SEWARD. Very well.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the resolution of the Senator from Virginia, before the words "until otherwise ordered," by inserting the words "and will not continue such sessions beyond ten o'clock, p. m."

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator will not press that amendment. He had better leave that matter to the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will not be adopted; but that the proposition made by the Senator from Virginia will be adopted and adhered to. I voted against fixing this early day of adjournment. I did not believe it right then, and I do not believe it right now; but I find Senators, who were fierce then to fix the day, now say that we are paid by the year, and ought to sit here. They ought to have thought of that before they fixed the day of adjournment. I think we may possibly get through this week, by meeting evenings, meeting early, working hard, and making short speeches. I am in favor of adopting the proposition made by the Senator from Virginia, as the only proper and practical one; and if, towards the close of the week, we find that we cannot get through, let us then adopt the proposition made by the Senator from New York.

Mr. GWIN. I hope this resolution will be voted down, and that we shall extend the time of the session. It is perfect folly to think that we can get through legislation, if we have to commence now holding evening sessions, with any degree of accuracy. I hope this resolution will be voted down, and that then we shall have a vote on the resolution of the Senator from New York.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am in favor of the resolution offered by the Senator from Virginia, because I believe it will be very much better for us to go away at four and return at six o'clock, and work two or three hours in the evening, than it will be to keep on as we have been doing. It will be accompanied with a less degree of exhaustion, and more benefit to ourselves and the country. I am opposed to taking a vote on extending the session until we find that it is absolutely necessary. If it should become absolutely necessary, we can do it at a subsequent period. I am perfectly certain, in my own mind, that, if we endeavor to do it, and spend as little time as may be absolutely necessary in talking, we can get through with all the public business before the day fixed for adjournment; but, if it be found that the interests of our constituents require that we should sit a few days longer to dispose of private business, I would not object to that; for I think the Private Calendar has been too much neglected. But, in regard to the public business, I have no doubt that we can finish it if we endeavor to do so. I hope, at any rate, we shall make the experiment. I have no fears that, at evening sessions, we shall not behave here decently. We are an older set of men than the members of the House, and I have not heard complaints of their behaving very improperly, although they have had evening sessions for some time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am in favor of staying here just as long as is necessary to do the business in reasonable hours, but I do not believe at all in punishing ourselves by sitting through the night and endangering our health in order to close this session at a particular day. I think if we meet daily at eleven o'clock, and continue in session for five hours, and then meet again at seven and continue until ten, making eight hours, it is as many hours as we ought to be required to sit; and, in fact, I am opposed to evening sessions at all, and shall vote against this resolution. I think five or six hours is long enough for the daily sessions to continue. Business is pressing on us, and we want time to consider it, and do it properly. I cannot conceive why there should be this immense pressure to close the session on a particular day, and force us to night sessions, which are always attended with evil.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. I want to ask him if he did not vote to fix this day? I have his name on the yeas and nays voting to fix this particular day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it very probable that I did, but I will vote to unfix it when it becomes necessary. Because I voted a month ago to fix a day, and I find that we shall not get through the business by that day, and I to be told that I cannot extend the time? It matters not whether I voted to fix the day or not, I was for an early adjournment then, I am for an early adjournment now—as early as is consistent with the business before Congress, and with allowing reasonable time for its dispatch; but I am not for adjourning to-day week, if, in order to accomplish it, I have got to sit here every night between this and next Monday. I think night sessions are very unprofitable. Men get worn out, and improper legislation takes place. Men cannot sit here through twenty-four hours and keep a watch on every bill which comes up. The extravagant, improper appropriations are all made at such times. It has now become the practice that the general legislation of the country is put on to appropriation bills; and why? Because it is supposed, under the pressure of an appropriation bill, and the short time allowed for its consideration, it can be got through the Senate when it could not be got through standing on its own merits. I hope that the resolution will not be adopted at all; but if it is to be adopted, I think we should modify it so that we shall not continue the sessions later than ten o'clock at night.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I hope very much that the resolution offered by the Senator from Virginia will be adopted. I find in the course of the discussion here but three points in the matter. To one of them, those who have discussed the question have not given that attention to which it is entitled. It is that the resolution for adjournment has been passed by both Houses, and the Senate cannot repeal it. This is the attitude in which the Senate stands unquestionably. We may repeal the joint resolution as far as our action is concerned, but the other House may refuse to agree to it. In this condition, when by the almost unanimous action of the Senate we have concurred with the House in fixing a day of adjournment, and that day the 7th of June, the Senator from Virginia comes before us, and asks us to give the means of consummating the public business, other gentlemen who do not want to adjourn, who did not want to adjourn at the time the resolution was adopted, and who do not want to adjourn now, for one reason or for another, it is immaterial to me what, propose to extend the time. I venture to say that every gentleman who wishes to extend the time will vote against the adoption of this resolution which will promote the transaction of the public business.

The majority here did fix a day for adjournment, and the majority are called upon to carry out that resolution by transacting the public business, which it is apparent is not to be transacted in time to meet the day of adjournment, unless this resolution be agreed to. Why shall we not grant it? I see no reason. Even if you adopt a resolution which repeals the present day fixed for adjournment, the proposition ought to be granted as proposed now by the Senator from Virginia, because you do not know that the House will concur in repealing the joint resolution for adjournment. To say that we will not provide for continued and longer sittings to attend to the public business, is to declare that we intend the public business shall not be transacted, and we know if the business should not be transacted, Congress, even if it should adjourn on the 7th will be called back again, and in that way Congress would be forced, with or without their will, by the refusal to transact business, to repeal the joint resolution as it stands. That is our situation. Suppose the sense of the Senate be taken on repealing the joint resolution for adjournment and we agree to do it, we must send our action to the House and it will require their concurrence; still it is but just to the public business and to the past action of the Senate, that we should adopt the proposition made by the Senator from Virginia for the immediate and as rapid as possible transaction of the public business.

Now, as for the proposition of the Senator from Illinois, which is the third one before us, it is to declare that at ten o'clock at night we shall have an adjournment. I suppose that empowers and requires the Chair, at ten o'clock, to declare that the Senate stands adjourned, without a vote. Every one, who is a close observer of the business of the Senate, knows that whenever there is a bill before the Senate to which there is any earnest opposition, it is debated; and if such a proposition were adopted, it would be very easy to continue a discussion from the hour of nine to the hour of ten, and thus defeat it. It is idle to sit here if two or three men can talk until the hour of ten o'clock and compel an adjournment, thus wasting the very time we have provided for business. I do not think that proposition ought to be adopted under any circumstances; but I really cannot think that we ought to reject the resolution of the Senator from Virginia, which furnishes us time to prosecute the public business, so as to get it through, if it is possible, by the 7th of June.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California will pause a moment. The Chair will state to the Senator from New York that, upon examining these two resolutions further, he believes the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York would be in order if it be desired hereafter to offer it.

Mr. GWIN. I hope he will offer it.

Mr. SEWARD. I will then, with the consent of the honorable Senator from California, offer my resolution as a substitute for that of the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The immediate question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SEWARD. But, if the Senator from California will allow me, I will state very briefly that the resolution to rescind the former one fixing the day of adjournment, if it is to be passed by both Houses, ought to go to the House of Representatives as early as to-day. If it is postponed until Thursday or Friday it will be too late. I wish to state further, that I think we are only in the beginning of a great question about curtailing the legislative sessions of this country. The policy of the States for several years past has been to abridge the sessions of their Legislatures. In some States they will not allow the Legislature to sit over one hundred days; in some States, sixty days. In other States they will not allow a Legislature even to meet more than once in two years. And finally this policy which has thus been adopted in so many of the States has reached us here, and we are engaged in curtailing the sessions of the National Legislature, the only fruit of which must be the increase of the power of the executive department, transferred from our own supervision to the uncontrolled supervision of the executive administration. I wish to meet that question at the threshold. I shall hereafter vote to retain Congress in its place to perform its duties and render the necessary support to the Executive, and supervise executive action, instead of voting to release them from attendance; and I am glad I can do it under circumstances which will relieve me and the Congress of the United States from any suspicion of pecuniary interest in insisting upon such a measure.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand that the resolution of the Senator from New York is not before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have a vote on the question pending.

Mr. GWIN. Then I will speak to the resolution before the Senate. Its passage must, necessarily, preclude a portion of the members of the body from participating in its proceedings. Every member of the Senate, whose health is such that he cannot attend the evening sessions, will not attend those sessions. There are some members here whose health will not permit them to attend night sessions. The Senator from Mississippi, (Mr. Davis) for instance, who has been a long time out of his seat, and has just been able within the last few days to resume it, and who is chairman of one of the most important committees of the body. It will be impossible, I take it for granted, for him to do so without endangering his health. Then there is the Senator from Texas, (Mr. Henderson,) who is not even now able to be in his seat, and in bad weather cannot attend the Senate. There are other Senators in the same condition. It seems to me that the proper course for us to adopt, would be to meet at ten or eleven o'clock, and sit until five or six or seven o'clock, if need be, in the evening, and then adjourn; but we ought to pass the resolution of the Senator from New York, first, and see whether the House of Representatives will extend the session.

If the resolutions of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] should pass, as they will, it seems to me that we assume a belligerent attitude towards the greatest naval power of the world, and adjourn without providing any means for the President to enforce the principles avowed in these resolutions, and thus maintain the honor and dignity of the country. If, as some suppose, and as I suppose, this difficulty is not to be amicably settled, I am astonished at the pertinacity with which this effort to adjourn Congress on the 7th of June is pressed by members of this body and the other House of Congress. For a quarter of a century, Congress has never adjourned at a long session within that period of time; and we have got more important questions that it is our duty to act upon at this very time than ever have been before the Congress of the United States within a week of its adjournment. I hope, therefore, that the resolution of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] will be voted down in the first place, and that the resolution of the Senator from New York, [Mr. Seward,] postponing the adjournment, will be adopted. It is a farce to pass the resolutions of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] without giving the President the means to enforce them. If England insists on the right of visitation, there will be war, and the sooner we prepare for the contest the better.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from New York will not push his proposition as an amendment to my resolution. I myself believe that we shall have to extend the session; and while I would vote against such a proposition as an amendment to the resolution I have offered for a recess, I might be willing to vote for some scheme of extending the session. I do not think it will require to be extended so long as the Senator from New York proposes. I believe that to-day fortnight we shall probably get through with everything that requires our attention; and therefore I should not be unwilling to vote against every scheme for extending the session, but I must vote against it as an amendment to this resolution. I think we ought to take a recess, and make an honest effort, if we can, to carry out this joint resolution. I am willing to do so; and then, if we find that we cannot carry out the joint resolution, and cannot get through with the business in a week, let us extend the time another week. That seems to me to be proper. I hope the Senator will let us take the sense of the Senate on this, and offer his resolution afterwards.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish simply, by way of explaining my own vote, to express my concurrence with the views of the Senator from Virginia. I am perfectly willing, if the public business requires it, to stay here longer than the time fixed; but I wish, in the first place, to make an honest, sincere effort to get through by the time fixed. I believe that we can accomplish very much if we get together in the evenings at six o'clock, instead of sitting here to the late hour we do in the afternoon. We shall not be so exhausted, and we can accomplish more. At any rate, we can show a desire to the other House to get through by the time fixed—an honest desire to meet their wishes which have been expressed on the subject—and then, if the public business requires it, I would stay here longer; but I do not anticipate the difficulties spoken of by the Senator from New York. If we send his resolution down to the other House at any time, it will go there with much more force after we have ascertained to a reasonable certainty that the business cannot be concluded, than if we send it down in advance. Therefore, while I shall vote against this as an amendment, I wish to say that, if at the proper time I find the business requires it, I am perfectly willing to extend the session to such time as will enable us to finish the business; but until that time comes, until the necessity is manifest, I hope we shall go on and endeavor to do what we can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, to add to the resolution the words "and will not continue such session beyond ten o'clock, p. m."

The amendment was rejected; and the question recurred on the original resolution.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer my resolution as an amendment, to strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert:

The House of Representatives concurring, that the resolution directing the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on the first Monday of June next, at 12 o'clock, m., be, and the same is hereby, rescinded, and that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on Monday, the 21st of June next, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. BIGLER. Is that amendment in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. BIGLER. It destroys the original proposition entirely, for it is of a different character. The original resolution proposes to regulate the order of business in the Senate; the amendment has reference to the adjournment of Congress; they are entirely different propositions; the one is not necessarily affected by the other. I suggest to the honorable Senator from New York whether his amendment can be entertained. It does not relate to the transaction of business here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided the amendment to be in order.

Mr. BIGLER. I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair; but I think it is a settled principle that a proposition which destroys entirely the sense of an original motion, ought not to be entertained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator that it is expressly laid down that it may be done. That is a mode often adopted to make the friends of the original proposition desert it. An amendment may be totally inconsistent; but it is not for the Chair to reject it on the ground of inconsistency.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to strike out "21st," and insert "14th." I shall then vote against the proposition.

Mr. WILSON. I voted against the foolish project to limit this session. I thought it wrong then; but I find those gentlemen who were so earnest to do it then, very anxious now to retrieve their blunder. The Senator from Virginia has made a fair proposition that we make an honest effort to redeem the vote we gave, and now comes in this proposition here, with an evident attempt to embarrass some of us who were then right, and who want to carry out what they forced upon us. I hope the Senator from Virginia, if this be proposed, will withdraw his motion, and let us take a vote on this, and I will vote to extend the session, and then make his motion, and I will vote with him. I do not want to be complicated by this amendment, and I have asked, personally, that it should not be pressed upon me.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from New York, because we do not know yet whether the session should be extended.

Mr. COLLAMER. There is a motion made to insert the "14th" for the "21st."

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that. I shall vote both against the amendment of the Senator from Maine and the amendment of the Senator from New York on this ground: it requires the joint action of the House, and in the interim it is perfectly evident that we must pass the resolution of the Senator from Virginia. The House may or may not act upon our resolution, if we should pass it to-day; and in the mean time, if we should go on without a recess, the House may determine that they will not extend the session. I think it much more appropriate to pass the resolution of the Senator from Virginia, and then, as a distinct resolution, if it is considered necessary that the session should be extended, pass one for the 14th or the 21st June, and send it to the House, and let them determine whether they will accede to it or not; but we cut ourselves off from the benefit of a recess and probably of finishing our business, by passing the resolution of the Senator from New York, as a substitute, in this form, because we cannot know what the action of the House on it will be, probably for two or three days.

Mr. TOOMBS. It was on my motion that the Senate took up the resolution of the House of Representatives to adjourn on the 7th of June, which seems now to be assailed by the Senator from Massachusetts on the ground that somebody committed a blunder. I thought it was right on that day, and I do to-day, and there is no contingency except public war that will make me vote to rescind it. I have sat here many years, in the two Houses of Congress, as long as ten months at a time, and I never knew what you call the business of the country to be more advanced a week before adjournment than it is now. In the thirteen years I have sat in Congress I never knew a time when the public business was so far advanced within seven days of the end of the session, as it is to-day. The House of Representatives have sent you all the public bills, and all the private bills that ought to pass. They have been considered by our committees, and are before us. It is true that if we go on and argue the question of repairing a bridge two days, as we did on Saturday, there are not days enough made by God Almighty to get through. [Laughter.] We could never get through in a thousand years; eternity would be too short to get through. [Laughter.] But we can get through with all the business we need to do. We can give all the time the public business requires; and if we prolong the session for three months we shall be no nearer the end of public business two weeks from now, the 14th of June, or the 21st of June, than we are to-day. The time will be spent as six months have been spent heretofore—in talking generally to people out of doors, and not to the business before us. Give a month, and the public business will be abandoned, and we shall begin to talk generally on the state of the Republic, watching, as the Senator from New York said, the Executive. That seems to have been the chief business, instead of legislating—watching and abusing the Executive. In my judgment the time is too long; I wish it was to-morrow.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JUNE 1, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 159.

Mr. STUART. I desire to appeal to the Senator from New York to withdraw his proposition for the present. If it be necessary to extend the session at all, the necessity will be obvious two or three days hence. I do not think it advisable to push it now, and I ask him to withdraw it, and let us vote upon the question submitted by the Senator from Virginia, and we shall then in a day or two be able to determine his proposition. I hope he will withdraw it, and that we shall then get a vote on the question.

Mr. SEWARD. At the request of the Senator from Michigan, I will withdraw my proposition, stating my regret and my surprise that my honorable friend from Massachusetts should have thought that I was willing, under any circumstances, to embarrass him or anybody else. I voted, when it seemed to be the sense of both Houses of Congress, to fix the day for adjournment, under the expectation that it would have the effect to expedite the public business, and with the belief that if the business was not sufficiently matured when the time fixed for adjournment came, it would be changed. I have nothing to regret about the vote I gave then. I believe the vote fixing the day has been beneficial thus far; I believe that to extend the time now will be a wise policy, as it was to fix it at that time; but I say circumstances have occurred which render it necessary. Here is this great question of the disturbance in the Gulf of Mexico; here is a proposition giving power to the Executive; and a great many other propositions. At the suggestion of the honorable Senator I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I move to lay the resolution of the Senator from Virginia on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The resolution was adopted.

MEXICAN PROTECTORATE.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to take up the resolution I introduced some time since, providing for raising a select committee to consider the propriety of a protectorate over Mexico, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, and San Salvador. I make this motion for the purpose of obtaining a vote upon it. The session is drawing to a close, and I desire, if it is to be referred, that there may be an opportunity at the next session, if not at this, to make a report on the subject. I hope the Senate will take it up. It is not with a view to make a speech that I make the motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

BRITISH AGGRESSIONS.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate will proceed on Friday next, at twelve o'clock, m., to the consideration of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations touching the alleged aggressions of British armed vessels on the commerce of the United States in the Gulf of Mexico and adjacent seas, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. IVERSON and others. I object.

Mr. MASON. Objection having been made to the consideration of that resolution to set aside a particular day for the disposition of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask that that report be now taken up. I take it for granted the Senate will see the propriety of some final disposition of the subject.

Mr. GREEN. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Virginia to permit a formal resolution to be taken up, and passed, which will not take up a minute. It is the resolution I offered on Friday in reference to custom-houses. The Senator from Maine has a little amendment to offer to it, and it can then be passed.

Mr. MASON. I do not feel at liberty to yield the floor. In my judgment this question is a matter of too much moment to permit me to yield it. I am sorry that I cannot do so.

Mr. IVERSON. I hope the motion of the Senator from Virginia will not prevail. I do not see any necessity for hurrying the consideration of these resolutions. There is a great deal of important business that ought to be acted upon by this branch of Congress, in order that it may go to the House of Representatives before Friday, because, as we all know, by joint rule no original bill can be sent to the House of Representatives after Thursday next. We can act on bills which have come from the House, on Friday and Saturday, but we cannot send any bill to the House of Representatives on these days. I think that all our time that is not taken up in the consideration of appropriation bills ought to be expended upon bills of this body, so that we may pass them, and send them to the House of Representatives that they may act upon them on Friday and Saturday next. These resolutions in relation to our difficulties with England can be taken up on Friday or Saturday next, when we cannot act on our bills, if we have nothing from the House of Representatives to act upon, or on Monday; or even, if it be necessary, the Senate can sit over, after the day of adjournment, upon this business. It is unnecessary that it should adjourn on Monday; it may prolong its session when the House of Representatives has gone, and then we can act on this business having reference to executive considerations. I hope, therefore, that the resolutions will not be taken up now.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays on the motion; and they were ordered.

Mr. PUGH. I wish to say that, whilst I am in favor of the general views indicated by the Committee on Foreign Relations, I see no necessity for separate Senate resolutions. If these were joint resolutions, requiring the assent of the other House as a matter of legislation, I would vote to take them up; but as it is, I see no benefit that is to result from them. I shall vote against the motion.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to say, in reference to the question of taking up, that I am very willing to vote with my colleague to fix Friday for the consideration of his resolution; but I shall vote against taking them up now, because I think we ought to get up the appropriation bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 33, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Clay, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Hale, Hammond, Houston, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Sibley, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wilson, and Wright—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Bigler, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Green, Hamlin, Italian, Hunter, Iverson, Jones, Kennedy, Pearce, Pugh, Simmons, Thompson of Kentucky, Trumbull, and Wade—21.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolutions:

Resolved, (as the judgment of the Senate.) That American vessels on the high seas, in time of peace, bearing the American flag, remain under the jurisdiction of the country to which they belong; and therefore any visitation, molestation, or detention of such vessels by force, or by the exhibition of force, on the part of a foreign Power, is in derogation of the sovereignty of the United States.

Resolved, That the recent and repeated violations of this immunity, committed by vessels of war belonging to the navy of Great Britain in the Gulf of Mexico and the adjacent seas, by firing into, interrupting, and forcibly detaining them on their voyage, requires, in the judgment of the Senate, such unequivocal and final disposition of the subject, by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States, touching the rights involved, as shall preclude hereafter the occurrence of like aggressions.

Resolved, That the Senate fully approves the action of the Executive in sending a naval force into the infested seas with orders "to protect all vessels of the United States on the high seas from search or detention by the vessels of war of any other nation." And it is the opinion of the Senate, that, if it became necessary, such additional legislation should be supplied in aid of the Executive power as will make such protection effectual.

Mr. MASON. There remains now but half an hour before one o'clock, when the special order will come up, of course. The Senate on Saturday, by its vote, refused to postpone the special order in order to dispose of this subject. I presume, therefore, I take it for granted, such will be the will of the Senate to-day, that they will not postpone the special order for the purpose of disposing of this subject. I therefore move that the resolutions be postponed until Friday next, and made the special order for that day, to the exclusion of all other business, at one o'clock.

Mr. HALE. I want to say that Friday has been before assigned by the Senate for private bills; and there are a very great number of private bills that have passed the House of Representatives that are waiting the action of the Senate; and next Friday, perhaps, is the only day left for them. I hope, in justice to those claimants, that day will not be taken from them.

Mr. MASON. I have no desire in the world to take Friday from private bills; but we must remember that but Friday and Saturday remain for the business of the Senate under the present order of the two Houses. I should have no objection to fixing Saturday; but we know Saturday will necessarily be occupied in disposing of the business of the session.

Several Senators. Take the vote now.

Mr. MASON. I certainly would take the vote now if there would be no debate.

Mr. HALE. I do not think there will be any debate.

Mr. MASON. I withdraw the proposition, to see if the vote can be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. Hale.]

Mr. TOOMBS. I should dislike very much if these resolutions were to pass in their present form, as I do not at all concur in the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I should like to have a substitute adopted by which something could be done. As to these resolutions expressing the opinion of the Senate, I would not give them any time at all, if that is all we are going to do. If we are going to do more, I think Friday will be too late. I think we ought to go on and pass a joint resolution, instructing the President to seize those ships and bring them in until we hear from England. As to merely saying that we must palaver about it with England again, I would not vote for such resolutions.

Mr. MASON. The honorable Senator from Georgia says the resolutions of the committee are not worth the paper on which they are written—being the mere expression of the opinion of the Senate. I will say nothing in reply to that, except that they were the judgment of six members of this House, constituting six of the seven members of the committee to whom the subject was confided. I do not mean to go into a debate; but I would ask permission to say, that the action of the committee was framed upon this condition of things: they found that the question was under the present charge of the Executive; they were satisfied with the disposition the Executive so far had made of it; they were reluctant to do anything which might unnecessarily and improvidently involve the country in a war which might be averted; and, therefore, their recommendation was only prospective. I consider that the judgment of the Senate, should it be pronounced upon these resolutions, will have very great weight in aid of the Executive arm, in the correspondence now pending between the two countries. The Senator from Georgia may think otherwise. He may be right, but the alternative proposed by the amendment is either to give additional force, by way of language, to the resolutions, which I think will amount to but very little, or to change their character, and substitute an act of war for the resolutions; which are recommendatory and prospective. I hope the amendments will not prevail.

Mr. TOOMBS. My objection, as I stated very fully, to the resolutions of the committee was, that they proposed nothing but the expression of the opinion of the Senate. I believe that, as far as opinion has been expressed, it is unanimous, not only here, but in the country; but it leads to nothing. There is no power in the Executive to do what, in my judgment, ought to be done. He cannot act without the action of the two Houses; he has no authority to go down there to do anything more than prevent further aggression; he can do nothing for the past. I desire to authorize him to do something for the past. As for our committing an act of war, I hold that an act of war has been committed, in the face of our declaration from the last war with Great Britain to this hour, in the face of the uniform policy of the country at all times; and we are to talk to England again about this thing; to go to her, and inquire whether she authorized the commanders of the Buzzard and Styx to commit these outrages. If that is the opinion of the Senate, the Senator is right; but it is not worth while to make a special order of those resolutions; I am utterly opposed to that. It amounts to nothing except the expression of the opinion of the Senate, when I believe there is but one opinion throughout the whole country. I am opposed to the resolution which says it is time for England and America to settle this question. It is settled; the argument is exhausted; and we have nothing to do but to stand by our arms.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the pending amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. HALE; which is, to strike out all after the words "voyage," in the fourth line of the second resolution, and insert:

Are belligerent in their character, and should be resisted at all hazards, by all the power of the country.

Mr. WILSON proposed to amend the amendment, by adding:

And the President is hereby authorized and empowered to employ the naval force of the United States, and to send such force to the scene of the recent outrages, with instructions to capture the ships which have committed or which may commit these belligerent acts.

Mr. HAMMOND. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I differ with the honorable Senator from Georgia. I think there is much substance in these resolutions; I think the resolutions of the Committee on Foreign Relations have taken high, strong, clear, and true ground; and that if it is maintained earnestly and faithfully by this Government and by the country, they will accomplish all our purposes. It is not a small thing to resolve that we are determined that England shall abandon the right of search. I think it will probably bring war. I hardly believe that England will abandon the right of search without a war.

I am not for making a declaration of war by indirection. If it is the intention of the Senate, if it is the will of this country, whether we are prepared or not, to go into a war, let us make a formal declaration of war. It is a momentous matter. Let it be done with all proper form. If we intend to abandon the ancient usages, if we omit the "Feciales" of the Romans, and send no messengers for explanation; let us at least cast the bloody spear in due and solemn form. I am not willing to be swept by the very first wave of public excitement into so great a war as this—still less am I willing to be smuggled into it by an amendment to an amendment. If we intend war let us declare war. I do not say that I am opposed to it. We have just and ample cause of war. We have received the most flagrant insults; and I repeat that if this country is prepared to go into it and will make a solemn declaration of war, I shall not hang back, nor will the people whom I represent. But a war with England will be the most momentous event of the last three centuries, if not of any century since the world began. I am not blind to the disasters and calamities the earlier periods of it will probably inflict on us; yet I believe that if England provokes us to it, she will be rushing on her fate. It is perhaps inevitable, sooner or later, and whenever she sets her time for it, that must be our time. But, sir, let us adhere to these resolutions; let us give her a chance to postpone an event, which, whenever it comes, will change the whole face of human affairs.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It seems to me, sir, that it becomes us, upon such an occasion as this, to proceed with firm, determined, but cautious step. If we are to go to war, let it be for injuries done to our country. Let us not go to war for words which are impatiently and passionately used by us. I want to do nothing precipitately, but all things firmly, patriotically, and bravely. Great Britain has done us a wrong—I think we are all agreed about that; a wrong for which we are bound in interest and in honor to require some reparation and proper and ample reparation. But, sir, it becomes our dignity to proceed to obtain that redress in a proper and dignified manner. How is that to be done? We want no war of words; we want to say nothing but that which is just necessary to convince Great Britain that we feel with proper national sensibility the outrage, as we call it, which has been committed upon us. We want, then, in an appropriate, becoming, and dignified manner, to ask her for reparation; and when we have received her answer we shall know what to do; but surely it becomes us not to go to war upon the instant; not to go to extremities until we have demanded of her reparation. If one gentleman offends another he asks first for reparation, voluntary reparation, and that being refused, he takes his own hostile course if he thinks proper; and for infinitely stronger reasons ought that to be the case among nations, whose subordinates may do a wrong that the nation itself may be willing to disavow and make ample atonement for.

I think, therefore, we should do nothing rashly; that we should not make war ourselves before we have informed Great Britain of the cause, and the inevitable consequences of her act unless proper satisfaction be made. When that voluntary satisfaction is refused, it seems to me it will be time enough for us to engage in actual hostilities. Hence I think these resolutions, although I confess they do not perhaps go to the extremes of that prudence which we are bound to observe, still are sufficient to convey the meaning of the American people; and, if we are to err, I would rather err in the forbearance of angry and quarrelsome words, or angry and quarrelsome acts. It is a cause of too much consequence between parties of too much power and dignity, to indulge in anything that is hasty or inconsiderate, to indulge in quarrelsome words, or in quarrelsome acts. Our dignity requires a different course; and the more firmly and resolutely we intend to have satisfaction, the more dignified it will be in us to endeavor to obtain first the voluntary retribution and reparation which we have a right to expect from England. When we have done that; when we have demanded it in a manner becoming us, and becoming her, without insult, or without aggravating circumstances, and it is refused, then we feel that we stand on firm and solid ground, and are acting to maintain the dignity and honor and rights of our country.

Sir, I am like the gentleman from Georgia in one respect. The officers of the English Government have perpetrated acts upon our commerce, on the high seas, which we cannot permit. These resolutions seem, under one interpretation of them, to imply that it is our wish to enter into negotiations with Great Britain about the right of search or right of visitation, and to require of her an open and express abandonment of that right. I do not want any negotiations with Great Britain, or any discussion with Great Britain, about the right of search or right of visitation. That is a subject which is exhausted; our minds are made up on that question; and we do not wish that the Government of England should understand that we consider the question on our part as open for any argument. We have made up our minds on it. We only wish to negotiate with her about these acts. When she refuses to make reparation for them, then we will decide whether they are of consequence or importance enough, either to our honor or our interest, to make them cause of war. Great Britain may be perfectly willing to renounce these acts, to disavow them; and that is all we have a right to demand. What her reasons may be for the commission of these acts, is entirely unimportant to us. Whether she has done them under any supposed emergency, whether she has done them because she feels authorized to do them in virtue of any right of search or visitation to which she may pretend, is a matter of indifference to us. We may say to her: "Hold your opinions, but forbear to do those acts which are injurious to us and for which we must make war; that is all we ask." She is fully authorized, so far as I am concerned, to maintain her pretensions to visitation and search until time shall wear them out and obliterate them. I will not quarrel with her for an opinion; I will not go to war with her for a difference of opinion; but when she undertakes to perform acts under those opinions, those acts I am concerned with, and those acts I must resist or submit to, as it best suits me. I want no discussion about the right of visitation or the right of search, and I should think it unworthy of this Government to enter into any negotiation on that subject. I care not upon what grounds she may found her pretensions. All I ask of her is, to forbear such action as is injurious to my country; and when she has done that, she may weigh as she pleases, in her national pride before the world, all these sovereign rights of hers about visitation and search on the high seas, to the nations who please to submit to them. I want to negotiate about these acts, these acts merely, and no further negotiation than to inform Great Britain of the acts that have been perpetrated or performed by her officers on our coast, and to know of her whether she is willing to make that reparation which this country thinks it is entitled to. I want an answer on that point—no more negotiation about it, unless it relates to the simple facts that are brought in question. Was the attack made? Under what circumstances was it made? With what aggravations, or with what circumstances of mitigation, was it made? These are the only topics of negotiation between us. I want no more learning, I want no more diplomacy, upon the question of visitation. I will not ask Great Britain for a renunciation of that, because I care nothing about it. Upon whatever pretensions, high or low, ancient or modern, you find a right to stop our ships engaged in lawful commerce on the high seas, that thing we will not submit to. As long as you entertain these opinions, and hold them as opinions merely, we will not quarrel with you about them, however erroneous we may think them; but the moment you attempt to act on that or any other pretense, and to perform acts injurious to us, we will resist those acts.

With that understanding, and that interpretation of these resolutions, I think they are of some consequence, and I shall vote for them; but I want no negotiation. I want it understood that we have no negotiation about abstract rights. It is practical wrongs and injuries alone for which this country wants redress; and I will not enlarge, and allow that matter to be diluted, and to run into a long volume of diplomacy about abstract rights and laws of the sea. We will submit to no actual wrong; we will resist that; but if Great Britain will forbear that as to us, I am satisfied; but I think it is our duty, before we take redress into our own hands, to apply to the Government of that country for redress. I think this is demanded of us by our own character. It is demanded of us by the peace of the world; demanded of us by all nations, and by all laws, to apply to her for reparation. That refused, we are either to submit, or we must take redress into our own hands; and the world will warrant and justify us, and our country will warrant and justify us. That is the course I desire to pursue. I would not have it understood by the world that we are proceeding recklessly and passionately; that there is anything like intimidation intended by our course. I want it to be understood in all our acts that we intend a little more than we say, and that we are certain to do what we intimate it is our purpose and intention to do, in everything that concerns our national honor and our national rights. That is the language I desire to hold towards foreign nations; the language of peace; the language of remonstrance; the language of friendly demand for satisfaction for wrongs done; and that refused, then comes the time for quarrel; and then the Senate of the United States will be prepared, I am sure, to go as far as any equal number of citizens of the United States, and a step further, because of their places, to vindicate whatever has been done, which we ought to vindicate, and which we ought to resist. I shall vote for these resolutions with this understanding and this view of them.

Mr. MASON. The pending question, I understand, is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. Now, that amendment proposes to confer a power upon the President to capture any offending ship, and bring it in. It is a proposition, therefore, to confer a power on the President by vote of the Senate, which, upon its face, could not be done. Apart, therefore, from the objections to the measure itself, I think that is improper.

Mr. WILSON. I have been appealed to by the Senator from New Hampshire, who moved the original amendment, to withdraw my proposition; and, on careful reflection, I find that these resolutions are to be simply the expression of the opinions of the Senate, and propose no action. The amendment I submitted, in order to be of any value, would have to be adopted by both Houses of Congress. I therefore withdraw that amendment. I have simply to say, however, that I hope the Executive has given the orders, and that the ships which have been offending against us will be sunk or brought into the harbors of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. MALLORY. The complaint I have of the resolutions is that they propose nothing but what is fully established and known at this day. They point only to giving an expression of this body, which expression of opinion is fully understood by our people, and by the civilized world. They do not confer on the President any power to meet the contingency before us. The opinions of this Government on this subject are distinctly known to the civilized States of the world. They have heretofore been acted upon. There is no dissenting voice throughout the United States in regard to them; and the British Government knew perfectly well that this course of procedure would involve a collision. The resolutions simply express an opinion, without conferring on the President a single solitary ounce of power that he does not possess now. They point only to negotiation. I would suggest that the resolutions be so amended as to imply negotiation or active resistance; and if it be in order to move a joint resolution as a substitute for the three resolutions before the Senate, I will move a joint resolution which will point to the power of negotiation, and at the same time, in the failure of that, authorize the President at once to proceed to right this wrong. I ask the Chair if it is in order to move to substitute a joint resolution?

Mr. TOOMBS. That was decided this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator send up the amendment? The Senator from Florida gives notice that he will offer an amendment to the resolutions after they have been perfected. The Secretary will read, for information, the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The Secretary read Mr. MALLORY's substitute, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the recent proceedings of the British naval officers in the Gulf of Mexico, upon the high seas, in forcibly arresting and examining vessels of the United States, owned and navigated by American citizens engaged in lawful trade, are without justification and palliation, in derogation of the cherished rights of the American people, which they can neither surrender nor suffer to be infringed with honor; and that the President of the United States be authorized to adopt immediate measures to arrest at once a continuance of such indignities.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question at present is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire to the second resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MASON. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is to strike out certain words from the resolution and insert other words declaring that the act of England in these aggressions on our commerce is the act of a belligerent. Now, the act of a belligerent is an act of war; and if the Senate is prepared to say that these acts of England, in these aggressions, are acts of war, then it may be that we should meet them by acts of war on our side, which the resolutions carefully avoid. They are acts of offense, and very high offense, which are now being inquired into by the Executive. At most, the language used by the amendment is only language of more explosive character than that contained in the resolutions, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to occupy time, but simply wish to say that by the authority upon which the report is founded—the case of the Marianna Flora, in 11 Wheaton—the Supreme Court of the United States judicially declare that these are belligerent rights and acts, and can only be justified as such. Now, if they are belligerent, and such is the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States, why shall not the Senate say so? I think we all know it. Our own tribunals have so decided, and I think it becomes us to say so. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GWIN. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we are making a declaration of war by the passage of these resolutions, without providing any means for the President to prosecute that war. Certainly it is impossible that these acts of the officers of Great Britain can have been committed without authority. I have never for a moment entertained the idea that they were not authorized to do precisely what they have done. Therefore, they are the acts of the British Government. I cannot see how it is possible for them to withdraw after they have progressed to such an extent as to bring down the indignation, not only of this Government, but of the people of the United States. It seems to me that the best thing we can do, would be to give authority to the President of the United States to pursue the offending vessels and bring them into port for what they have done, and then, if Great Britain objects to it, and makes a declaration of war, we should be ready to meet it. What are we doing? We are passing resolutions that certainly look to difficulty with Great Britain, and we are making no preparations to meet it. It looks more like a farce than anything else.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must call for the special order at this hour.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was very much in hopes—

Mr. GWIN. I have not got through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair calls up the special order.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will be taken up.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the special order for one hour—until two o'clock—in order that we may end this discussion.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I now move that these resolutions be postponed until Saturday next, at one o'clock, and be made the special order then, to the exclusion of all other business. ["Oh, no."] I make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is in order, if there be no objection.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that. I wish them to be postponed; I do not want them passed at all. They can be taken up on Friday or Saturday, as they do not require joint action.

Mr. MASON. I ask for a vote on my proposition—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The special order is before the Senate, and it must be postponed in order to give the Senator from Virginia an opportunity to make the motion he desires to submit.

Mr. HUNTER. My colleague can make his motion to-morrow in the morning hour.

Mr. MASON. I yield, when I cannot make my motion.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of Government for the year ending 30th June, 1859; the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Brown, to strike out the word "Potomac" from the item appropriating $6,000 to repair the Potomac, navy-yard, and upper bridges in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. I hope we shall have a vote on this question. I do not want to discuss it. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. IVERSON. If this motion of the Senator from Mississippi prevails it will not only deprive the Long Bridge of any appropriation for repairs, but it will give the whole $6,000 to the two other bridges undoubtedly.

Mr. BROWN. I have already notified the Senate that in case this amendment shall prevail, I shall propose to reduce the appropriation pro rata.

Mr. IVERSON. If the Senator from Mississippi will move to strike out the whole appropriation, I will go with him, because I do not believe Congress ought to keep up these bridges for the benefit of the people of Washington or Georgetown either. Congress has paid the expense of constructing these bridges, and now I think the people of the District ought at least to pay the expense of repairing them; but if you repair one, I think you are in duty bound to repair all. I am not in favor of appropriating money to repair bridges at Georgetown and do nothing for the bridges of the city of Washington. If the Senator from Mississippi, or any other gentleman, will move to strike out the whole clause, I will vote for that motion; and if I had been here when the original proposition was presented to construct these bridges, I should not have voted a dollar for their construction. I do not put the construction or repairs of these bridges on the same footing with your construction of water-works. The Government, as a Government, is not interested in these bridges. Individuals are; the traveling community are; and the Long Bridge is of more concern, of more importance, and of more interest to the people of this District, and to the people of the United States generally, than fifty such bridges as are in Georgetown and over the Eastern Branch, that the Senator from Mississippi has so much care about. He takes especial care against this one, and the inclusion of one is the exclusion of the other. That is an old rule, I believe, which the Senator will recognize. He is very hostile to the Long Bridge; and in exhibiting this hostility to that, we infer that he is exceedingly friendly to the others; but I do not understand this discrimination, and I am not in favor of making it.

Mr. BROWN. I do not wish to discuss the question, and do not mean to do it; but I will say again that my object in withdrawing appropriations from this bridge is that we may ultimately do what I think Congress ought to do—construct a proper bridge at the proper place. The present bridge, as has been charged over and over again, and proved a dozen times, and yet the proof has to be made every time the question comes up, not only obstructs the navigation of the river below Georgetown, but, in the judgment of the medical faculty of Washington, and of all living in the western end of the city, is detrimental to the health of all that portion of the city; and the best informed believe it is detrimental to the health of the presidential mansion. To cross it will require, in going from the depot at Washington to Alexandria, some fifteen or twenty minutes longer than to cross the river at Georgetown. To reconstruct the bridge, which will have to be done if this site be maintained, for it is now almost worn out, will cost whoever does it $2,000,000 more of money.

I avow my whole object to be in the end to get clear of the bridge, to get clear of it entirely, for three reasons: first, that it obstructs navigation; second, that it is destructive to the public health; and third, that it requires more time to reach a given point that way than it will the other way. These are the three grounds upon which I base my opposition to it. So long as you continue to patch it up and keep it there, you will build no bridge anywhere else; nor will anybody else. If it was away, then the great interests of the country would require the construction of a proper bridge at a proper place, and I want to cut loose from it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. How much will it cost?

Mr. BROWN. A bridge can be built for all the purposes of a railroad bridge, and for the purposes of common travel, together with the reconstruction of the aqueduct over the piers above Georgetown, for $1,000,000. The estimate is, that to build a railroad bridge at the site of the present Long Bridge, will cost upwards of three million dollars. I do not pretend to say that the obligation is upon Congress to build the one or the other of them. I have brought forward no proposition, and do not mean to bring forward any, to build a railroad bridge at either point now, or at any time. I am in favor of crossing the Potomac river by railroad, not at the site of the present Long Bridge, where you must always have draws, obstructing the passage—where you must always have the risk of running off through those draws, but where it may be permanent, constructed upon stone piers, and the railroad will run over a distance of three hundred yards, instead of running largely over a mile, across a bridge. As I said before, I do not want to discuss the question. These are the reasons for the movement. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have a vote. As much interested as I am in the bridge, I am unwilling to debate it, and delay the bill. I will only say that I differ very much with the Senator from Mississippi in regard to the grounds he has taken. I do not believe the Long Bridge affects the health of the city; I believe it can be shown that the mud flat was there before the bridge was put there. It may give some little inconvenience to navigation, but that is all. The convenience of the bridge is to market people and those who are trading here. There is a system of roads on the other side, in Virginia, made in reference to this bridge, which has been there forty years. But I shall not detain the Senate with discussion. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe with the Senator from Georgia, but I shall not repeat his argument, that all the bridges stand on the same footing so far as appropriations from the Treasury are concerned. I wish to say, however, that I do not believe this bridge is injurious to the navigation of the Potomac as high as Georgetown. I believe it is beneficial to it. The bar which is formed now above the causeway is the result of the great expansion of the river. It would be distributed through the whole channel if there were no obstruction interposed there of an artificial character. The bar results from the causeway; and from the bar results the deeper channel under the draw-bridge. I believe it is an improvement to the navigation of Georgetown; I believe it is an injury to the health of the western part of Washington; but if we are to continue appropriations for bridges leading from the capital into Maryland and Virginia, I do not see why this should be excluded, for I think it the best of the whole brood.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Chandler, Clay, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Mallory, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Wilson, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bigler, Brodbeck, Clark, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Durkee, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hamlin, Harlan, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Mason, Reid, Sebastian, Simmons, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, and Yalee—29.

So the Senate refused to strike out.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the bill by adding after line one hundred and ninety-five, which makes an appropriation for lighting Pennsylvania avenue:

For extending gas pipes through the public reservation, commonly known as the Mall, on Four-and-a-half and Seventh and Twelfth streets, $16,400, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, so soon as the gas pipes shall be extended to the edge of the reservation or Mall aforesaid, by the city authorities, or citizens interested therein.

The House of Representatives have passed a bill, which lies upon the table, for this object, and it was unanimously agreed to by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. I move it in this form, the substance of it at least, to avoid the necessity of discussion, or an attempt to pass that bill. The public reservation called the Mall, divides all of the southern portion of the city from all the northern portion. The city authorities and persons interested, are very anxious to extend the gas into the portion of the city in which the penitentiary and other public buildings are, but they are not disposed to pay the expense of running gas pipes and putting up lamp-posts through the public grounds. This is simply to do for the Government what every citizen is required to do in front of his own house, to put down your own gas pipes and put up your own lamp-posts over your own grounds.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that the people of the city ought to provide the pipes which are to carry gas. It is for the benefit of the city. If we light Pennsylvania avenue and the public buildings, it is as much as we ought to be required to do.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator had listened to what I said, he would have seen that it is confined exclusively to the public grounds, and the appropriation is not to be made until the gas is taken through all the property which belongs to the city and private citizens. All you are asked to do is simply to extend it through the ground that belongs to the public—the Mall, the public reservation on which the Smithsonian Institution, the Washington Monument, and the Public Armory are located.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not think there is any public interest in lighting that up with gas. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer the following amendment; after line one hundred and sixty-one, appropriating for the insane hospital, insert:

For the salaries and incidental expenses of the Institution for the instruction of the Deaf and Dumb and Blind in the District of Columbia, authorized by the act approved May 29, 1858, $3,000.

Subsequent to the time when the estimates were made by the Department, we passed a law, which I hold in my hand, appropriating $15,000—$3,000 a year, for five years—to this institution. The amendment is drawn in the language of the law. It was approved by the President on the 29th day of this month.

Mr. HUNTER. Are these the salaries provided by law?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir. The language of the appropriation is the language of the law, which is, "shall be allowed for five years for the payment of salaries and incidental expenses of said institution." That is the language of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the same committee to offer the following amendment, to follow line one hundred and ninety-five.

That hereafter the northern boundary of the corporation of Georgetown shall be terminated by the prolongation of a line along the road and Eighth street, to the western limits of the present corporation: And provided, That the property set apart from the incorporated limits, as above, shall be appraised by three commissioners, appointed by the circuit court of the District, and the owners thereof shall pay into the treasury of the corporation of Georgetown, in equal annual installments of one, two, three, four, five, and six years, such sums as said commissioners shall appraise as an equitable ratio of the several estates set apart, to the whole value of the appraised real estate of Georgetown, as shown by its last assessment: And provided, That an appeal from the said commissioners may be taken by the owner or owners of any piece, or pieces of property, to the circuit court, and that the decision of said court shall be final and conclusive: And also provided, That the report of the said commissioners shall be entered up in said court as judgment against the property, to be collected by suit, as other taxes on real estate are collected.

I will detain the Senate for a very few moments, while I state the reasons which brought the committee to the conclusion at which they arrived in this matter. It will be seen, if Senators will take the trouble to look at the plan which I hold in my hand, that the city of Georgetown is very nearly a parallelogram. At the northeast corner of that city is a little strip of land, about sixty rods wide, and very nearly a mile long, projecting into the county. It is suburban; it is rural; it is as much a part of the county as all the rest of the county that surrounds it.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to appeal to him? We cannot put this sort of legislation on an appropriation bill. If we do, we shall not get through in three, or four, or five months.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not going to detain the Senate five minutes; I will make short speeches. This strip of land runs up, as I say, about three quarters of a mile, and contains lots that are estimated at about four acres each. The onerous part of it is that upon these lots, which are little farms, the authorities of Georgetown assess front taxes to make roads and to pay for gas lights down in the city. All, or nearly all of the committee went to the ground for the purpose of looking at it and examining it. A majority of the committee—I think every member who went there—was decidedly of the opinion that it was a severe tax to compel these men to remain within the corporation limits of the city proper, who want to keep the property still for taxation. The corporation of Georgetown asked a rehearing and we gave it; and after that rehearing, we all came to the same conclusion again, and the committee instructed me to offer this amendment. There is a city debt; I think the Mayor told me it was about two hundred thousand dollars. No matter what it may be, the amendment provides that the property shall be assessed, and that the owners shall pay, in six equal annual installments, the amount which would be their proportion relatively, on the value of their property.

Mr. MASON. How are you to enforce the payments?

Mr. HAMLIN. The section pledges the lands for the payment of them, by which pledge they will certainly be holden.

Mr. MASON. I agree with my colleague perfectly, independently of the merits or demerits of this question, be they what they may; the proposition is to put alien matter on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to state one fact. This amendment comes in at the very point where we are called upon to make an appropriation for these very streets. I want it to go on here, and cut off that tail end of the city running up into the county, for the purpose of saving us hereafter from appropriations to that part which is in the county substantially; and we might just as well make appropriations for all the rest of the county of Washington as for that little point of land. That is my judgment.

Mr. MASON. I still say it is to ingraft alien matter altogether on an appropriation bill, and matter exceedingly interesting to the persons who live in that part of the county. We cannot inquire into, or discuss, or understand it on an appropriation bill. I hope it will not pass.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—yeas 18, nays 19.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the first section of the bill:

For satisfying the claims of the States of Maine and Massachusetts, under the stipulation of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded on the 9th day of August, in the year 1842, a sum not exceeding $11,496 61 in satisfaction of such claims of the State of Maine; and $9,215 13 in satisfaction of like claims of the State of Massachusetts; to be audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. HUNTER. What are those claims for? I should like to have some explanation.

Mr. MASON. Those claims are to return to those States respectively that amount of money, which the States of Maine and Massachusetts expended in defense of the Aroostook country, as it was called, and is provided for by the treaty of 1842. The States have paid, from time to time, the claims as they came in. They were sent to the Treasury Department, examined by the proper accounting officer, and are said to be just and correct.

Mr. HUNTER. Are they provided for in the treaty?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. POLK. I will also state that one of them has already passed the Senate—the one in favor of the State of Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not this; that is another matter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer another amendment of like character:

And he further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be directed to ascertain, as among the expenditures of the State of Maine in defending the territory heretofore in dispute with Great Britain, the amounts paid in borrowing money for those expenditures beyond the rate of six per centum per annum, whether in the form of discounts, or otherwise, in all cases in which the principal of such expenditures and interest upon them at the rate of six per centum have heretofore been refunded to said State by the United States; and that the Secretary be directed to pay the amount so ascertained out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to any properly authorized officer of said State. In making the ascertainment herein directed, the accounting officers shall compute the principal and interest of the difference between the cash received by Maine in negotiating stocks and notes, and the nominal amount of such stocks and notes, and the interest accrued thereon; and in cases where Maine was obliged, in negotiating for moneys, to increase the rate of interest on previous loans, the amount of such increase shall be computed and allowed, but not so as to reckon interest upon interest.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear this explained. What moneys were expended by Maine?

Mr. MASON. The amendment is in the words of a bill which was reported by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Polk,] from the Committee on Foreign Relations, by their instructions, and they further instructed that as the bill could not possibly get through at this session, it should be offered as an amendment to the appropriation bill. The bill was accompanied by a report, which explained it fully, and which can be read, if desired.

Mr. PUGH. Before that, I should like to make a question of order: this is a private claim. The other was in pursuance of treaty, but this is a private claim.

Mr. HAMLIN and Mr. FESSENDEN. This is also based on the treaty.

Mr. MASON. If one is under the treaty, this is just as much so.

Mr. PUGH. This is to pay an additional rate of interest to what we have already paid.

Mr. MASON. If gentlemen will allow the report of the committee to be read, I think they will see the character of the claim, and be satisfied that it is not a private claim, but to carry out the provisions of the treaty.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. Polk, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the 30th of March:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of George M. Weston, the commissioner of the State of Maine, have had the subject under consideration, and now report:

That by the fifth article of the treaty of Washington, concluded the 9th day of August, A. D. 1842, between the United States of America and her Britannic Majesty, it was covenanted by the United States to pay and satisfy the State of Maine for all claims for expenses incurred by her in protecting the thereupon disputed territory on the northeastern boundary of the United States. That in the year 1839, upon the sudden emergency of the Aroostook war, for the purpose of raising the means of protecting said disputed territory, the State of Maine issued and sold her six per cent. stocks to the amount of about eight hundred thousand dollars, at a discount below their nominal value. Also, that in order to raise additional amounts of cash, she exchanged six per cent. stocks for five per cent. to the holders of such five per cents. Under the act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1851, the United States has paid back to Maine the actual amount of money she realized by such sale and exchange of stocks, and also interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum. Under said act, Maine claimed not only the amount so paid to her by the United States, but also the amount of discount and loss, with interest thereon, which she was compelled to incur by the aforesaid sale. On the 10th of April, 1852, the Treasury decided to pay as is stated above, refusing the claim for losses in the sale and exchange of her stocks. The agent of Maine at once applied to Congress for further relief, and the Senate decided in her favor, in August, 1852; but having failed to obtain the relief sought, owing to the fact that action by the House was not had on her claim, she now presses her claim before Congress.

Your committee think that the losses so incurred by Maine, in the sale and exchange of her stock, for the purpose of raising money to defend the disputed territory, as aforesaid, together with interest on the same, is as much a part of the expenses incurred by her, in the sense of the treaty of Washington, as the amount already refunded to her by the United States, and ought, accordingly, to be paid and satisfied to her. They therefore beg leave to report a bill for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio raises a question of order, that this amendment is excluded by the 30th rule of the Senate, the last clause of which reads: "no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law, or a treaty stipulation." The Chair in this case would feel bound by the decision of the committee as contained in their report, which states that this provision is to carry out a treaty stipulation, and he therefore decides the amendment to be in order.

Mr. HUNTER. This seems to me to be a very important precedent which we are about to establish. The whole amount of the claim of the State of Maine was that we should refund her money she actually expended in defending her rights, with legal interest upon it. That we have done; and she now comes to us for a claim in the shape of damages, saying that because she chose to raise the moneys in a particular way, that is by the sale of stocks, we are to make good to her any loss she may have experienced in raising the money in that mode. If we do this, how many of the States may come upon us, for there are a great many who have advanced to the United States, and whose claims have been settled heretofore? How many have probably sold their stocks —some of these advances were made in time of war—below par? Are we to go back and ascertain what they may have lost by a particular mode of raising money in order to remunerate them? Take the case of a claim between you and me. I may have advanced money for your use, and having advanced the money, I am entitled to be refunded the money and the interest upon it, but surely I have no right to raise a claim of damages, to say that I chose a particular mode of raising this money, and I lost by that mode. That is my concern. All you have to do is to repay me with interest whatever I advanced for you. It seems to me that the United States have done that in relation to Maine, and she has no right now to claim more. I believe that if we sanction this claim, we shall find it to be a precedent out of which will grow a great many claims for many other States of the Union.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I knew that the Senator from Virginia was very sharp, but I did not think he could carry his sharpness to the extent to which he has carried it in this case; and I can only account for it by supposing that he really does not understand the question before the Senate. It is this: Maine was called upon to defend her territory; she had not money in her treasury to the amount of $800,000; she had to raise that money by a loan; she had to borrow money, just as the United States are compelled to borrow sometimes; she issued her bonds to the amount of $800,000; of course she had to go into the market with them; and, in going into the market with them, she could only obtain money by selling those bonds at a discount of some twenty thousand dollars. She had to pay the whole $800,000. The treaty stipulation is, that Maine shall be refunded what she expended, with interest. How much did she expend in good faith? Eight hundred thousand dollars, with interest; because she had to pay $800,000, and the interest on that. Now, when the United States are called upon to make good their treaty stipulation that they would refund to Maine what she had paid, with interest, is it for them to say that they will pay her only the money she received on the sale of her bonds? She did not sacrifice her bonds willingly. It was a contingency arising at once; the money must be had at once; she got it on the best terms she could; she put her bonds into the market, and sold them as well as she was able; she got $780,000 for bonds of $800,000; those bonds of $800,000 bear interest, and a portion of them are bearing interest to this day. Do the United States remunerate Maine by saying they will not pay the discount? The discount is part of the interest which the United States agreed to pay; and the stipulation was, to refund her what she paid, with interest. To do this, you must pay her the face of the bonds she issued, with interest upon them; otherwise, you make Maine lose what she was absolutely obliged to pay to obtain the money. Now, the objection comes singularly from the Senator from Virginia, for the United States have done this very thing for his State. The United States have paid Virginia more than six per cent. interest, because she was compelled to pay it.

Mr. HUNTER. When?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not remember the exact time, but the Senator's colleague can tell him that it is so. The statute has been pointed out to me, and with a little time I could show it. It is an absolute fact, as I know, for I have investigated it; but if it had not been, is there anything more just? The stipulation of the treaty is, that the United States would refund to Maine what she paid with interest. What did she pay? Eight hundred thousand dollars and the interest on that sum. The Senator from Virginia objects that, because she was compelled to sell her bonds for a few thousand dollars less than their face, she must lose the difference. Is that making her whole? That debt exists to the present day, and is the foundation of the greater part of the claim.

Another part which is a small part, only about a thousand or two thousand dollars, arises from another circumstance. Maine was compelled, as I said, to borrow money. The amount which she borrowed on her six per cent. bonds in the way I have described, did not cover the whole case. Under a provision of our statute, the banks bind themselves, when they take their charters, to lend the State, on certain contingencies, a certain amount of money at five per cent. interest. That loan was up to its highest pitch, and Maine could not get another dollar from her own banks, but the banks told her, "if you will take a certain portion of the five per cent. bonds which we have for your other loan, and give us six per cent. bonds in their place, we will let you have the money." In that case she gave only six per cent., but she lost the difference between five and six per cent. That made a difference of a thousand dollars or so. That is the mode in which she had to obtain money. In both cases, Maine has absolutely paid out money, and the treaty provides that she shall receive what she expended, with interest. There cannot be anything more fair and honest. The proper committees of the House and of the Senate are unanimous in saying that the claim is manifestly just and proper, without a single dissenting voice in either.

Mr. MASON. I will read the provision of the treaty under which this claim is made. The United States stipulated by the fifth article, among other things—

"To pay and satisfy the States of Maine and Massachusetts respectively, for all claims for expenses incurred by them in protecting the said heretofore disputed territory, and making a survey thereof, and to pay and indemnify them for all claims for expenses incurred," &c.

The committee thought this was an expense, and a legitimate expense, incurred in getting money by the sale of depreciated stocks.

Mr. HUNTER. I apprehend the Senator from Maine will find himself very much mistaken, if he thinks any such advance has been made to Virginia on this principle. He will probably hear something on that subject from the chairman of the Committee on Claims, and he will see that a pretty large amount is involved on this very principle. I maintain that all the Government is bound to do, is to repay the State her advances with interest. It has nothing to do with the selling of bonds; it has nothing to do with the mode in which the State has raised the money.

Mr. MASON. The stipulation of the treaty is that which we are to be governed by.

Mr. HUNTER. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. Now, the stipulation of the treaty is not that this Government will reimburse to the State, or refund to the State any moneys that it advanced; but the stipulation of the treaty is that it will repay to the State all expenses that it incurred. The claim is that, in raising this money, Maine was obliged to raise it at depreciated rates, and that was an expense incurred.

Mr. HUNTER. It is a claim for damages.

Mr. POLK. I happened to be on the committee which examined this case, and drew up the report. The State of Maine is in this fix: she executed her bonds to raise this money, and she has got to pay the full amount of dollars called for by these bonds, and the interest called for by them. If she has sold these bonds at a discount of five per cent., for instance, to raise money, and has spent that money, her expenses are not refunded by paying back to her the money that she got. She has to pay the full amount, and the amount she pays is the amount of expense she is at. That is the language of the treaty—not that she shall be refunded all moneys that she may have paid out; but that she shall be made good for all expenses that she has incurred. Now, what is true in the case of the bonds sold by her, is also true in the case of the exchange of six per cent. for five per cent. bonds. She could not get the money on her five per cent. bonds, and was compelled to issue her six per cent. bonds, and now she has to pay the amount of those bonds, with six per cent. interest; and when she has paid the bonds, with six per cent. interest, I ask any man if that is not the amount of expense she has been at? The language of the treaty is that she shall be paid the expense. I do not think it is a case for argument.

Mr. PUGH. I do not want to debate this matter; but I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 42, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Hammond, Harlan, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Seward, Summons, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—42.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Green, Gwin, Hunter, Pugh, Sli-dell, and Toombs—7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I have an amendment to offer on my own account to carry out an existing law. It is to add at the end of the first section:

For defraying the expense of carrying into execution the joint resolution, approved May 11, 1858, "authorizing suitable acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British naval authorities at Jamaica for the relief extended to the officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehanna, disabled by yellow fever," $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

That is under estimates made by the Departments of State and of the Navy to carry out the joint resolution of May 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following amendment by instruction of the Committee on Foreign Relations:

And in the settlement of the accounts of the Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States to France, there shall be allowed and paid to him, from the 1st day of July, 1855, to the 1st day of January, 1857, such sum as will make his salary for the period mentioned equal to that allowed to the Minister of the United States at London.

Mr. PUGH. That is for back pay. It is a private claim, and I object to it.

Mr. MASON. I will state the character of the amendment. By the law of 1855, the salary of the Minister at France was fixed at $15,000, and all expenses for his clerk hire and office rent were taken away. By the same law, the salary of the Minister at London was put at $17,500, and all like expenses were taken from him. By the law of 1856, the salary of the Minister to France was placed on the same footing with the salary of the Minister to London; but in the intermediate time that mission had been deprived of the appropriation for office rent and clerk hire. It is admitted on all hands, I believe, that although there was a time when London was the most expensive court, France is now; and the purpose of Congress, in the following year, to equalize the salaries, would, in the impression of the committee, be carried out by equalizing them from the time the law passed. As to the objection that it is a private claim, the distinction, as it seems to me, is this: the law fixes the salary of these Ministers, and the effect of the amendment would only be to make the salary of the Minister at France date back, instead of commencing from 1856. It only makes it retrospective.

Mr. PUGH. It is obviously not to carry out any law. It is to give back pay previously to the compensation bill. It seems to me strictly forbidden by our rule. It may be a meritorious case, but I should prefer to hear it on private-bill day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the point be insisted upon by the Senator from Ohio, the Chair will feel obliged to rule that the amendment is excluded, under the rule excluding private claims.

Mr. MASON. I must ask respectfully that the Chair will either allow me to appeal, or submit the question to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator take an appeal?

Mr. MASON. I will, if it is necessary.

Mr. COLLAMER. Is this reported by a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir; by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MASON. It is only to affect a salary under an existing law, in my judgment.

Mr. GREEN. If there is an existing law, you do not need any such provision. If there is no existing law, this is a proposition to make a new one, and therefore not allowable on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule provides that—"No amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

The Chair has decided that under this clause of the rule the amendment cannot be received. From this decision the Senator from Virginia appeals. The question is, "Shall the opinion of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

The decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer another amendment:

And that all diplomatic and consular officers who were appointed under the act entitled "An act to remodel the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved March 1, 1855, shall have the same compensation during the time necessarily occupied in making the transit to, and returning from, their respective posts, and while they were receiving their instructions, as is provided for diplomatic and consular officers in the eighteenth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular system of the United States," approved August 18, 1856: Provided, That the foregoing shall not be construed to apply to any diplomatic or consular officer who was in office and at his post of duty when said act, approved March 1, 1855, took effect, except to allow compensation to such officers during the time necessarily occupied in returning from their respective posts.

In 1855, by the law affecting diplomatic and consular officers at that date, it was provided that their compensation should not commence until they arrived at their posts and entered upon the discharge of their duty. It gave salaries to certain consuls, and affected the salaries of foreign ministers, but provided that they should not commence until they arrived at their place of duty, and entered upon the discharge of their duty. In 1856, that was thought to be oppressive, and the law was so far modified as to allow their compensation to commence from the period they left the country on their way to their place of duty, and some period not exceeding thirty days additional while they should be receiving instructions; and the law of 1856, as construed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, was intended to apply to those who were appointed after that law of 1855 took effect; but it has not been so construed at the Treasury. The effect of this amendment only is to authorize those consular officers who are salaried and diplomatic officers, who have been appointed since the act of 1855, to have the benefit of the act of 1856, in allowing their compensation to commence while they were in transitu between the two countries, or while they were receiving instructions; that is the whole of it.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that this proposition is objectionable to the same point of order that was made on the other. It is a question of allowance to representatives abroad not authorized by law, and is thus in the nature of a claim, although it embraces a considerable number of persons.

Mr. MASON. Its effect is simply to place a construction upon the act of 1856. The act of 1856, as we construe it, gave the allowance which this amendment is intended to give; but it was decided at the Treasury not to give it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York makes a question of order on this amendment, that it provides for a private claim.

Mr. IVERSON. It does not seem to me to be a private claim. It is an enactment affecting the salaries of officers. It is not a private claim, because it acts in futuro. It may possibly affect the interests of these officers to some extent while they were receiving instructions and going out; but under the law as it now exists, some of them can get no pay on their return voyage. Certainly it is competent, in an appropriation bill, to enact a law giving that pay. It is not, therefore, a private claim.

Mr. KING. I understand that this provision relates only to past services, and not to future services.

Mr. IVERSON. It is simply construing the law. At the last Congress a precisely similar provision was reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and put into an appropriation bill by the Senate, and it was agreed to by the other House; but the Attorney General, in construing the provision, said it did not meet the case which the committee, and the Senate and the House of Representatives, on full consideration, intended that it should meet. I drew it up myself, and presented it to the Committee on Foreign Relations; but the Attorney General construed the language as not sufficient to embrace the case, and therefore the parties were excluded; and this amendment is intended to obviate the decision of the Attorney General by unmistakable language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So far as the Chair can ascertain the object of the amendment from its terms, or from the statement of the Senator who presents it, he thinks it is not excluded by the rule. It is not strictly in the nature of a private claim.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, if the present salaries are not sufficient to secure applicants for the offices? It is a very singular thing that it is proposed to raise in this way the salaries of our foreign ministers and consuls, when it is well known that they receive an outfit which is intended to cover this very claim. ["Not now."]

Mr. KING. But they have an increased compensation in lieu of it.

Mr. IVERSON. This does not raise the salaries one dollar.

Mr. CHANDLER. But it provides for commencing them before they reach their destination.

Mr. IVERSON. That is the law now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then what is the object of this amendment?

Mr. IVERSON. Some were cut out by a pre-existing law; and this is to put them on the same footing with all others. It does not increase salaries.

Mr. PUGH. I was not in when the question of order was raised; but I think this is a private claim, and I shall vote against it on that ground, notwithstanding the decision of the Chair. It provides for five or six persons; and if they were named by name the amendment could not be received; but by merely calling them persons who were in office on such a day, the rule is avoided. If these gentlemen are entitled to this back pay, let their claims come up in separate private bills, and let us hear them discussed; but I do not believe in this thing of four or five persons who have private claims being picked out by the committees of this House, and have their claims put on these bills, while all the other claimants are compelled to travel over the regular routine. I hope the Senate will resist every attempt to load this bill with a private claim for anybody; and I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bigler, Broderick, Collamer, Fessenden, Foot, Hammond, Iverson, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Seward, Thomson of New Jersey, and Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Durkee, Foster, Green, Hale, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Pearce, Pugh, Reid, Rice, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yulee—34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASON. I have another amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby authorized, to extend the provisions of the joint resolution, approved March 3, 1853, entitled "A resolution for the relief of the Spanish consul, and other subjects of Spain residing at Key West and New Orleans," by indemnity for losses occasioned in the year 1851, to the case of one Michael Pappreniza, an Austrian subject, who, it is alleged, sustained losses at the same time, in consequence of his being supposed to be a Spaniard: Provided, That the amount allowed as indemnity to said Pappreniza shall not exceed the sum of $200.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that a private claim?

Mr. MASON. In 1853, Congress passed a joint resolution appropriating a sum of money to indemnify the Spanish consul and Spanish subjects who had been despoiled by a mob at New Orleans, sometimes called a popular meeting, but it turned out that one unhappy subject was not a Spaniard, but an Austrian, who was supposed to be a Spaniard, as it appeared. He was one of the subjects thus despoiled, but being an Austrian, and not a Spaniard, the provisions of that resolution could not extend to him. Now, the object of the amendment is only to authorize the President to treat him as though he were a Spanish subject, and to allow him to be indemnified out of the money appropriated. It is not to exceed $200.

Mr. HUNTER. It may be all right, but I think we ought not to dispense with the rules of the Senate. It seems to me to be a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels bound to say that it is a private claim, excluded by the rules.

Mr. YULEE. I have an amendment to offer from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Sec. 1. And be it further enacted, That so much of the laws now in force as fix the rates of the Patent Office fees are hereby repealed, and in their stead the following rates are established: On filing each caveat, ten dollars; on filing each original application for a patent, except for a design, twenty dollars; and on the issuing of the patent, ten dollars in addition; on every appeal from the examiners in chief to the Commissioner, twenty dollars; on every application for a patent for a design, fifteen dollars; on every application for the reissue of a patent, thirty dollars; on every application for the extension of a patent, fifty dollars; on filing each disclaimer, ten dollars; for all certified copies, fifteen cents per hundred words; for recording every assignment or other writing, of three hundred words or under, one dollar; for recording every assignment or other writing, over three hundred and under one thousand words, two dollars; for recording every assignment or other writing, if over one thousand words, three dollars; for copies of drawings, the reasonable expense of making the same.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Florida, in repealing the existing law with reference to these fees, should have put in the other provision with regard to patents issued to foreigners, which was reported by the committee, or else the proposition will not be as the committee intended to have it.

Mr. YULEE. I intended to move that afterwards; but it can be added now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should not like to repeal the present law without making a complete provision for all cases.

Mr. YULEE. Then I will offer this proviso as an addition to the amendment:

Provided, That the sums to be charged upon the application for, and issue of, a patent to any person being a citizen or subject of a foreign country, shall be the same as are charged in the country to which such person belongs upon the application for, and issue of, a patent to a citizen of the United States, but not less than the sums herein provided.

Mr. HALE. I hope the amendment will not be urged here; and if it is, I hope it will be voted down. This is no place for it. It proposes a pretty important and radical change in the Patent Office laws; and before I vote to impose a further tax upon the applicants for patents, and for the continuation or extension of them, upon the ground that the institution cannot support itself as a self-sustaining institution, I should like to know how much money has been taken from the patent fund to erect that immense building which the Government have constructed, not for the use of the Patent Office entirely, but for the use of other Departments of the Government. If this fund, which has been accumulated by the tax upon the ingenuity of the country, has been squandered in building this immense temple for the Government of the United States, I say it is unjust to the ingenuity and the labor of the country to impose a further tax upon them for replacing money which the Government have taken to erect this building. I hope that when the patent laws are reviewed, it will be done at leisure, and it will be made a subject of debate when gentlemen have time to examine it. The Committee on Patents reported, some time ago, a general bill, and this was a part of their system. From the imperfect knowledge I had of the matter, I thought I saw in that bill some things that were crude and imperfect, and I notified the chairman of the Committee on Patents that when it was called up, I should be prepared to say something in opposition to the measure. I had no idea that it was to be sprung upon us in this appropriation bill. I hope it will not be urged here; but if it is urged here, I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. YULEE. This amendment has been offered now because I had become hopeless of the action of the Senate upon the larger bill, to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers, in time for action by the House of Representatives at this session. I had, therefore, by the authority of the committee, and by their direction, proposed to confine the legislation at this session to the single section which I have taken from that bill, and which relates to the fees alone. The purpose of the amendment is to enable the Patent Office to be self-sustaining—

Mr. HALE. And build buildings for the Government besides.

Mr. YULEE. I shall come to that point presently. The Secretary of the Interior informs us, in his report, that the expenditures in the last three quarters are considerably beyond the receipts; and, in consequence of the continuing deficiency, they have been obliged to discharge a number of clerks and some examiners, whereby the business is greatly delayed, to the injury of applicants for patents. The deficiency in three quarters amounted to some three or four thousand dollars; and the Secretary asks with great earnestness the action of Congress, at this session, upon the subject. The Commissioner of Patents, in his report, also urges the necessity of immediate action; and the committee have received one or two letters from the Commissioner during the session, urging the necessity of some action in relation to the fees.

The Senate will see the necessity and propriety of the addition which we propose to make to the patent fees. We propose much less than the House committee had determined upon, and we propose less than the Department and the Commissioner have desired; but we have thought that, with the experiment of the small increase which we propose, we may try whether the income of the office will be sufficient to sustain its expenditures; and if not, at the next session the greater increase which the Departments ask may be considered by Congress. As the matter at present stands, the patent fee, upon the first filing of a caveat, is ten dollars; and afterwards, on filing an application, the applicant deposits twenty dollars more, and the Patent Office is obliged to go through the full examination whether it be a good case or a bad case; but if the decision be against the application, the applicant is allowed to withdraw twenty dollars, and then ten dollars is the whole compensation of the Department for all the labor which they give to a case in its examination and decision—which labor is quite as much if it be rejected as if it be granted. One of the very alterations in the patent fee, which this amendment proposes, is to obtain for the Department the full value of its services. The explanation is fully made in a brief paragraph of the report of the Commissioner, which I will read to the Senate, and which will explain the necessity and propriety, and the equity of the change which is proposed to be made in the fees:

"It will be observed that of the $211,582.09 set forth as the aggregate expenditures of this office for the year 1857, $38,919.98 consisted of fees returned on applications withdrawn after examination and rejection. The necessity of a change in this feature of the existing law has been heretofore expressed, and is still felt with increasing force. Did the patent constitute the consideration for which the fee of thirty dollars is paid, it would be but reasonable that this sum, or a part of it, should be returned upon the abandonment of the claim. Such, however, is not the case. The consideration of the patent is the surrender of the invention to the public at the expiration of the fourteen years for which the monopoly is granted. The thirty dollars form the compensation (and it is no more than a just one) for the labor bestowed by the office in the preparation and examination of the application. When, then, this has been performed, it is neither just nor expedient that the well-earned compensation for it should, in whole or in part, be withheld. A tariff of fees, which, while dividing the services required, provides that they shall be paid for, step by step, as they progress, has been proposed, and, it is hoped, will be favorably considered by Congress. This would be alike agreeable to the inventor and to the office, protecting, as it would, the former from the oppression of paying for any services not in fact rendered, and the latter from the injustice of performing any labor for which it is not remunerated."

The principal other alteration is in the fee for extension, which is proposed to be increased from thirty to fifty dollars, which is only considered a reasonable allowance. Now, with regard to the question made by the Senator from New Hampshire, in respect to the amount which has been invested in the building of the Interior Department and Patent Office from the patent fund, I will say to him, that I have not the means of advising him distinctly as to the figures, but I am informed that only a very small proportion of the cost of that building was derived from the patent fund. A number of years ago the building was commenced, (perhaps ten or twelve years ago,) in contemplation of use for the Patent Office alone, when there was a considerable excess in the receipts over the expenditures. Since then the appropriations have been made from the general Treasury, and have not fallen on the patent fund. Now, inasmuch as the receipts have become less than the expenditures, and it is indispensable to the interests of the applicants for patents themselves that some change should be made by which the Department may keep up the clerical force necessary to transact their business with expedition, in which they are all interested, or else it must fall on the Treasury to sustain it, we are called upon to make this legislation. We have one of the two alternatives: either to diminish the clerical force, and thus interfere with the progress of business and affect injuriously the interests of patentees, or we must call upon the Treasury for the support of the Patent Office—one or the other, in failure of the adoption of this proposition.

Mr. HALE. I wish to interpose a question of order here. I think this is clearly a proposition for raising revenue. It proposes to tax the people. It is a measure, by the confession of the chairman of the Patent Office Committee, to raise revenue; and as such I take the ground that we have no right to originate it in the Senate.

Mr. YULEE. It is to regulate the fees of an office.

Mr. HALE. It is to raise revenue, confessedly.

Mr. YULEE. It is not to raise revenue for the Government. It is to regulate the fees which shall be paid by applicants for patents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire makes a question of order that this amendment is not within the constitutional power of the Senate, being a proposition, as he insists, to raise revenue within the meaning of the Constitution. The present occupant of the Chair will follow the example of the Vice President, and submit that question to the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not press the point, for this is not a measure to raise revenue. It is merely charging fees on the sale of the services of the officers of the General Government. The first bill constituting the Post Office Department originated in the Senate. It was construed not to be a bill raising revenue, but a sale of the services of the Government; for the service of transporting a letter, it received so much in exchange as a matter of bargain and sale; and so with regard to other fees. It is not like a bill laying duties on imports, which is a tax on the people. I hope the Senator will not press this point, for it would be cutting down our jurisdiction largely; and it would be found that a very large portion of our legislation had been unconstitutional, if his view be correct.

Mr. HALE. I listen to that appeal, and I withdraw the point of order; but I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think any question of order can be raised on this matter. I conceded that this proposition might be reported to the Senate; but when I came to hear the extent of it, and the reasons urged for placing it in this bill, I thought the Senator from Florida had better reserve it for consideration on the general bill. The Senator will recollect the reasons urged in committee for making this change in the fees and in the amount returned to the applicants, if patents should not be granted. It was stated that there was a necessity for a larger income, with a view to a new board of examiners, and various improvements in this establishment, which were contemplated in the bill we reported. It was in consideration of these improvements, and with a desire to meet them by the receipts of the Department, that the bill was reported by the committee. Here it seems, however, is a proposition to put in the taxing part of the bill, and leave out all the parts which were beneficial to inventors. I think the bill, as a whole, might have been an improvement; I so thought, at any rate, when it was before the committee; but I should not think it was proper or right to put into an appropriation bill all those portions of that measure which were burdensome to inventors, and leave out all that was considered to be to their advantage.

The Senator from Florida says the patent fund has fallen short some three or four thousand dollars in the last three quarters; and he states, at the same time, that there is an annual return to inventors of some $38,000 of fees in cases where patents are not granted. Then we are to cut off a return of $38,000 to supply a deficiency of $3,000. That does not look to me to be very appropriate. I say the propriety of the amendment depends altogether, in my judgment, on passing the general provisions of the bill reported by the Patent Office Committee; and I cannot conceive how the Commissioner, or anybody else, can expect to improve the revenues of that office at a period when persons do not apply for patents because of the hardness of the times, by increasing the amount exacted from them. This is one of those cases where, if anybody believes that low charges would increase the amount of business as they have done in the Post Office Department, it is a bad time to raise them when the portions of the country where these applicants generally come from are so much depressed as they are now.

I certainly would do anything in my power to improve the condition of this establishment; I have no factious opposition to any part of it; but I cannot conceive the propriety of pushing sections of bills into the general appropriation bill because there is no time to consider those bills themselves. That is a singular mode of legislation. I do not think our time is so precious as to require us to act in such a manner. If we cannot do the business of the session in six days, let us take six more. This is garbling the bill, and I think making it more unacceptable to the people than it would be to have the whole bill. I was told, and the committee was told, that the inventors themselves desired this change, and would be satisfied with this increase in the compensation they paid, with the other improvements; and with them, I take it for granted, they would have been satisfied. I know nothing about it any more than from the representations made to the committee, and I took them for granted and voted for the bill throughout in committee; and should have voted for this proposition here, did I not perceive, when I come to hear it, that it takes those particular features in the bill which impose burdens, without any of that portion which confers benefits. I hope the Senator from Florida will withdraw the proposition for the present. I do not see how we can legislate understandingly by taking a single section out of a bill and putting it into a general appropriation bill. It is a curious place for the Patent Office to look to for the laws to govern them in the transaction of their business. I do not mean to say that I shall vote against it if the Senator insists that it is necessary, but I think this is not the proper place nor the proper time to insert such an amendment.

Mr. YULEE. The charges proposed by the committee in the fees were reported at a very early day, and have been before the Senate for the last two or three months. I take it for granted, therefore, that if there had been any very great objection on the part of the patentees to the change in the fees, some opposition would have been urged on the Senate through their representatives, or we should have been informed of some objection. The bill to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers, contained various ameliorations, and, as we supposed, reforms, in the business of the Patent Office. Its passage would have been very desirable; but at this stage of the session, that is hopeless. The Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken in supposing that this section was at all a dependent section on any other section of that bill. This section was intended to meet a request of the Secretary of the Interior, contained in a paragraph of his annual report, which I will read now, and from which the Senate will perceive that there is a distinct and separate necessity for action upon this particular subject, independent of, and separate from, all the other subjects to which the general bill relates. The Secretary says:

"The law now authorizes a return, upon the rejection of an application, of two thirds of the fee required to be deposited by the applicant on presenting his claim. Of the $163,942 04 expended during the last three quarters, $27,939 99 was made up of fees restored to applicants, after the labor of examining their cases had been performed. There seems to be neither justice nor expediency in this requirement. Its consequence has been to bring into the office a large amount of business, frivolous in its character, and which seems, in fact, obtained but as an experiment upon its credulity. If it is desired that this bureau should be, as heretofore, supported by its own earnings, this feature of the financial administration of the office should be revised and reformed."

I will state further, as the Senate may not be cognizant of the fact, that I move this amendment at the request of the chairman of the committee, [Mr. Reid,] in behalf of the committee—his own health not permitting him to undertake the burden of its support and recommendation to the Senate—and, I believe, at the instance of the Department.

Mr. HUNTER. This is an excellent measure. I should like to vote for it as independent and separate legislation; but I am afraid to begin this process of legislating on the general appropriation bills. I think it will be safer to try it as a separate measure. I am unwilling to vote for general legislation in the general appropriation bills, if we can help it. I think the Senator from Florida had better withdraw his amendment, and try it as a separate measure. We shall evidently have a debate on it that will delay us; and we have but little time left to act on these bills.

Mr. YULEE. I shall be governed entirely by the views of the chairman of the committee at whose request I moved the amendment.

Mr. REID. I suppose the Senate understands this question, and the debate will not go further. I think we can get a vote on it in a few minutes. I do not see any necessity for debating it. It is a simple question.

Mr. SIMMONS. In reference to what fell from the Senator from Florida about the $27,000 returned in the last three quarters, I will say that, by the showing of the Senator, there were $27,000 returned, and there was $3,000 deficiency.

Mr. YULEE. Yes; but numerous clerks were discharged for the purpose of reducing the expenditures.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the business fell off very much, I suppose the duties of the clerks were not very onerous. I am not going to make a point on this matter; but I will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that when these fees were being fixed in committee they were fixed in reference to the increased expenditures of the Department, on account of the organization proposed by the general bill. I asked the Commissioner, on various occasions, if he could get along with such and such a fee; and he said that as the expenses now were, he could; but if the new machinery, as I call it, the new corps of officers were instituted, it would require more; and we put in more, in order to accommodate the fees to the increased expenditures and accommodations.

Now as to the complaints of those who represent inventors. I have had, since we reported the bill, a great many complaints made to me because I assented to the bill; but they did not alter my opinion about its propriety. I was satisfied that the bill, as a whole, would probably be an improvement on the old system; and, therefore, I went for it. Outside complaints have not changed my mind about it; but I think there is an impropriety in taking out a single section of such a bill, and ingrafting it into an appropriation bill. That is the only objection I have to the amendment. I think it is extremely unjust and improper to do so when it is manifest, by the statement of the Department, that this will prevent the return of some thirty-eight thousand dollars per annum to the inventors, whose applications are rejected, in order to supply a deficiency of three or four thousand dollars per annum. I cannot cipher in that way. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have an amendment to offer based upon a letter from the Secretary of State, and I offer the amendment in the language of his letter:

For the payment to Robert J. Walker, late Governor of Kansas Territory, for extraordinary expenses to which he was subjected in that Territory, $7,903 75, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The letter is accompanied by a statement of the account and part of the vouchers. There is also a statement on the files of the Department that no money will be claimed except that for which vouchers are furnished satisfactory to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State asks the appropriation, and I offer it in his language.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not this a private claim?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Clearly not.

Mr. HUNTER. It is on the same principle on which we decided in regard to the Minister at Paris.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is some explanation offered beyond what is furnished by the amendment, the Chair would not think it in order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The explanation is this: Mr. Walker, as Governor of the Territory of Kansas, incurred these expenditures, and has made his return to the State Department, and the Department sends a communication to the chairman of the Committee on Territories asking that committee to move this as an amendment to the appropriation bill, and the committee have directed me to offer the amendment in the language furnished by the Department. It is for contingent expenses incurred there necessarily under orders, and I suppose it is perfectly right. It has been usual to make such appropriations in the appropriation bills.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator whether it is made in compliance with any law of Congress? That would bring it within the rule.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is within the rule already, because it is reported by a committee, and recommended by the Department.

Several SENATORS. It is a private claim.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is not a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is any previous law authorizing the expenditures, the Chair will consider the amendment in order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The previous law provides for the contingent expenses of the Territory on the estimate of the proper Secretary; and I suppose it comes fairly within the law. It is for contingent expenses of the executive department of Kansas Territory. The law provides so much appropriation each year for contingent expenses of the executive department. [Laughter.] I confess I do not like this mode of trying to laugh down propositions. If gentlemen can answer them it is one thing; but to laugh them down, is another.

Mr. SLIDELL. I confess I do not at all like the tone of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Very well.

Mr. SLIDELL. It is extremely arrogant and offensive.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to say, in reply, that this laughing had proceeded in a manner that was exceedingly annoying. I never interrupt a gentleman on the floor. I will answer him after he concludes, if I think proper.

Mr. SLIDELL. Now, Mr. President, if the gentleman wants an answer he shall have it. I should be paying a very poor compliment to his good sense, at the expense of his ingenuousness and fairness, if he did not admit that this was a private claim. I was not alone. The remarks made by the Senator from Illinois attracted the universal attention of the Chamber, and I was very far from being the only individual that laughed at him. If the Senator from Illinois chooses to single me out for any criticisms of that sort, he will find me ready to respond on all occasions, at all times, and in every way.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It may be that the Senator from Louisiana was not the only one. He happened to sit by my side, and I can hear his remarks when I may not hear others. I thought they were not courteous and proper. I alluded to them in that way. That he is always responsible I have no question. There is nothing remarkable in that; and in that assurance he does not stand isolated as the only member in the body that holds himself so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides the amendment out of order, unless there be some other law than the law providing for a contingent fund of the Territory.

Mr. CLAY. I propose to offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill. It is an amendment that was agreed on, I think, in respect to dispensing with disbursing agents in future in the erection of public buildings.

Mr. DAVIS. That will probably involve debate; and I ask the Senator from Alabama to allow me to offer some amendments from the Committee on Military Affairs that will not produce discussion.

Mr. CLAY. I do not think my amendment will produce any debate; but I will not press it now. I wish to offer it as a concluding section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be informally passed over.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Military Affairs instructed me to report this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the number of clerks in the office of the Quartermaster General, as authorized by the existing laws, there shall be appointed in that office four clerks of class one as established by the act of the 3d March, 1853.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is that in order under the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then I have not a word to say.

Mr. HUNTER. This is a proposition to add clerks to the Departments. The present seems to me to be a bad time for that.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend from Virginia will allow me to inform him that this is the same proposition which passed both Houses last year, as I understand, but was lost by some mishap before a committee of conference. It is nothing new. If the country has fallen into a peculiar condition, I am afraid its peculiar condition will require more rather than fewer clerks in that Department which has the settlement of all extraordinary military expenses.

Mr. HUNTER. In the Army bill, which has not yet come up, there is a provision "to enable the Secretary of War to employ temporary clerks in the office of the Quartermaster General, and bounty land office, $5,000." This will be in addition to that.

Mr. DAVIS. That has nothing to do with this. The Quartermaster General does not want these clerks for the bounty land business that is thrown on him. These clerks are required, two of them for the regular business of his office, and two of them for that business which connects his office with that of the Third Auditor. I will only say that I know of no class in Washington, or out of it, who are worked as hard as the clerks of the Quartermaster General. I think he has long required, and when Secretary of War I recommended that he should have, these four additional clerks. The necessity exists to-day, as it did then. I leave the matter with the Senate.

The amendment was rejected; ayes twelve, noes not counted.

Mr. DAVIS. The next amendment is an appropriation to pay some officers who were employed to examine California claims growing out of the services of the Frémont battalion:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay each of the officers composing the board appointed under the sixth section of the act approved August 31, 1852, to adjudicate claims presented to them for funds advanced, and subsistence and supplies furnished, or taken for the use of Frémont's California battalion, in 1846, such sums of money for their services and expenses in the discharge of that duty, as he may deem reasonable and just; and that the same be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, The whole amount shall not exceed $1,500.

Mr. KING. Why, is not this a private claim? It is for services for which no law authorized compensation, performed some years since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The admissibility of the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, depends on the section of the law to which it refers.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether these gentlemen were not in the public service as officers of the Army receiving their regular compensation?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted without some further explanation.

Mr. DAVIS. I have very little explanation to make. These officers were employed here in the examination of these California claims, a portion of which, as the Senate may recollect, were accepted by Congress, and paid, on their report. They ask that a sum be given to them in the discretion of Congress, in consideration of their extra labor and extra expense. They were employed here about two years and a half, I think.

Mr. POLK. It strikes me that this is like any other private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is inclined to think, from the statement of the case, that it is a private claim within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. DAVIS. All the legislation I know of was that which created the board and that which accepted their report and appropriated money on it. If the amendment be out of order, I shall not press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think it is in order.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment from the same committee:

For the payment of three companies of volunteers called into the service of the United States in Kansas, in 1855, by the order of the Governor of that Territory, $8,668 14.

I will merely state that this is to pay three companies of volunteers, who were called out by Governor Geary, when he was Governor of Kansas Territory, employed to keep the quiet of the country there, ostensibly, or really, I do not know which. He has paid some portion of the money to those volunteers, and some portion of it is unpaid. The gross amount is stated in the amendment. So far as it has been paid, it is a claim of Governor Geary to have the money reimbursed to him. So far as it has not been paid, it remains due.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not sufficiently advised in regard to this matter to be prepared to oppose the amendment; but I know that many of the companies acting in Kansas Territory under the name of volunteers were performing anything but a part calculated to preserve the peace of the Territory. I regret that this proposition should be offered; and it exhibits the objection to this mode of legislation—coming in with propositions of this kind on appropriation bills, when we have no time to look into the facts. The Senator from Mississippi is aware that it is a delicate matter to appropriate money to pay the different classes of companies that were raised in Kansas Territory. I do not know that I should have any objection to the amendment if I understood the case; but I am sorry that it is presented in this form; and, as at present advised, I shall vote against it.

Mr. DAVIS. I have very little information to give to the Senator. His objection as to the peculiarity of the case is one that will apply to all other cases of the sort, and would apply to the case we were considering a short time ago, in relation to the State of Maine; so that, he will perceive, has no value. As to the special character of the case, I can only say that the Governor was authorized to call out the militia to preserve the peace of the Territory; and it appears he called out three companies. They were mustered into service, and remained some time in service. This amendment appropriates the amount necessary to pay the officers and men for the time they were in service. He has paid part of the money.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment to offer, as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $5,954 54 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the State of Georgia for that amount paid by said State to the companies of Captains John E. Price and Samuel Patterson, called out by the Governor of Georgia, in 1838, to protect the citizens against apprehended hostilities of the Cherokee Indians.

Mr. HUNTER. Does that case come within the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot answer these questions of the Senator from Virginia, unless he knows something of the law. The amendment itself specifies no authority.

Mr. IVERSON. This is a case in which my State is interested, and I trust I may be indulged in a remark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that a question of order is raised on the admissibility of the amendment.

Mr. IVERSON. The explanation of the case itself may possibly obviate the point of order. The Senator will remember that a treaty was made by the United States with the Cherokees, by which they agreed to emigrate to the West in the year 1838. As the time approached for their removal West they became exceedingly restive, and it was apprehended by the people of Georgia, and especially by the authorities of the State, that they would rise in arms, and probably commit depredations of a serious character against the lives and property of the citizens who inhabited that country—the people of the State of Georgia—following the example of the Creeks of 1836, who, after the time came for their emigration, rose in arms—a great number of them in Alabama and Georgia—and committed depredations of a great many kinds, and destroyed a great deal of property of the inhabitants. For the purpose of preventing anything of that sort, an act was passed by the Legislature of Georgia, which I will read:

"An act to provide for the protection of the citizens of the Cherokee country, and for the removal of the Cherokee and Creek Indians from the limits of this State.

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Georgia, in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That there shall be organized, in the counties of Union, Gilmer, Lumpkin, Murray, Walker, Floyd, Cass, Paulding, Cobb, Cherokee, and Forsyth, a company of sixty mounted men each, including officers, to be raised by volunteers, where no company is already organized and commissioned for that purpose.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That so soon as said volunteer companies are formed, they shall proceed to elect the usual company officers, and report the same to his Excellency the Governor, who shall issue the necessary commissions for each, accordingly.

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That said companies shall be organized, commissioned, and considered in the service of the State, when called out by the Executive of this State, unless a movement among the Indians should create such an emergency as will require, in the opinion of the commanding officer, immediate action, in which case he may call them forth with to the field, and report his reason to the Executive for having done so.

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted by the same authority aforesaid, That it shall be the duty of said commander to cooperate with the United States troops, if necessary, in removing all the Cherokee and Creek Indians from within the limits of this State, immediately after the 24th day of May next.

"SEC. 7. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the officers and men who may be called into service under the provisions of this act, shall receive for and during the time of actual service, such pay as is allowed to mounted men in the service of the United States, and that the Governor shall be and he is required to pay the same, as well as all other expenses incident to the whole of said service in this bill mentioned, out of any moneys which shall be appropriated for that purpose."

Some of those companies were called out. An act was passed appropriating $175,000 to reimburse the State for the payment of those volunteers, and those engaged in the Creek and Seminole wars; but the appropriation has been exhausted or has gone to the surplus fund. These men never received any compensation, although they were called into service, as will appear by the muster rolls I have before me, and were in service a month or two months—I do not recollect the precise time. During the session of the Legislature, in 1855-56, a provision was made by "An act to provide compensation to the commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, of certain companies of volunteers mustered into the service of the State of Georgia, by virtue of an act assented to on the 26th of December, 1837."

That is the act I have just read to the Senate. The act of 1856 provides:

"Whereas certain companies of mounted volunteers were raised, organized, and mustered into the service of the State of Georgia, in terms of an act assented to 26th December, 1837; and whereas certain of those companies have received no compensation: Therefore,

"SEC. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, of each of those companies who have at no time heretofore received compensation for said services, be, and they are hereby, authorized to receive from the State of Georgia the same pay as, by the Army regulations of the United States and the laws thereof, allowed to commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, respectively, in said Army of the United States."

Then it goes on to state the circumstances under which these persons may come forward and present their claims, and authorizes the Governor, by the appointment of an auditor, to receive their accounts, and audit them; and then, on the auditing of the account by this auditor, the treasurer is authorized by this act to pay the money. I will not trouble the Senate with reading the whole act. I merely state its provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator allow the Chair to inquire for the purpose of determining the question of order, whether it is based upon any law of the United States?

Mr. IVERSON. It is not based on any law of the United States that I know of; but I think that these claims from States have generally been considered by Congress as on a different footing altogether from claims of private individuals. I know such have been the precedents, and I am prepared to show two cases now before me. To an appropriation bill for the Indian department in 1850, there were two amendments proposed and passed by the Senate, and subsequently met the concurrence of the House of Representatives.

One was:

"To pay the Central Bank of Georgia, assignee of H. W. Jarnegan & Co., and others, the sum of $21,044."

That was a claim for spoliation committed by these very Creek Indians in 1836, on the property of H. W. Jarnegan & Co. That claim against the United States for spoliation was assigned by Jarnegan & Co. to the Central Bank of Georgia.

The Central Bank of Georgia belonged to the State of Georgia. The State owned the stock. It was a mere mode taken by the State to loan out its funds under the name of the Central Bank of Georgia. This claim of H. W. Jarnegan & Co. was assigned to the Central Bank of Georgia, and to the Indian appropriation bill of 1850 an amendment was appended paying to the State of Georgia the amount of this claim. That was put on because it then became a State claim—a claim due to the State of Georgia, although in the name of the Central Bank; but it was understood, ascertained, and admitted, that the claim really belonged to the State of Georgia, and not to a private corporation; and thereby it was admitted on the appropriation bill of 1850. There was another appropriation of this very character put on that bill. By the second section it is enacted:

"That the accounting officers of the United States Treasury be, and are hereby, directed to audit and settle the accounts of the companies of Texas mounted rangers, commanded by Captains B. F. Hill, J. M. Smith, J. Roberts, J. S. Sutton, S. P. Ross, H. E. McCulloch, J. W. Johnson, and C. Blackwell, who were retained or called into service by the Governor of said State, and out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the amount to be so paid shall not exceed $72,000."

There was precisely a similar case to the one now under consideration put upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HUNTER. In the House or the Senate?

Mr. IVERSON. Put on in the Senate, I presume. I know the Central Bank case was put in by the Senate, because I was here personally representing the case. I think the other was put in on an appropriation bill, by the Senate appropriating money to pay the Texas rangers that were called into the service of that State. This is a stronger case than that. In the case of the Texas rangers, the money was appropriated directly to pay the companies. The State of Texas had not paid those companies off, and it did not come here in the position of a State claim, but it was in fact a private claim of the Texas volunteers who were called into service by the State, and who had a claim against the Government. In the case now under consideration, the claim is on behalf of the State of Georgia; and as I have proceeded to show, she has already paid to these volunteer companies the amount due them. I hold in my hand the executive order under the act of 1856, that I have read, appointing Thomas M. Bradford auditor, to audit these accounts. It is unnecessary to read it to the Senate. I have it here, and any gentleman can read it if he desires. Here are the regular muster rolls which have been sent to the Senators and Representatives of Georgia. Here is the "pay roll of Captain John E. Price's company of mounted volunteers of Gilmer county, organized under an act of the General Assembly of the State of Georgia, assented to December 26, 1837, for the protection of the Cherokee country, and the removal of the Cherokee and Creek Indians, from the 25th May, 1838, to the 12th July, 1838, both days inclusive, including pay, rations, and forage." Then the names of the members of the company are put down with the amount due to each, the items amounting to $3,056 54. It is indorsed "audited and allowed: T. M. Bradford, auditor of the Cherokee claims."

There is also a receipt:

Received of John B. Trippe, Treasurer of the State of Georgia, $3,056 54, in full of this pay roll, 24th September, 1857.
JAMES A. GREEN,
Agent for the Company.

I have also the pay roll of Captain Patterson's company, verified in the same manner.

I do not think this can be considered a private claim in the ordinary acceptation of that term. Being from the State of Georgia, it stands upon a higher dignity, a higher footing, than an individual claim. It is one of those claims that Congress, of course, cannot object to allowing. Such claims have been allowed and paid to other States. Texas rangers, as I have already read to the Senate, and other companies of the State of Georgia, have been paid. An act was passed in 1842, appropriating money to pay the State of Maine for troops called out during the difficulties in the Aroostook country, and that amount has been refunded by the United States to the State of Maine. This is only calling on the Government to do precisely what it has ever done in similar cases heretofore. It is to refund to our State the amount she has actually expended in protecting her citizens from apprehended difficulties with the Indians. I show you precedents where precisely similar cases have been put on the appropriation bills. This very claim has been ruled out in the House of Representatives, I understand, with another that I have to offer, on the very ground that it is not a private claim. They ruled it off the Private Calendar on the ground that it was not a private claim; and here the objection is, that it is a private claim. In one House it is ruled out because it is not a private claim, and in the other it is to be ruled out because it is a private claim. It is like an honest man falling between two thieves, to be crushed between the two Houses, because the two Houses adopt different rules in the transaction of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia makes a question that this is a private claim within the 30th rule. Since the present occupant of the chair has been in the Senate, claims of States have always been regarded as private claims, and have been acted on upon private bill days as such. The Chair thinks, unhesitatingly, that this is a private claim within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senate made an exception in the case of the State of Maine this very day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was a case which fell within the exception, being provided for by a treaty. The 30th rule contains this language:

"Unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law, or a treaty stipulation."

The case of the State of Maine was based upon a treaty stipulation.

Mr. IVERSON. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair in this case; and I call for the yeas and nays on the appeal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. DAVIS. I think there is a very broad distinction between a debt due to a State which has interposed to perform the functions of the Federal Government in the absence of the capacity on the part of the Federal Government to do its duty, and claims which arise from an individual bringing his case before Congress, and asking indemnity. Our Government represents the States, derives its power from the States; and when it fails to perform any particular function and the States perform it and present the case before Congress, it ought not to be treated as a private claim. I do not think it respectful to a State to put it in the attitude of a mere claim, and treat the case of an account presented and audited by a State as that of a private claim, to be put on the Calendar of private bills, and treated as such.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas, 24, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Chandler, Collamer, Dixon, Durkee, Foot, Foster, Green, Hale, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Seward, Sidel, Trumbull, Wade, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Douglas, Gwin, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Jones, Rice, and Toombs—14.

So the decision of the Chair, ruling the amendment out of order, was sustained.

Mr. IVERSON. I have an amendment to offer from the Committee on Claims:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $35,555 42, with interest at the rate of six per cent. from the 1st day of January, 1853, be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to refund to the State of Georgia that sum, paid by said State, of Peter Trussivant, legal representative of Robert Trussivant, deceased, on account of supplies furnished by Robert Farquhar to certain troops of said State during the revolutionary war: Provided, That it shall not appear that said State has already received a credit for the purchase of said supplies in any settlement or appropriation heretofore made by the United States.

Mr. HUNTER. Does not this amendment come within the rule? Is it not a private claim?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It depends, in the opinion of the Chair, on what is the existing law on the subject. If there is no law to authorize it, it is not in order.

Mr. IVERSON. This claim arises out of the advances made by the State of Georgia during the revolutionary war.

Mr. COLLAMER. Has the Court of Claims passed on it?

Mr. IVERSON. No, sir, I do not know that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction of the case. It has never been presented to them. The papers before me show that in 1777, while the troops of the State of Georgia were stationed at Savannah, and in a great state of destitution, the Legislature of Georgia authorized the commissioners of the State to make a purchase from Robert Farquhar of supplies of clothing and other articles absolutely necessary for the troops in their destitute condition. They purchased a cargo from Mr. Farquhar, of clothing and other materials necessary for the supply of the troops, and agreed to pay him in continental money. The State, however, did not pay at the time specified, and subsequently Mr. Farquhar brought an action against the State of Georgia in the Federal courts, and recovered a judgment against the State for the amount of this indebtedness. The State, after that judgment, issued what were called funding certificates to the administrator of Mr. Farquhar for a portion of that indebtedness, amounting to some seven thousand pounds sterling. Some portion of those certificates were probably paid, at least we have no account of them, and they were probably taken up by the State of Georgia. Subsequently, however, the certificates were presented to the State to the amount of over five thousand pounds sterling; and by an act of the Legislature, passed in 1845, if I mistake not, that debt was recognized as a just and valid debt, and was provided for by the State of Georgia, issued in bonds, payable on the 1st day of last January, and the State has just accomplished the payment of the whole debt, with interest.

Now, sir, I think this is one of those cases which may very properly come under the obligations of the Constitution itself, and therefore may be considered as coming under the provisions of a law, because the Constitution is the highest law known to this country. It will be remembered that the Constitution declares that "All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation." This was an obligation which the Confederation owed to the various States to refund back all the expenses of the war; and it may be, as I have provided for in this amendment, that the State of Georgia has already received credit for these advances. That, of course, I cannot tell without a critical examination at the Treasury; but I have provided for that contingency by declaring in this amendment that if the State of Georgia has ever received anything for the supplies she furnished to these continental troops, she shall receive nothing more. But this is an obligation growing out of the revolutionary war; and was a debt which was due and owing to the State of Georgia by the Confederation; and by the adoption of the Constitution this obligation of the Confederation was transferred to the present Government of the United States. It has, therefore, in my opinion, the obligation of a law of the very highest character, and hence may legitimately be put on this bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. This case has additional claims and comes within the exception to the rule, because, by the assumption of the act of 1790, all moneys spent by the different States for the general or particular defense, were funded. All the States have been paid under that act, and this is a debt which the State of Georgia has paid since that time. I think the State of Virginia, by an act passed in 1832, received over a million dollars that she was compelled to pay subsequent to the act of 1790, being a fund that might have been funded, and provided for by the assumption act, and I believe the Treasury now pays all that class of cases. This case comes under that act, and is plainly within the Constitution. The other point the Senate has just decided, and that I suppose it is not necessary to argue, for certainly the decisions are on no principle. The case just decided was where a State, under the Constitution, had a right to call out troops, and keep them in her pay when the danger was so imminent that she could not wait. The Constitution declares, that no State shall have troops in her pay without the consent of Congress except the danger is imminent. The point in that case was, whether the danger was so imminent that she ought to have called out the militia. If it was not, they ought not to have been paid at all; if it was, they ought to have been paid, because it was under the supreme law of the land. This is under the assumption act. As stated by the Senator from Mississippi, they are not private claims to go on the Private Calendar, especially as they are connected with the public defenses.

Mr. COLLAMER. Has the Chair decided this amendment to be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair predicated his opinion upon the custom of the Senate, which he has stated has been uniform since he has been here, to regard claims from States as private claims, to be considered on private-bill days. He felt himself bound by that uniform action of the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. I admit there may be claims of States that would be private claims, but non constat that all State claims are private claims. Some individuals have claims that are not private claims, because they are in pursuance of law. The Senate may have decided that a claim of a State may be a private claim; but to hold that all claims of States are private claims is a very different thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about stating his views, and he will do so very briefly. The practice of the Senate has been to regard all claims from States as private claims, and to be acted upon as on the Private Calendar. The rule rejects all private claims except those which fall within these two classes: claims to carry out the provisions of an existing law, and claims to carry out a treaty stipulation. These are admissible upon general appropriation bills, notwithstanding they are private claims. The Chair does not see that the amendment presented falls within either of the exceptions, and therefore thinks it is excluded by the rule.

Mr. IVERSON. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair, and ask for the yeas and nays upon it. I do not see that this is a different case in principle from the one presented a while ago from the State of Maine.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand this to be a claim that is embraced within the provisions of the Constitution; that it originated in the war of the Revolution. The debt was assumed by the United States at the close of the Revolution and the adoption of the Constitution; and if the provision is to pay no more than what may be found due to the State of Georgia, if this has never been a credit to that State as part of her quota furnished as one of the members of the Confederation, I think the debt was assumed when the Constitution was adopted; and such a debt would be a singular private claim.

Mr. COLLAMER. I must correct what has been said in relation to the assumption of the debts of the Revolution. The Confederation owed none of the private debts of the States, never assumed them, and was under no legal obligation to pay them. The Confederation made such requisitions on the States as it thought proper, and the States did as they pleased about responding to those requisitions; they generally did respond if they were able to furnish the money and men which constituted their quota; but the separate debt which each State incurred in the prosecution of the revolutionary war was not a claim at all upon the Confederation, nor was it assumed by the Constitution. It was entirely assumed by the act of 1790, to which the Senator from Georgia referred. It was assumed, then, in this way: the funding act of 1790, after the adoption of the present Constitution, provided that a settlement should be made with each State; the States brought in their accounts, and they went in with the Confederation expenses; the whole was apportioned among the States, and those to whom a balance fell received funding certificates. But the idea that a debt incurred by each State in the Revolution was a debt of the Confederation, was not so. They were not assumed by the Constitution. It became a very debatable point whether they should be taken into the final settlement under the act of 1790, whether that act should stand as General Hamilton recommended, to take in all the State debts as well as the United States debt, and have the whole of it funded together, and the balance struck. If this was a debt against the Confederation, which came within the article of the Constitution which the honorable Senator has read, it would be a clear case, and the United States were bound, by the very terms of the Constitution, to pay it. It was because they were not bound to do it that all the debate was occasioned in regard to the funding act of 1790.

In relation to the merits of this case, notwithstanding what I have said, I do not undertake to say there is no merit in this claim; it may be that there is. The only question is, whether the act of 1790 was such an act as makes the amendment now proposed an amendment to carry out an existing law. The Senator from Georgia, last up, says that under the act of 1790, the debts of the several States were assumed, and therefore this amendment is to carry out that act. It may be that is tenable ground; I am not sufficiently acquainted with questions of order to say whether it is or not; but here is the difficulty with that: that act of 1790 did not provide that the United States should assume those debts; it only provided that a settlement should be made, and each State should bring in its expenses, and then they struck the balance, to see whether the State was on the debtor or creditor side of the account. The account was stricken long since and settled, and all the States that had balances due them have been paid—I do not say that those who had balances against them ever paid their debts.

Mr. TOOMBS. Vermont, for instance. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLLAMER. Vermont was never settled with. I do not say, as the honorable gentleman would intimate, that the reason was that Vermont was a debtor State. That might be true, on the foundation which they took to settle it, and the gentleman knows what that was because his State suffered as much as we did. The apportionment was made on the population of 1790, which was unjust; and whether the State of Vermont would not have come out debtor in that business I do not know. But, after what has been the experience, we might as well have come out debtor as not, because none of them paid anything. Those who fell in debt have never paid, and it would be no hurt if we had settled it; but, for fear that we should have a balance to pay, our fathers did not present the claim. [Laughter.]

But it is not true that even under the act of 1790 the United States ever undertook to pay the State debts for the expenses of the Revolution. They did not become the debts of the individuals to whom they were due, against the United States. The United States did not assume the debts themselves. They agreed to settle with the States for what they should settle with the individuals. Now, I do not know but that this may be a claim which was good against Georgia, and which she has subsequently paid, as I understand. I do not know whether it went into that settlement or not; but I insist that the amendment, as proposed, is to change the whole order of business, and to make it out that we are to pay every debt, unless it did go into the settlement. The presumption is, that the settlement having been made, and every State having settled its claims, everything was settled.

Mr. TOOMBS. This claim is part of the public history of the United States. The State of Georgia did not pay it until 1845, and therefore it could not have come into the settlement.

Mr. COLLAMER. That is a non sequitur, as I view it. It was totally immaterial whether the States had paid the expenses brought into the settlement or not. A large part of them were not paid at that time. They were debts assumed by the United States, which had been existing against the States, and were carried into account by the States.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator does not understand me. I say that this was a disputed debt. A suit was commenced in the district court of the United States; for the State did not acknowledge it for a long time afterwards.

Mr. COLLAMER. It might be. The gentleman talks about a lawsuit against the State.

Mr. TOOMBS. It was the case of Chisholm, executor of Farquhar, vs. the State of Georgia. The question was raised in 1795, and brought about an amendment of the Constitution of the United States. It had so much celebrity that the Senator, as a lawyer, ought to know of it.

Mr. COLLAMER. I know they had a case of that kind; but I did not know this was it.

Mr. TOOMBS. This was it. The case of Chisholm, executor of Farquhar, vs. the State of Georgia, in which it was decided that an individual of one State might sue another State.

Mr. COLLAMER. A claim may have been existing against the State of Georgia which claim they then did not know of, or if they did know, they disputed whether it was contracted by authority, and therefore did not bring it into the final settlement. Such a case as that may exist, and if they have been constrained ultimately to pay it, we ought to pay; but this is a matter which should go to the proper authority. It should go to the Court of Claims, and these facts should be shown. The general presumption that all these matters were settled in the final settlement provided for in the act of 1790 should be overcome by direct and affirmative proof on the trial, showing that it did not come in, and that it remains against them a just debt that they had to pay, or ought to pay, which I think is the same thing, for I do not believe any statute of limitation should be urged on such a matter. This amendment is urged here that we shall provide for paying this bill unless it shall appear affirmatively that it has been settled. The burden of proof should be the other way. The claimant should, by direct and satisfactory proof, overcome the presumption of settlement, and on the other hand prove that it was not included in the settlements. If we open this account, there is no knowing what is to become of the final settlements made with the Old Thirteen; they are all to be opened again. I do not mean to say that if a State can show there was a just debt which was not settled, they proving the debt, it ought not to be provided for; but the whole order is reversed in this proposition. To my mind this claim should be presented to the Court of Claims. They have had a great many cases about these very final settlement certificates, and have passed on some of them. Upon proper litigation and proper showing, it may be that this is a just claim; but for anything that yet appears here, we cannot know whether it is or is not. I think it should be on the side of the claimants to rebut the presumption which I say arises from the settlement; and you should not reverse the order so as to require the Government to pay it unless it shows affirmatively that the claim has not been paid.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bigler, Cameron, Chandler, Colamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Green, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, King, Pugh, Reid, Seward, Shildell, Thompson of Kentucky, Trumbull, Wade, and Wright—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clay, Davis, Gwin, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Polk, Rice, Thomson of New Jersey, and Toombs—15.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained; and the amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. IVERSON. I have another amendment to offer in behalf of States; and I suppose it will be ruled out of order, because it is in behalf of States:

And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and directed to examine the accounts between the United States and the several States which have been, or may be, allowed interest upon claims against the United States, which have accrued during or since the war of 1812 with Great Britain, and apply in such examination the provisions and principles of the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1857, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1858," and that any money found upon such reexamination to be due any State, shall be paid to such State out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. That is clearly within the rule, it seems to me, and out of order. This is an amendment to provide for the different States to make an additional allowance—one to which they are not entitled under the law—under the principle of some act previously passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia be good enough to refer to the law stated in the amendment?

Mr. IVERSON. If it is a private claim I can only say that the last Congress—of which the Senator from Virginia was a member, and most of the gentlemen who were present who were members—committed the same error in the act of 1857. The twelfth section of that act is in these words:

"And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reexamine the account between the United States and the State of Maryland, as the same was, from time to time, adjusted under the act passed on the 13th May, 1823, entitled 'An act authorizing the payment of interest due to the State of Maryland,' and on such reexamination to assume the sums expended by the State of Maryland for the use and benefit of the United States, and the sums refunded and repaid by the United States to the said State, and the times of such payments as being correctly stated in the account, as the same has heretofore been passed at the Treasury Department; but in the calculation of interest due under the act aforesaid the following rules shall be observed, to wit: interest shall be calculated up to the time of any payment made. To this interest the payment shall be first applied, and if it exceed the interest due, the balance shall be applied to diminish the principal: if the payment fall short of the interest, the balance of interest shall not be added to the principal so as to produce interest. Second, interest shall be allowed the State of Maryland on such sums only on which the said State either paid interest or lost interest by the transfer of an interest-bearing fund."

That is the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1857, making appropriations to defray certain civil expenses of the Government, precisely the act now before the Senate. That was a provision changing the mode of computing interest. Many of the States, nearly all the States who have made advances to the General Government, have had acts passed by Congress binding this Government to pay the principal and interest—my own State, South Carolina, Maine, Maryland, and other States. This is only a provision as to the mode in which interest shall be computed. It is not a private claim. It is a regulation, a rule by which, in the computation of interest, the accounting officers shall be governed by certain principles, which principles are undoubtedly correct, such as have been applied in every State of the Union and everywhere else, except by the accounting officers of the Treasury of this Government. They have applied a rule, that they calculate interest on the amount of advances made by the State up to the time of the settlement, and then take the payments made back to the State, and calculate interest on those sums up to the same time, and strike a balance. That is the mode of computing interest of the accounting officers of the Treasury, which is clearly incorrect, not recognized by the laws of any State of the Union. The laws everywhere make the calculation precisely upon the basis applied in the twelfth section of the act of the last Congress to the State of Maryland, and that is correct and proper. It is not in my opinion, I do not see how the gentleman from Virginia can torture it, nor do I see how anybody can torture it, into a private claim, unless he believes what was announced from the Chair, that any claim from a State is a private claim.

Mr. HUNTER. This is to reopen all the accounts settled with the States for advances made, and to settle with them on a different principle from that on which they have been settled with, and with which they were entirely satisfied. I know there have been two exceptions; but I believe they originated under peculiar circumstances—one in Maryland, and one in Alabama. This is now to carry the principle of those cases to all State claims ever adjudicated between the States and the General Government; and it does come, it seems to me, within the decision made by the Chair, and sustained by the Senate. At any rate, it is a subject which ought to be brought upon a separate bill, and not in any appropriation bill. I raise the objection that it is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will beg the indulgence of the Senate to state a word or two in consequence of the act that has been read, and hopes he will not be considered out of order. The provision in the act of 1857, referred to by the Senator from Georgia, was reported from the Finance Committee by the present occupant of the chair as an amendment to the bill of last year; and the recollection of the Chair is, that that was an open account between the State of Maryland and the United States; that there was an existing dispute as to the mode of computing the interest under the law directing the payment; and that, to settle the basis on which the interest should be cast, the amendment was made to the appropriation bill last year. As the Chair understands this amendment, however, it proposes to open all the accounts that have been closed with the States of the Union, and to make a readjustment of interest on the same basis.

Mr. IVERSON. No, sir. It applies the principles and provisions of the twelfth section of the act of last year, on which Maryland was settled with, to the other States. It does nothing more than that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator allow the Chair to ask him if he is correct in stating that it applies to accounts of cases between the United States and States, which are closed?

Mr. IVERSON. No, sir; no more than was the case of the State of Maryland. The act in relation to Maryland directs that:

"The proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reexamine the accounts between the United States and the State of Maryland as the same was from time to time adjusted under the act," &c.

That proposed a reexamination of an account which had been adjusted, did it not? Precisely. Whether the account had been closed or not, whether it had been adjusted or not, whether it was still in existence or not, this act directed the accounting officers to reexamine the account for interest, and make the computation on a particular basis. It was done in the case of Alabama. I desire to apply the same rule to all the States. It is just, equitable, and proper, if you apply it to two States, that you shall give it to all. I do not know that my State is interested in any great extent. The State of South Carolina is interested, and her account has not been settled. The comptroller of that State, in his report to the Governor, made a few years ago, states the difficulties between the accounting officers of the United States and himself. That account is still lying open. The State of South Carolina protested against the settlement by its officers at the time. This amendment will meet that case, and authorize the accounting officers to readjust the accounts of South Carolina on the basis applied to the State of Maryland. This amendment simply directs that the provisions and principles applied under the twelfth section of the act of 1857 to Maryland, shall be applied to all the States. It does not reopen accounts.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator from Georgia give us some information on one or two points suggested by his amendment? First, in what way this matter comes before the committee of which he is the organ. Is there a claim from the States? Has it been referred to the committee on behalf of the States?

Mr. IVERSON. Yes, sir; a memorial from the State of South Carolina was referred to the Committee on Claims, and it was upon that memorial that the committee have predicated their amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. A general section?

Mr. IVERSON. Yes, a general section, believing that it was equitable to apply the rule to all the States.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The next question I would desire to ask the Senator is: if he has any idea what the amount involved in this appropriation will be?

Mr. IVERSON. I have no idea. The comptroller of the State of South Carolina alleges in his report to the Governor of that State, which I have in my hand, that in the settlement between him and the accounting officers of the United States, the State of South Carolina lost $55,000 in interest. That is the difference between the mode of computation of the accounting officers, and the mode of accounting as regulated by the act in relation to Maryland. I do not know how other States may be affected. I do not suppose the amounts are very large. I expect that the amount of the State of South Carolina is larger than that of any other State.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It does not seem to me that this section is liable to the objection made by the Senator from Virginia. This is not to pay a private claim of the State of South Carolina. It is a general rule by which the Treasury is to be guided in its settlements with the States; and we having already sanctioned the payments to some of the States on this basis, this section provides that even in cases which have already been closed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, not to the satisfaction of the State, as the Senator from Virginia suggests, but to the dissatisfaction of the State, the account shall be reopened and examined, and settled according to principles which we have declared to be just. The idea of applying a payment made at any time by the Government of the United States to the extinction of a part of the capital of the debt due to a State whilst there remains interest unsatisfied, is contrary to all principle, to every rule by which computation of payments is made. The State of South Carolina having presented this memorial, if the proposition of the Senator from Georgia now was to pay that claim, I admit it would be a private claim; but the committee, instead of treating this as a private claim, preferred to report a section which amounts to a general law, for the very reason that they are not willing to act upon the claim of one State as a private claim. My State has no interest in this question; but I do think that justice requires that the adjustment of these accounts with the States should be made all upon the same footing; and as it has already been made on this footing with the States of Alabama and Maryland, I cannot conceive why South Carolina should be made an exception, or any other State which has had accounts to adjust with the General Government. It is a general rule now provided by Congress for the settlement of accounts with States, and the mode of adjusting the interests that arise in accounts with States. It is not an appropriation for the benefit of the State of South Carolina.

The committee, it appears to me, have carefully avoided reporting a private claim, and have ex industria changed the legislation into a general law. I do not see that it comes under the rule of the Senate which has been cited, and I shall vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Inasmuch as authority is given by the rules to take the opinion of the Senate on questions of this sort, and inasmuch as the facts in this case are disputed, the Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the matter has been so clearly and so well stated by the Senator from Louisiana, that really there can be no doubt about it. Certainly there is none in my mind; and I have only risen for the purpose of inviting the attention of the Senate to its action on other cases which I think are very similar, if not entirely parallel to this. We pass pension laws, in which we prescribe the time of service; we prescribe the rules which shall entitle a person to a pension. We find, outside of that class of pensions, a very large class of cases that come very nearly up to the rules we have prescribed; they come here, and what is done? Our Committee on Pensions recommend this special case, and that special case, and they are passed. By and by we see there are so many special cases that we remove the limitation by general law, and it has been done in appropriation bills, precisely in the way now proposed.

I will cite an instance. We removed the limitations as to the time or mode of proof required at the Department, and that takes in a whole class of cases. True, if each one came here and asked action separately by itself, it would be a private claim; but you make a general law to include all cases. That is precisely this case.

I refer now to an instance in my mind, with regard to those who drew pensions for revolutionary service. You prescribed, originally, that only those widows of revolutionary soldiers should draw a pension who were married previous to 1783, I think. Then you limited it to 1794; and then you limited it to 1800, because you found such a large number of cases coming so nearly up to the time, that it was deemed advisable to extend it. The last amendment, I recollect distinctly, because I drew it, was ingrafted on an appropriation bill in 1853, and it was to meet a class of special cases here pending.

Mr. GREEN. I will inquire when the rule is to apply under the resolution adopted this morning, for a recess, to-day or to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To-morrow.

Mr. GREEN. Then I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that we shall get through with this bill.

Mr. GREEN. We cannot get through, because I have an amendment to offer, and so have others.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us hear them.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate receive the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia?

The amendment was received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment is a proposition which certainly ought to receive some examination before it is passed. We ought to know how much money it will take from the Treasury; we ought to know what changes it is to make in the principles on which accounts have been settled with States. I apprehend it will be found that it makes other changes besides the one which has been referred to by the Senator from Louisiana—the mode of stating the account as to interest and principal. I believe there have been some rules as to whether interest shall be allowed to States at all, and upon which settlements have been made with most of the States, and that will be changed if this provision be adopted; and it is probable that under the change it will be found that very large sums will be due to the States of this Union. I have no doubt that most of the old States would come in if this amendment be adopted, and some of them might claim very largely. This is eminently a subject for separate legislation. We ought to know what changes are made. We ought to know whether, under this amendment, we shall not pay to some States interest on claims on which interest has never been voted.

The first deviation, if I remember, was in the case of Alabama; but there it was determined to make certain allowances of interest, because the State had paid the interest, because it had sold stocks, as was done in Maine; and an exception was made in the case of Alabama for that reason. I believe that was the case, also, in Maryland, where the allowance was on the principle of the Alabama case. Unless you treat this as having arisen out of those exceptional circumstances, you will reopen all the settlements that have been made with the States; and you will pass out of the Treasury a large sum of money, in my opinion. I speak, though, only from general recollection; I have had no time to examine the amendment particularly; but I am afraid it will be found, when we come to see the effect of it—if it should be adopted—that it will go much further than any of us suppose.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Virginia, if he would take the pains to read the amendment, would see that it is not open to the objections he has stated. It does not provide, if I read it rightly, for the payment of any interest to a State, in any case whatever, where interest has not been allowed heretofore. It does not make any new claim in that respect. The whole amount of it is simply this: the Treasury, as I understand, has adopted the rule that where a certain amount of debt is owing to a State, and a certain amount of interest has accumulated on that debt, and where the principal thus owing bears interest, and the interest thus owing does not, if the claim is paid in part, they apply that part payment to the principal which bears interest, instead of to the interest which does not, thus reversing the rule which exists in every State in the Union, and operating most unjustly towards the States themselves. For instance: suppose a debt is due to a State, which debt bears interest, and by the law at the same time there is an amount of interest accumulated upon it which does not bear interest—let us call one $50,000 and the other $30,000—the $50,000 bearing interest, and the $30,000 not bearing interest. The Government, in these circumstances, instead of paying the whole, pay up $30,000. Then, instead of applying it to the interest which does not bear interest against the Government, and which the State has paid, they apply it to the principal, reducing the claim which bears interest to $20,000, and leaving the State to lose its interest on $30,000.

Mr. TOOMBS. It is worse than that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is bad enough. The provision is, in regard to all these claims which the States have where the United States will not pay accumulating interest, as they ought to do, that the partial payment shall first go to sink the interest that is due. If a man owes me money, and interest has been accumulating year after year which he has failed to pay, and especially if I am in debt for it, as is very often the case with the States, he ought to indemnify me; but the rule adopted by the Treasury is worse than that. They say they will not only not indemnify me, and leave me to pay my interest, but when they do make a payment, it shall not go to sink the interest, but to sink the principal, leaving the interest to stand. That is unjust. It does not apply in the case of any private claim anywhere, but has been arbitrarily adopted by the accounting officers of the Treasury. In the case of Maryland, which was precisely similar, Maryland remonstrated, and at the last session Congress said that account should be adjusted upon proper principles—the same principles that exist in every State of the Union between man and man—that where principal and interest are due, and the Government paid any part, that payment should be applied to the interest first; if it paid it off, very well; if it overbalanced it, the balance should be so much towards the principal. This was on the common, ordinary principles of justice.

In the case of the State of South Carolina, if I understand it, the officers went so far as to keep an account with the State, crediting her with interest accumulating on the principal, and if there was any left they then took the part they had paid, cast interest on that, and then offset the two! That is to say, they paid their principal in part, and retained to themselves the right of offsetting the interest which accrued on their own payment of money due to the State, to pay the rest of the debt with! [Laughter.]

It does not do to make it a matter of account current between the two, because the account is really all on one side; but the Treasury officers apply the principle of accounts current to it as if so much was due from Maryland and so much from the United States, and cast interest on both and then offset the two; but, instead of that, it is all due from the United States. They say, "we will owe you the interest; we will pay you part of the principal; we will cast interest on the money we allow you, and pay you interest with it." That is the principle they have adopted. This is simply to set that right, and to say that where these things exist, the Government shall do what is proper. I submit that the argument of the Senator from Virginia is inapplicable, in any sense of justice and decency, to say we ought to inquire first how much money this will amount to before we pay it. Why, sir, what difference will it make how much money it amounts to? If there be more or less, the Government ought to pay, and pay it at once, without the slightest hesitation, and calculate the interest upon proper principles.

Mr. HUNTER. When we are bestowing gratuities we have a right to inquire the amount. If we have settled with the States to their satisfaction, it seems to me we have discharged all our debts, and if we are asked to give them more—and that, too, not on the application of many of them—I think we may very well inquire how much is to be disposed of by way of gratuity? We are asked to disturb a mode of settlement that has been practiced for years, and with which the States have heretofore been perfectly satisfied.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Maryland provision came from the Senator's own Committee on Finance, and was agreed to by the Senate. If it was proper in that case, why is it not in every other?

Mr. HUNTER. I have stated that was made under peculiar circumstances that I do not recollect perfectly. The Senator from Maryland can explain them. It will be found, I think, that they do not apply to other cases.

Mr. PEARCE. I will state the facts in relation to the claim of Maryland. The State of Maryland advanced large sums of money to the Government of the United States during the war of 1812, and some time after the close of that war the United States reimbursed the principal. In 1826, an act was passed for the payment of interest to the State of Maryland, and the interest was paid upon a mode of calculation novel to me, though I find it has been adopted as the usual rule of computation in such cases at the Treasury. That is to say, having determined to settle the accounts, and commenced to make payments on it, the first payment was applied to the reduction of the principal, the interest being made to stand aside; and so payments were made from time to time, until the whole of the principal was liquidated; and then they went back to the period when they began to pay, and ascertained what the amount of interest due at that time was, and paid that sum without any interest on it. In 1829, or 1830, an act was passed through both Houses of Congress authorizing the payment of interest to the State of Maryland upon the proper principle, such as prevailed in mercantile transactions, and it was vetoed by General Jackson, and the veto came in at the next session of Congress, on the ground that it was disturbing the usual mode of settlement. [Laughter.]

After I became a member of the Senate, I received this claim of Maryland, under instructions from my State Legislature, and I introduced a general bill, providing for the liquidation of the interest due to the different States of the Union, which had made such advances in a body. It was objected to by a gentleman, then a Senator from Alabama, who preferred that each State should have its own claim rest on its own basis. He introduced another bill for the benefit of the State of Alabama, and it was passed through the Senate, and under that bill the State of Alabama was paid according to the old mode of computation. The Senate will remark, however, that this rule was always adopted in the allowance of interest. The Government of the United States never paid interest, except where the State had paid interest itself upon its advance, or had lost interest, and Alabama obtained her allowance of interest because the funds which she had applied to aid the General Government were taken from a bank which was her property, and she had thus been obliged to contract her line of discounts, and so lost interest. The State of Maryland obtained interest because she had liquidated the bonds which she had given to her creditors for the money she applied for the service of the Government during the war, by selling United States stock of which she was owner, thus transferring to the liquidation of this obligation an interest-bearing fund. The principle was that the United States would pay no interest, except where interest had actually been paid or lost by the State.

As the State of Maryland came within that category, she was entitled to interest; and after long years of dispute on the subject, the Congress of the United States at the last session passed the act which has been referred to, providing for the reexamination and readjustment of the account of the State of Maryland, and directing that the interest should be calculated according to certain rules laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States for that purpose; that is to say, first applying the payments to the interest, and when the interest was all liquidated, then applying them to the principal; and under that act I think the State of Maryland received after the last session of Congress about two hundred and seventy thousand dollars. There are several States interested in like manner, I do not now recollect how many; but when I originally introduced the bill, I carefully noticed the States interested and their number, and no doubt the amount will be very large. Delaware, South Carolina, Virginia, and several other States, are interested, and the amounts very large; but I do not know that magnitude of the obligation is any defense against the passage of an act for payment according to the principles of equity which have been applied to the State of Maryland. This is an inconvenient time, it is true, for us to be dunned for this money; but I think we ought to settle fairly, if we do nothing else. If we cannot pay the money, we ought at least to acknowledge the obligation.

Mr. PUGH called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Colamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Hamilton, Hammond, Harlan, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Jones, Kanedy, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Rice, Seward, Simmons, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bigler, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clingman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Pugh, Reid, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, and Trumbull—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. I have another amendment to offer, to come in at the end of the first section:

That the several acts granting twenty per cent. additional pay to the clerks employed at the Washington navy-yard be so construed as to embrace the inspector of timber in the service at the time of the passage of said acts.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that a private claim?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. IVERSON. Then I have nothing more to say. I have another amendment to offer, to come in after line two hundred and fifty-eight. The provision is:

"For binding twenty-four hundred copies of Code of the District of Columbia, at seventy five cents per copy, authorized by act approved 3d March, 1855, $1,875."

I propose to add this amendment:

And that all the ruling and binding for the several Executive Departments shall be executed by practical and competent bookbinders, to be appointed by the head of the Department.

We have already, in a previous bill, directed that all printing shall be done by practical printers; and all engraving by practical engravers. I wish to put the binding on the same footing, and regulate and control it so that it may not be given to special favorites or persons who are to be benefited by these appointments. Let it go to practical mechanics.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. How are they appointed now?

Mr. IVERSON. At the discretion of the heads of Departments, and given out as they choose.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. That is the way they are to be appointed by the amendment, I understand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But they are to be practical bookbinders.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I wish to offer an amendment:

And be it further enacted, That when any district judge is, or shall be designated and appointed, under and by virtue of the act entitled "An act to provide for holding the courts of the United States in the case of the sickness or disability of the judges of the district courts," approved July 29, 1830, and under and by virtue of the act amendatory of the same, approved on the 2d day of April, 1852, to perform the duties and exercise the powers in said acts specified, there shall be allowed and paid to each district judge, as a compensation for such service, in addition to his expenses, as provided by said acts, the further sum of eight dollars per day, while engaged therein; which, when certified by the clerk and the district attorney, shall be paid by the marshal, with such expenses, and shall be allowed him in his accounts with the United States.

Mr. HUNTER. This is legislation. I do not know where we shall stop. We might as well take up the Calendar, and put all the bills on the appropriation bills.

Mr. DIXON. I think this is in order. It is carrying out the provisions of the laws referred to in the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will state whether the committee have ever agreed to this amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We had the subject under consideration in the Committee on the Judiciary, and we came to the conclusion that we would not recommend it to the Senate, after a full discussion in committee. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PUGH,] I think, was in favor of reporting an amendment of this kind to the appropriation bill, but he was the only member of the committee who agreed to it; and, upon full discussion in the committee, the proposition of the Senator from Ohio was rejected. I think the Senator will remember it.

Mr. PUGH. I was never in favor of putting any proposition on an appropriation bill for legislation. That is a mistake of the Senator from Louisiana; but I was in favor of increasing the salary of the district judge for Connecticut, because that judge was compelled to go to the city of New York, and hold court almost as much as the judge of that district. I am now in favor of increasing his salary, and increasing it largely; but as to this particular proposition, which I suppose is meant to cover his case, I do not think I can go for general legislation on this bill.

Mr. GREEN. I call for the reading of the first part of the amendment again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. GREEN. My object in calling for the reading of that was to see whether it would have a tendency to reach back. There was a case referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, the design of which was to reach back and pay a certain judge who had held a certain post. We thought it a private claim. The law which authorizes this transfer of jurisdiction specially says that the judges shall be paid their expenses, as certified by the clerk, under a certain statement of facts, without any addition to their salaries; and it was our opinion, and it is mine now as an individual, that their salary is enough. If, however, the salary is not enough, we ought to add to the salary, and not to undertake, in an indirect method, to increase the compensation the law authorizes. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Virginia to make a question of order on this point.

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir. I do not see how I can raise a question of order. I say it is legislation, and we ought to vote it down for that reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have a few amendments to offer from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. First, I move to insert, at the end of the first section:

For filling up the grounds belonging to the United States south of, and immediately adjoining, the present Capitol structure, $30,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is manifest that we cannot get through with this bill to night; and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to—ayes sixteen, noes not counted.

Mr. BRIGHT. This appropriation is one of many recommended by the Secretary of the Interior as embracing an improvement very important to be made. The Committee on Public Buildings, however, agreed to but two of the great number of recommendations—only those that they considered indispensably necessary at this time. This is the only speech I have to make.

Mr. CLAY. What is the necessity?

Mr. GREEN. I would inquire if it is not proposed to buy out certain lands to enlarge the grounds; and whether we ought not to consider the whole matter together? This is to fill up south. I would prefer postponing the whole matter until we see how we are to enlarge the grounds.

Mr. BRIGHT. Whether the public grounds be enlarged or not, this is an improvement necessary and proper to be made. I have no doubt that if the public grounds be enlarged we shall go, at least, as far as C street. If we should go as far as C street, the improvement contemplated by this amendment will have to be made.

Mr. MASON. What is the object?

Mr. BRIGHT. To fill up the low lands adjoining the Capitol.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have another amendment to offer.

For making improvements provided for in the fifteenth section of the city charter, approved May 15, 1830, and the twelfth section of the amended charter, approved May 17, 1848, $5,000.

Mr. HUNTER. What is that?

Mr. BRIGHT. The laws referred to in the amendment provide that whenever the owners of property, private individuals, shall go on to improve their grounds, the Government, if owning on the opposite side of the street, shall make a corresponding improvement. It is an appropriation to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of carrying out the existing laws referred to in the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have another amendment from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to add at the end of the first section:

That the President of the United States cause the sum of $6,000 to be advanced to Clark Mills, in addition to the sum already advanced, out of the $50,000 appropriated by the act of January 25, 1833, to erect at the capital of the nation, an equestrian statue of Washington, on the personal application and receipt of the said Mills: Provided, That the said Mills furnish the Secretary of the Interior with security for the completion of the statue as the Secretary may require.

Mr. Mills has made his own speech in favor of this appropriation, in the shape of a memorial, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled:

By an act of Congress passed on the 25th January, 1853, $50,000 were appropriated, to enable the President of the United States to employ the undersigned to erect an equestrian statue of Washington at the capital.

In the contract drawn up between the President and the undersigned, and signed by them, it was stipulated that only $20,000 should be paid to the undersigned until after the statue was completed and erected.

The undersigned had collected materials, and his work was in advance when, unfortunately, a fire destroyed all his works and machinery.

In consequence of this, the undersigned has not been able to complete and erect this statue up to this time, but it is completed except the pedestal.

Congress has already given to the undersigned $5,000 more than the contract stipulated, in consideration of his great losses by fire, but he yet finds himself unable to complete and end this statue, without being permitted to draw $6,000 more from the Treasury at this time; and the object of this memorial is to petition your honorable bodies to allow him this amount out of the $25,000 of the appropriation yet unexpended.

And your petitioner will ever pray, &c., &c.

CLARK MILLS.

WASHINGTON, May 21, 1858.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have one other amendment to add at the end of the first section:

To pay the draftsman employed by the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress, for drawings and calculations furnished, and incidental expenses defrayed by him during the last and present session of Congress, $28.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have still another amendment. There was an amendment passed on Saturday, on motion of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Brown,] providing for the appropriation of $30,000 for the purpose of completing rooms for the several courts in this District. It is necessary to strike out the word "criminal." I think the amendment, as it now reads, provides for the criminal court. It should be "courts for the District," leaving it to the proper authorities to determine what courts shall occupy the buildings proposed to be erected. I propose to strike out the word "criminal" before "court," and insert the letter "s" after "court."

Mr. HUNTER. That can be done by general consent.

Mr. BRIGHT. By unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the correction will be made.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer an amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the public lands in the Territory of Kansas shall not be offered at public sale until the expiration of one year from and after the 1st day of November next.

Mr. HUNTER. That is general legislation of a very important character. Certainly that ought not to be put on the bill.

Mr. SEWARD. What is the objection?

Mr. HUNTER. The objection is, that it is a matter of general legislation relating to a subject of great importance.

Mr. SEWARD. I will be content with the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PUGH. Does the Chair decide the amendment to be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No question of order was raised.

Mr. PUGH. I raise the question of order. It has no sort of pertinency. We cannot put on anything. I refer to Jefferson's Manual. It says an amendment must have some pertinency to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware of any rule that excludes it.

Mr. MASON. It is irrelevant.

Mr. CLAY. Does not the general principle of the Manual exclude irrelevant matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware of any general parliamentary law which excludes an amendment on the ground of irrelevancy.

Mr. TOOMBS. I take an appeal. I supposed everybody knew an amendment must have something to do with the bill.

Mr. PEARCE. I think the Senator from Georgia is mistaken; I think it has been decided, over and over again, that incongruity is no reason for ruling out an amendment. The Senate must recollect an example, not very ancient, when an invalid pension bill was here, and I moved to it an amendment to repeal a law granting certain lands to a railroad in the West. I think you recollect it, sir, for you opposed it very vehemently; and it was then decided that incongruity was no objection to an amendment for the purpose of ruling it out of order, as it had been decided before. That was not the first time it was so decided. The Senate have so ruled again and again. I do not think the amendment is out of order; but I shall certainly not vote for it.

Mr. SEWARD. The nearest approach I have ever seen to an objection like this occurred in the State of New York, where an amendment was ruled out of order because it was a very long amendment made to a very short bill. [Laughter.] I have avoided that point here by offering a very short amendment to a very long bill; and I am quite satisfied that it is very important, however incongruous it may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I hope the appeal will be withdrawn, and let us vote on the question.

Mr. TOOMBS. Well, I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Foster, Hamlin, Harlan, Kennedy, Rice, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Cleggman, Crittenden, Davis, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Pugh, Sebastian, Sidel, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulice—33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STUART. I am requested by the Secretary of the Interior to offer the following amendment, to regulate appeals from the Land Office to the Secretary, to have them in the first place go to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It is the only effectual way. The amendment is to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the eleventh section of the act of Congress approved September 4, 1841, entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights," be so amended that appeals from the decisions of the district officers, in cases of contest between different settlers for the right of preemption, shall hereafter be decided by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose decision shall be final, unless appeal therefrom be taken to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HUNTER. This is legislation. It may be very good legislation, but we shall never end the bill if we put amendments of this character upon it.

Mr. STUART. It is not only very good legislation, but legislation which will save a great deal of trouble and expense to the Government. It simply authorizes an examination by the Commissioner of the General Land Office first, because of the change of the law, and giving to the Secretary of the Interior what at the time was given to the Secretary of the Treasury. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we ought not to put such things in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I offer another amendment, which, as it is to save a good deal of money, I hope will not be objected to. It is to add as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That so much of all acts and parts of acts as require or authorize the Postmaster General to publish notice of letting contracts to carry the mails in the respective States, in newspapers published in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

I will only say that in response to a resolution which I submitted, directed to the Secretary of the Treasury, it was ascertained that the cost of publishing the mail lettings at this season, in these Washington papers, was $47,000. It amounts to about this sum every time they are published, and it is agreed by the Post Office Department that it is utterly useless. The amendment proposes to repeal such laws as make that necessary.

Mr. HUNTER. It may be a very good amendment; but it is legislation.

Mr. FESSENDEN and Mr. HAMLIN. But it is necessary legislation.

Mr. TOOMBS. My opinion is that they should be published but in one paper, and that one here. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I have only one further amendment to offer—to add as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the line surveyed by John C. McCoy, in 1838, as the western boundary of the half-breed tract, specified in the tenth article of the treaty made between commissioners on the part of the United States and certain Indian tribes at Prairie du Chien, on the 15th of July, 1830, be, and the same is hereby, established as the true western boundary of said tract.

If the Senate will give me its ear for a moment, I think there will be no objection to this amendment. The tenth article of the treaty provided that a certain tract of land west of Missouri, being ten miles deep, and lying between the Great and Little Nemaha, should be retained by those Indians in possession, and that at some subsequent time the President of the United States should be authorized to give a fee simple to such portions of them as were thought proper. The line was run twenty years ago, by Mr. McCoy. When we passed the Kansas-Nebraska act, we provided for the survey of the remainder of the land. The lands were surveyed up to that line, subject to preemption, occupied and settled by a large number of settlers. The amount of property there, as is proved to the committee, is over seventy thousand dollars. A town is built upon it. Now a question arises as to whether that land was correctly surveyed; whether it is about a mile and three quarters too short at one end; but there is more land there than is necessary to do justice to the half-breeds under that article of the treaty. The conflict is now made, and it is imminent. The Secretary of the Interior is now adjusting those fee simples under the treaty, and it is necessary that the action be speedy, in order to be of any value.

I have submitted the question to, and consulted with, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, [Mr. SEBASTIAN,] who also understands this question, and agrees with me, that the line surveyed by McCoy twenty years ago, ought to be now established as the true line. It varies it, as I said, at one end, perhaps a mile and three quarters, and does not vary it at all at the other; it leaves the gore of land now thickly settled, and which the Indian Office proposes to disturb by adjusting these fees simple. There are some three hundred half-breed Indians there, and an abundance of land, it being ten miles by twenty, for the whole of them, with this line as it stands. The Senator from Virginia may say it is legislation—it is; but I think, at all events, it is legislation as important as the general appropriation bill. You cannot disturb those settlers at this time without producing immense mischief in the country.

Mr. HUNTER. If we could confine the appropriation bills to proper subjects of appropriation, it would not take us the tenth of the time we now consume in acting upon them. The consequence of this sort of legislation is, that any chairman of a committee can bring up all the bills reported by his committee, and unless I can show it is bad legislation, it goes on the appropriation bill. I have not examined this amendment. It may be very good, or it may be very bad. All I can do is to examine the question of appropriation; but if we are to admit that any measure which is good, or any bill which is good, is a proper subject of legislation upon appropriation bills, there is no end to it.

Mr. STUART. I only wish to say that I am as much opposed as the Senator is to adding to the general appropriation bills any legislation which is not indispensable; but that Senator himself or his own committee has introduced general legislation upon this bill. It was that species of general legislation, however, that required immediate action, and so does this. I do not move it for any other purpose in the world. I say that the President and the Secretary of the Interior, in obedience to the tenth article of that treaty, are now adjusting these fees simple, and it becomes necessary to determine at once that line. The settlers upon that gore of land there have gone on it in good faith, it being land open to preemption. We said to them, by proclamations, that it was open to preemption. They have respected the line of McCoy. Not a man of them has gone or attempted to go over it, but they are simply on public land. It is reported that there is an abundance of land to make the assignments under that treaty in good faith and to spare within the boundaries of McCoy's line run twenty years ago. The Government will be involved in immense difficulty and immense expense, unless we settle it now.

Mr. POLK. It is evident that we cannot get through with the bill; and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BIGLER. I hope the amendment will be adopted. It is indispensably necessary.

The amendment was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes twenty-one, noes not counted.

Mr. FITCH. I offer the following amendment from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to add at the end of the first section:

For the construction of a building for a post office, and other Government purposes, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York, $50,000, and also such additional sum as may be necessary to purchase a suitable site for such building.

For the purchase of a site, and the erection of a building thereon, in Columbus, in the State of Ohio, for a post office and other Government purposes, $50,000.

For the purchase of a site, for the building for public purposes, authorized to be erected at Tallahassee, by the act of March 3, 1837, the sum of $30,000.

For a site, and building for a post office, and other Government purposes, in Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, the sum of $50,000.

For the purchase of a site, and the erection of a building thereon, in Harrisburg, State of Pennsylvania, for a post office, and other Government purposes, $50,000.

Mr. HUNTER. The Treasury is already nearly broken down in carrying out appropriations made for existing buildings. It seems to me this can be no time to add to those burdens by authorizing these new buildings. I will say no more, but I hope the Senate will vote the amendment down. I cannot think they will put it on this bill.

Mr. POLK. If an amendment to the amendment is in order, I offer one to appropriate for a post office building, and other public offices, in the city of Jefferson, in the State of Missouri, $30,000.

Mr. FITCH. I admit the depressed condition of the Treasury; but if this amendment is adopted it will place the towns where these post offices are asked, or rather place these appropriations on the same footing with many others. Appropriations have already been made for this object for which there is no money in the Treasury. They amount only to a declaration on the part of Congress of their willingness that the money shall be expended for such purposes whenever we have it. The Senator from Virginia deems it his duty, as doubtless it is, to object. I would simply remind the Senator that the capital of his State, and the capital of my own State, are provided for, and I cannot, therefore, consistently vote against appropriations of this kind for the capitals of other States, where they are asked.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Is any further amendment in order?

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I have an amendment to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The Senator from Arkansas has the floor, but the Chair will state to him that an amendment to the amendment has been proposed by the Senator from Missouri, which he is preparing.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to offer an amendment, that $30,000 be appropriated for a custom-house and post office at Little Rock, in the State of Arkansas. There never has been any appropriation made at that city. There is no place for the courts or post office there. This appropriation has already passed once in this body, and if it be in order, I now move it as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that the amendment is not in order, as the Senator from Missouri is now preparing an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose that the amendments are not in order unless they are in pursuance of estimates from a Department or come from a committee. I hope the Chair will ask that question.

Mr. BIGLER. Let us vote on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CLAY. To save time on these points of order, I ask whether the amendments are in order unless they come from some committee, or in pursuance of an estimate from a Department?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a question of fact to be ascertained from the Senator who offers the amendment.

Mr. POLK. I do not propose it from a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is not authorized by a committee, or to carry out a resolution of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from a Department, it is out of order, under the rule.

Mr. CLAY. Then let us have the question on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that the amendment moved by the Senator from Indiana did come from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. BROWN. And the objection made to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is, that it does not come from a committee. Well, sir, I have yet to learn, when an amendment is offered and is received, that nothing can be in order as an amendment to that amendment which does not come from a committee. That is a mode of legislation that I have never heard of before. If a committee can recommend the building of a post office at Hartford, Connecticut, then, according to this idea, I must go to a committee to get them to consent to an appropriation to build a post office in Mississippi, which amendment I intend to move at the first opportunity. There can be no such rule; and from such ruling I take an appeal to the Senate, if the chairman of the Committee on Finance insists upon making such a rule. We shall next be told that if a bill is before the Senate from a regular committee, then you cannot move an amendment to it unless you get the consent of a committee to do so.

Why, sir, such legislation is perfectly monstrous. After a while we shall be told that we must take the rulings of committees; that the precise sum which they offer must be accepted; and that you can neither move to increase or diminish it upon the suggestion of a single Senator. You might as well give up the whole business of legislation to the Departments and committees, and rule out individual Senators entirely. The position of individual Senators will be utterly ignored and rendered worthless here, and all your legislation will be done in committee room, and not in the Senate. I protest against it; I protest that when a subject is before the Senate, I, as a single individual Senator, have the right to move any amendment I choose to the proposition standing for legislation before the body. Any other rule is in derogation of my rights as a member of this body. If a proposition comes from a committee to build a post office at Hartford or at any other point, I insist that I have the right to add to that proposition, as I mean to do, an amendment to build a post office at the city of Jackson, that being the seat of government in my own State.

Mr. CLAY. Monstrous as it may sound to the Senator, it is, nevertheless, the rule of this body which prevents such an amendment being made, as out of order; and if he never learned it before it is because he sat here with his ears stopped, or never read the rules. The 30th rule of the Senate provides:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill."

Mr. BROWN. Precisely.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator wait until I get through?

"unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments."

Now, sir, to say that because an amendment offered by a committee proposing an appropriation is made, and is in order, that any other amendment to that amendment, making appropriations for similar objects in other cities is in order, is certainly shirking the rule in a way that cannot be countenanced by the Senate. Upon that principle, all that is necessary in order to prevent any amendment being ruled out of order, is to get some amendment moved by a committee; and every individual member of this Senate, by the reasoning of the Senator, may move an appropriation for like objects in some other State. I will not argue so plain a proposition as this. I ask the Chair to decide the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did decide the point of order.

Mr. BROWN. And I appealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the Senator from Mississippi appealed from the decision.

Mr. BROWN. The construction which the Senator from Alabama puts upon this rule, that you cannot move an appropriation except in pursuance of the precise language of the rule he reads, just amounts to this: that if the committee brings in a proposition to make an appropriation for a given sum, then I cannot move to increase the sum unless I can have the consent of a standing committee to do it. That is what it amounts to. I thought that no such construction was ever put upon the rule at all. But there is another rule that I have a right to move an amendment to any given proposition, provided it is germane to the subject. If this subject of this post office building was not before the Senate, then I should not insist that I had the right, on my individual responsibility, to bring in a new proposition; but the proposition being before the Senate, I simply insist that I can move any amendment which is germane to the subject before the body under a different rule. The rule read by the Senator is intended to apply to bringing in subjects entirely new. In reference to the subject brought in by the Senator from Indiana, it is a new one. I could not bring it in, nor could any other Senator, except from a committee; but the subject being here, I insist, under a different rule of the Senate, that I have a right to move any amendment I choose which is germane to that principal subject.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to ask the gentleman who brings in the original amendment a question in regard to it. How did the subject come before the committee which now reports this amendment?

Mr. PUGH. The committee had charge of the whole subject.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Was there any resolution referring the subject of a post office in Connecticut to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads which gave it jurisdiction?

Mr. FITCH. There was no resolution from the Senate by which it came before the Post Office Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Was there any in regard to any other case?

Mr. FITCH. I cannot speak positively as to how the subject of a post office in Connecticut came before the committee, but I believe at the request of the Representative from that district.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Then it seems that this subject was never referred to them, and the States that had no representatives on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, not being aware of the action of the gentlemen upon the committee, have had no notice in this matter. In my own State I know that we are suffering for the want of such a building; but still the Treasury is depressed, and we were not disposed to press it. We did not think such a proposition would be received here. The Senator offers an amendment for the erection of such buildings, and he represents that those States which are not represented on the committee are not to bring in an amendment germane to the proposition, or to have any hope of relief at all. That is our situation. I do not believe they have jurisdiction of these matters in the first place, unless the Senate referred them to them properly, and that they could not originate propositions for appropriations unless the subject was referred to them. I think the whole amendment ought to be rejected.

Mr. POLK. There were resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri submitted to the Senate at the commencement of the session in favor of my proposition. It somehow happens, though, that a parcel of other places are recommended, and this one excluded. Now, sir, I think with the gentleman from Mississippi, that, when the subject-matter is offered by a standing committee, it is perfectly proper for another member to move to amend by inserting an amendment for building a post office in any other place where he may deem it proper such a building should be erected.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. At the last session of this body, an amendment was adopted providing for the erection of a building in the State of New Jersey at Trenton, the capital of the State, for a post office, a custom-house, and the courts of the United States. It was recommended by everybody in the State of New Jersey, by the judges of the supreme court, and by the circuit and district judge of the State of New Jersey. It passed; but an amendment was offered by my friend from Arkansas which rather complicated the matter, and it failed in the committee of conference, as I was informed by my distinguished friend from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I introduced a bill at the commencement of this session for the same purpose; and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce. That was the committee to which always heretofore applications for buildings for purposes of post offices, custom-houses, and offices for holding the courts of the United States had been referred. The application was referred by the committee to the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Secretary of the Treasury said, in his communication to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that Trenton was not a port of delivery, but a port of entry, with very little commerce. That is true enough; but we propose to change it, and it may be a very important place in the course of a short time. But he left entirely out of view the fact that it is the capital of the State of New Jersey; that the post office there is a very important one indeed; and that there is no place there in which the courts of the United States can hold their meetings; no place in which the records can be kept. A room is hired for that purpose from time to time, or the clerk of the court carries them backwards and forwards from one place to another, as he happens to travel from Patterson, where he lives, down to Trenton. An adverse report was made upon that application by the Committee on Commerce; and great injustice has been done to the State of New Jersey—very great injustice. I desire now to offer an amendment; and I hope Senators will accept it for the purpose of doing justice to that gallant little State:

And for the purchase of a site, and for the erection of a building for the courts of the United States, the post office, and collector's office in Trenton, New Jersey, $50,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he must first dispose of the question of order which has been raised. The Senator from Mississippi takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair ruling out of order the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Missouri stating that it is not reported from any committee, or recommended by the Department, the Chair decides that, under the 30th rule, which is in these words—

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by the direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments," &c., this amendment is not in order. The Senator from Mississippi appeals from that decision, and the question is: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. IVERSON. I do not rise to make a speech; but I wish to put a case to the Senator from Mississippi, and ask him a question under this point of order. Suppose a committee reports an amendment to an appropriation bill for $100,000. That is in order, because it comes from a committee. Suppose another Senator moves an amendment appropriating another $100,000, and that is put on; and another Senator proposes another amendment of $100,000, and so on until it is $1,000,000. Is that the amendment of the committee? Is that the report of the committee? Is it the amendment of any committee? Certainly not. The report of the committee is for $100,000, and the amendment is for $1,000,000.

Mr. PUGH. As I want the benefit of all these precedents that gentlemen set, I demand the yeas and nays on that question. If gentlemen claim the right to add amendments to those of committees, I want the question fixed.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Before the question is taken, I wish to put a question to the Chair; and that is, whether it is in my power to raise a question of order on the first proposition offered by the Senator from Indiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it will be, when this question is disposed of.

Mr. BROWN. I hope not, because the Chair has entertained the first proposition, and was about to put the question. Then an amendment was moved by the Senator from Missouri. The question was clearly in possession of the Senate without objection from the Chair or any member of the Senate; and I hold, after an amendment has been moved to it, and a question has been raised on the amendment to the amendment, and an appeal taken from that, we are not to go back to the original proposition. The question has been waived.

Mr. GREEN. The whole of this question grows out of the rule of the Senate No. 30. That rule does not permit any individual Senator to move an amendment unless he has an estimate from a Department, or is authorized by a committee to offer it. If it be an amendment to reduce an appropriation, or if it be to change a general law, he can; but if it be to increase the appropriation he cannot offer it. Here an amendment was offered by the Senator from Indiana, and came by authority of a committee. I raised no question of order, nor did anybody else. The rule says no amendment shall be moved to the bill without the authority of a committee, or of an estimate. The amendment offered by my colleague is not an amendment to the bill; it is an amendment to the amendment, and unless the Senate persist and push it on the bill, it will never go there. It is all a technical rule with no foundation in reason or common sense, cutting off the rights of individuals, and doing injustice to the public; and hence it ought to be strictly construed. Yes, sir, I think it ought to be stricken out; but while this rule stands, you, as administrator of the rules, must administer it, but administer it to the letter. The amendment proposed is not an amendment to the bill; it is an amendment to the amendment. The technical literal construction of the rule does not exclude it. I know it may be said if it be adopted it will go as an amendment to the bill; but that just depends upon the action of the Senate; and ought not the Senate to have the power to control this thing?

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JUNE 1, 1858.

NEW SERIES... No. 160.

In the absence of all rule, every man would have the right to move anything he pleased; but we have rules; we choose to go by rules for the purpose of expediting business, and to protect rights; but when a rule is in derogation of individual rights, and in derogation of State rights, it ought to be construed in the most strict possible manner. Construe this rule in the most strict possible manner, and it will say, if you move the amendment to the bill, the rule says you shall not do it unless authorized by a committee, or you have estimates from the Department: if you move it to an amendment, the rule says nothing at all about it—not one word about it. You may say the reason of it applies. That is none of your business, sir. I say the whole rule is in derogation of my right. You say the reason of the rule applies in one case as well as in the other. I say the reason of the rule is none of your business, and when you undertake to legislate, you are doing what does not properly belong to you as Presiding Officer of this body. The rule itself simply says you shall not move it to the bill. Nobody has moved it to the bill. If the Senate orders it as an amendment to what a committee has proposed; the Senate has done it, and not the individual, and it will never be proposed to the Senate unless the Senate first indorses it as an amendment to the amendment; and the rule technically construed does not exclude it.

I think that if all these appropriations are to be considered, Jefferson City is entitled to as much consideration as other places, and the public business of the courts and the post office of Trenton, in the State of New Jersey, is entitled to as much consideration as others. All of them appeal to the Senate, not to an individual. If the Senate does not indorse, they fail; but your technical rule, wrong as it is, arbitrary as it is, does not, strictly construed, exclude this amendment. I plant myself upon that position, for the rule says you shall not move it to the bill. This is not moved to the bill; it is moved to the amendment.

Now, if the rule be technical; if the rule be in derogation of an inalienable right; if the rule be wrong in itself—how dare you say that the reason of the rule will apply as well in the one case as in the other? I say it is wrong. The rule does not say so; and if you assume the right to say that the reason of the rule applies as well in one case as in the other, you are assuming to yourself a right that does not belong to the Presiding Officer of this body. It is not the law. The technical law is a harsh law; and yet that technical law does not exclude the amendment. I insist upon the right of permitting the Senate to pass upon the question whether they will put in Jefferson City and Trenton, or whether they will permit Jefferson City and Trenton to be passed over, and injustice to be done to them.

Mr. PUGH. Let us hear that rule read again, as the Senator thinks it is not applicable to this case.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriation shall be received to any appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments."

Mr. BROWN. I want to say, in a single word, that this is simply an attempt to perfect the amendment reported by the standing committee before it passes—that is the point. The amendment is here; this is a proposition to perfect it; and I insist that if the Senate refuses that right to individual Senators, then the whole right of legislation is at an end; and the position of individual Senators is utterly absorbed, blotted out, destroyed, by the action of your rules. Am I to be told that I can move to diminish an appropriation, and cannot move to increase it; that I can add nothing to the proposition, under the rule, as construed by the Chair, because it interferes with the action of a standing committee; that we must take propositions precisely as they come from committees, or not take them at all? I have said before, I never insisted that I had a right, as an individual Senator, to move one of these appropriations; but since the proposition is here, I have the right to perfect it, by moving to amend it, and to amend it by any sort of proposition germane to the thing itself which I choose to move. The Senate may vote down my amendment; but to say that I have not the right to perfect the proposition by my own motion, before called upon to vote for it, is utterly to ignore my position as a Senator, and I say that cannot be done.

Mr. PUGH. As the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Mississippi seem disposed to press the question, I am bound to say that I am amazed that any gentleman in this Senate Chamber should presume to think that there was a doubt about the rule. What is the object of the rule?

Mr. BROWN. What it says.

Mr. PUGH. Is it to invest the standing committees with any power? It is to require deliberation; it is to prevent this very thing. I do not say that Jefferson City is not a proper place for these buildings; but why is it sprung upon the Senate now? We have never heard anything about it. We have none of the safeguards that the Senate has sought to provide, and the object of the rule is, that those cases which have gone to a committee, and been examined and found proper, shall not be defeated by loading them down in the Senate with appropriations which nobody has considered. That is the whole of it.

The Senator talks about perfecting the amendment. He means defeating it. I acknowledge you can move to reduce the appropriation; nobody denies that. You can move to reduce it, but you cannot move to increase it. That is the safeguard against these amendments. The committee on Saturday reported an appropriation for a custom-house in one place; and can I, as an individual Senator, tack on every town in the United States? Why, sir, I would keep you here from the 1st day of January to the last day of December debating one appropriation bill under such a rule as that; but I do not care whether the Senate decide this amendment to be in order or out of order; I want a record of it. If the Senator claims a right individually to add amendments without the consideration of a committee, I want that right myself in the future. I am not opposed to these appropriations. They may be proper, but they have not been considered.

Mr. GREEN. When the Senator from Ohio says the object of the law means so and so, he admits that the letter of the rule does not accomplish it.

Mr. PUGH. I beg the Senator's pardon; the letter of the rule is as much against him, I think, as the reason.

Mr. GREEN. If the letter was, why appeal to the object? Now I have always thought when I have practiced before justices of the peace—and I have had a little practice there—that one good reason was always enough, and my old preceptor at law told me, when you have one good reason, stand upon that and take no other. He says the object of the law is to do thus and so. How does he know the object, except from the language? How dare he infer the object, except from the language? I have as much right to prescribe the object as he has, and every other man has, but yet he assumes to know the whole object of the law. I think I know the object, and I think that object is this: when the bill is pending, an arbitrary and harsh unfeeling rule has been instituted, which says no member shall propose an amendment unless that amendment has been authorized by a committee, or the estimates have been made by the head of a Department. That rule is in derogation of a constitutional right. I might stop here, and ask where is the power to take away my constitutional rights as one of the representatives of a State? You can only answer it by saying each House shall regulate its own proceedings, and in the process of regulation it has adopted this rule. This rule is an arbitrary rule; it is a harsh rule; it is an unfair rule. It gives to old members, who have happened to have been here some six, eight, or ten years, time enough to become chairmen of committees, power superior to that which is possessed by young members, who must always go to the foot and "spell up;" while those young members may represent a State as much entitled to rights as any others. When your rule is thus harsh, thus unconstitutional, thus in derogation of rights, if I can by any fair process avoid it, I will do it. Does the rule say that I shall not propose an amendment to an amendment? I pause for a reply. I ask the Senator from Ohio, does it say it?

Mr. PUGH. Practically, it does.

Mr. GREEN. Practically! What does it say? Quien sabe?

Mr. PUGH. I had it read once for the Senator's information.

Mr. GREEN. You have it read, but you do not say it. I am insisting upon my original rights; and when I say no rule of the Senate does, ex vi termini, take away these original rights, as it would be a harsh construction of the rule, I intend to stand by them; and when he appeals to the object and spirit of the rule, it is an admission that the words of the rule do not exclude it. This is my position, and I intend to stand by it. It is harsh, it is unfair, it is in derogation of ordinary constitutional rights; and it can subserve no public benefit. Do you suppose, Mr. President, that any proposition will be made here and deceive the Senate if you cannot deceive a committee—mislead the Senate, if you could not mislead the committee—bamboozle the Senate, if you could not bamboozle a committee? I have no fear of it. I believe that there is as much virtue in the Senate, and a little more so, because the members are increased, than there is in a committee. I believe there is as much intelligence, and I think a little more, in the Senate, than in any committee.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Question, question!

Mr. GREEN. I hear a Senator say "question." That is just what I am on. I am on the question, and I intend to discuss the question, and I think I am discussing the question. If the Senator thinks I am not, he can call me to order. But for him, illegally and in violation of the proprieties of the Senate, to call "question," when I am discussing the question, is what I do not intend to submit to. When no man is addressing you, Mr. President, and there is an anxiety upon the part of the Senate to have a vote, I am pleased to hear Senators call "question;" but when there is an implied dissatisfaction, when a man is on the floor, and talking pertinently to the question, to say "question," is unpleasant. I do feel hurt, and I do not intend to take it tamely.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator need not be addressing himself to me. I did not call "question."

But, sir—

Mr. GREEN. Then I do not know who did it. Mr. CLAY. But, Mr. President, I do not think the Senator need exhibit so much feeling that we should be impatient at this hour of the evening.

Mr. GREEN. I think not either.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator has addressed himself to me.

Mr. GREEN. I did, because I believed you to say "question."

Mr. CLAY. I did not.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I said it.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator from Arkansas said it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. But I do not know of any particular—

Mr. GREEN. Take your seat, sir. I have the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Very well, sir: I yield to you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the Senators to order. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. GREEN. I have the floor, and I intend to keep it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to Senators that the rule requires every Senator to address the Chair.

Mr. GREEN. I am addressing the Chair; and I thought I was talking pertinently to the question, showing why this amendment was in order, and why the arguments addressed against it were not sufficient to defeat the point that I had made.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator give way to me for a moment, and I will move to adjourn?

Mr. GREEN. If it is a motion to adjourn, I will.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, May 31, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. Speaker, is there a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. There are one hundred and twenty members present.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved. Pending the reading of the Journal,

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, said: Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are sixty pages of Journal, and with a view of economizing time, and as nobody seems to be listening, I move that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We had better have it all read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it will take an hour and a half to read that Journal, and I move that its further reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I say that it had better be read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion.

The reading of the Journal was concluded, and the Journal approved.

CORRECTION OF AN ERROR.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (No. 47) to correct an error in a certain act approved May 11, 1858, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. This resolution is to correct a clerical error in an act which passed this House some two weeks since, prescribing the boundaries of certain land districts in the State of Michigan. It is recommended by the officers of the General Land Office, and I hope it will be passed without objection.

There being no objection, the resolution was taken up, received its several readings, and was passed.

DELEGATE FROM DACOTAH.

Mr. GILMER, in accordance with the permission of the House of Saturday last, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee of Elections in the case of Mr. Kingsbury.

ARTISTS' COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order, is the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] to suspend the rules so as to enable him to present a memorial of the artists of the United States, and offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the memorial of the artists of the United States be, and the same is hereby, referred to a select committee of five, to be appointed by the Speaker, with instructions to report upon the expediency of granting the petition of the memorialists, and with power to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. McQUEEN. I would like to know what is the object of that memorial?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the reading of the memorial.

The Clerk read the memorial, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The memorial of the artists of the United States, in convention assembled, respectfully represents:

That your memorialists appear before your honorable bodies to solicit for American art that consideration and encouragement to which they conceive it to be entitled at the hands of the General Government.

They cannot but deem it a matter of deep regret that so important an element of national progress should have received, as yet, so limited a share of attention at the hands of our legislators, and that opportunities for the illustration of our country's history, rich as it is in material for the pencil and the chisel, should have been, with a few exceptions, denied to those whose province it is, and whose pride it would be, to embody in enduring and beautiful forms, for the benefit of our own and future generations, all that is glorious and ennobling in our history, character, and life, as a people.

Your memorialists submit that the time is now at hand when we may assume a position in the world of art as enviable and exalted as that which we have attained in our social and political relations; that the capacity of our artists to accomplish this glorious end is abundant; and that the appropriate field for its development and exercise is in the adornment and completion of the noble structures now being reared by the nation for the nation's use.

A liberal, systematic, and enlightened encouragement is, they believe, all that is needed for the establishment of a national art that shall worthily illustrate the genius of our institutions; and they cherish the earnest hope that the golden opportunity now afforded in the erection of spacious and costly Government buildings will not be neglected; but that, by the wisdom of the means adopted by your honorable bodies, an impulse may be given to the cause of American art, the beneficent and ennobling influences of which shall extend to our remotest posterity.

Your memorialists respectfully urge that the great end proposed—namely, the advancement of art in the United States—may be most surely and completely attained by the establishment of an art commission, composed of those designated by the united voice of American artists, as competent to the office, who shall be accepted as the exponents of the authority and influence of American art; who shall be the channels for the distribution of all appropriations to be made by Congress for art purposes; and who shall secure to artists an intelligent and unbiased adjudication upon the designs they may present for the embellishment of the national buildings.

Your memorialists believe that the appointment of such a commission would be hailed throughout the country as an evidence of a just and generous appreciation by your honorable bodies of the claims and interests of art, and would secure for it a future commensurate with the exalted character of the history and the times which it is its purpose to commemorate.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I will say to the House, that it cannot err in subjecting that memorial to the consideration of a committee.

Mr. McQUEEN. My only objection is that it provides for another select committee, and it seems to me that we have had enough of them during this session. I will withdraw my objection if the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes 38.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the resolution was received.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, moved the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As we cannot get the yeas and nays, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it in order to move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Library?

The SPEAKER. It is not, pending the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIFFICULTIES WITH PARAGUAY.

Mr. RITCHIE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a joint resolution of the Senate (No. 23) entitled "A resolution for the adjustment of the difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay." I desire to say to the House that it is of great importance that this resolution should be disposed of one way or the other. It passed the Senate, and has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House. If the resolution be taken up, I think I can explain the grounds of it fully in ten minutes; as fully, at least, as there is any necessity for, unless gentlemen wish to examine the whole subject.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and read.

It authorizes the President of the United States to adopt such measures and use such force as, in his judgment, may be necessary and advisable in the event of a refusal on the part of the Republic of Paraguay to settle justly the differences between the United States and that Republic in connection with the attack on the United States steamer Water Witch, and with other matters referred to in the annual message of the President.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RITCHIE. I desire to make a short explanation in which I think I shall answer the inquiry which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] is about to make.

Several MEMBERS. Let it go.

Mr. RITCHIE. Is it the desire of the House that I should make any explanation?

Several MEMBERS. No, no!

Mr. RITCHIE. Then I move to put the resolution on its passage. If the gentleman from Virginia wishes to make an inquiry, I will give him an opportunity.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to amend the resolution by striking out the words, "and use such force."

Mr. RITCHIE. I desire to say, with respect to that, that if those words be stricken out, the resolution will be of no manner of use. These people of Paraguay have but recently come into the family of nations. Very lately, on a mere exhibition of force at the mouth of the river, they settled their differences with France and Brazil, neither of which nations received half the provocation that we have done. If a commissioner be sent there without a force to back him, we might as well let the matter pass.

The origin of the difficulty is this: the United States steamer Water Witch, while engaged in the survey of the Parana—the main branch of the river La Plata—between the province of Corrientes, in the Argentine Republic, and the Republic of Paraguay, not only with the permission, but at the earnest request of the President of the Argentine Republic, and of the Governor of Corrientes, (the Argentine Republic having joint jurisdiction with Paraguay over that river,) was fired upon by a Paraguayan fort ten times; the man at the wheel was shot dead; and the fort continued to fire on the vessel till it had drifted out of range.

I desire to say further, to the gentleman from Virginia, that that act on the part of the Republic of Paraguay was so totally unexpected, that Captain Page, commander of the Water Witch, was not even on board of his vessel at the time, and every other officer, with the exception of the engineer of the Water Witch and Lieutenant Jeffers, were absent on service in the other parts of the river. It was an attack totally without provocation and totally unexpected. There have been also some difficulties between the President of Paraguay and a manufacturing company which had gone out there from the United States under the laws of Paraguay.

All these things I can explain, if the House choose to allow me to do so; but it strikes me that unless the resolution pass now, it would be better to drop the whole subject altogether. The resolution has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and unless further debate be desired, I move the previous question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire the gentleman to withdraw the previous question to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. RITCHIE. I will hear it read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to amend by adding the following section:

Be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to use such force as may in his judgment be necessary and advisable to protect American commerce and prevent the search of American vessels by British cruisers in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

Great Britain ought to be put upon the same footing precisely as Paraguay.

Mr. RITCHIE. I decline to accept the amendment, and insist upon the call for the previous question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman yielded the floor to me to allow me to introduce my amendment.

Mr. RITCHIE. I desire to say to the gentleman from Georgia that the subject of this resolution has no connection at all with the difficulties with Great Britain. The attack on the Water Witch occurred in February, 1855—three years ago last February. I am opposed to the amendment, as I think the difficulties it refers to can be easily settled by negotiation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All that I desire is to get a vote upon it.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to say a word, if the gentleman will withdraw the previous question.

Mr. RITCHIE withdrew it.

Mr. LETCHER. My objection to the resolution is this: The Constitution of the United States vests in Congress the power to declare war, and yet, by this resolution, we propose to vest the President with discretionary power in the matter. It is, practically, a transfer from Congress to him of the authority to declare war against Paraguay. It seems to me in view of this resolution and of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, that we are transferring the whole war-making power of the Government into the hands of the Executive, who is to use it according to his discretion. Now, if there is a necessity for war with either of these Powers, I am for the Congress of the United States taking the responsibility which belongs to it—to declare that war and to furnish the Executive with men and money to prosecute it to a successful conclusion. I know that wrong has been done in both of these cases; but, as I said, I am for Congress taking the responsibility which the Constitution devolves upon it, and not transfer it to any other on whom the Constitution does not devolve it. The Constitution defines our powers and points out our duty.

Mr. RITCHIE. In reply to the gentleman from Virginia, I say that this resolution does take the responsibility which Congress ought to take; and whatever the President does under this resolution, is done by the authority of Congress. But it is believed by every man acquainted with this affair, that the mere exhibition of a few small vessels at the mouth of the river will settle the whole difficulty, and that there will be no necessity for the actual use of the force. We do not want to drive the President into a war, whether or no. We merely authorize him to use force in case he cannot help it; and whenever he does use it, the force will be used by our authority. This resolution takes the whole responsibility. That was the understanding of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that is the plain meaning of the resolution.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman does not exactly understand my point.

Mr. RITCHIE. Yes, I do; the gentleman says that we give authority to the President to use force. So we do, and we take the responsibility of all the force which may be necessary. The President has nothing to do except in fulfillment of our resolution.

Mr. LETCHER. My point in regard to it is this: that it is for Congress to judge of the necessity of declaring war, and that it ought not to be dependent upon the discretion of anybody. We ought to act for ourselves.

Mr. RITCHIE. My reply is that the resolution does recognize the necessity of using force in this case. But this is a very distant region of the world. It is the case of a half barbarous people just entering into the family of nations. But a few years since they had no communication whatever with any nation. And the object of this resolution is to bring that country under the laws of nations, as recognized by everybody. I now move the previous question, and will not withdraw it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RITCHIE. No, sir; I insist on the previous question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to know what is the difference between firing into the Water Witch and firing into twenty-seven other vessels?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is not in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am aware of that. I shall move a suspension of the rules in order that I may offer my amendment in the shape of a separate resolution.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RITCHIE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RITCHIE. I move the previous question upon the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Does the resolution provide any men and money to carry on the war with Paraguay?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. STANTON. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 115, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Billingshurst, Bishop, Bocock, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Bratton, Burlingame, Burnett, Burns, Burroughs, Caskie, Cavanaugh, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Clark B. Cochran, John Cochran, Cockrell, Cox, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dick, Dimmick, Dowdell, Durfee, Edie, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Eustis, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Gartrell, Gills, Gilman, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Hatch, Hill, Hopkins, Horton, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jewett, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keely, Kelsey, Landy, Leidy, Lovejoy, MacIay, McKibbin, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel B. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Miller, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Parker, Peyton, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Poole, Powell, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Ruffin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Scott, Searing, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, William Smith, Stephens, James A. Stewart, Talbot, George Taylor, Tompkins, Vandandigham, Elihu B. Washburne, White, Winslow, Wood, Wortendyke, and Zollcofer—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bryan, Buffinton, Cuse, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Mississippi, Dawes, Dean, Dodd, Fenton, Foster, Garnett, Gooch, Goode, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, Hawkins, Hoard, Houston, Howard, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Kilgore, Knapp, Lawrence, Leiter, Leitcher, McQueen, Matteson, Millson, Moore, Morgan, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mont, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Pettit, John S. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Quitman, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Spinner, Stallworth, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Israel Washburn, and Augustus R. Wright—79.

So the joint resolution was passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. ATKINS stated that Mr. WATKINS was detained at his room by indisposition.

Mr. JENKINS, who was not within the bar when his name was called, asked leave to vote, but objection was made.

Mr. RITCHIE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to allow me to move that the bills upon the Speaker's table be taken up and referred to the respective committees without debate.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SEWARD. I object to any such limitation on the disposal of the bills.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion to give the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRAWFORD] an opportunity to offer his resolution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I merely want to put Great Britain on the same footing with Paraguay.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I must decline to do so.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the yeas and nays on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to—ayes one hundred and thirty-eight, noes not counted.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Bocock in the chair.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated the business first in order to be the consideration of the bill of the House (No. 557) making supplemental appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1859.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This bill is for supplemental expenses of the Indian department on the Pacific coast, for the next fiscal year. It will be remembered that at an early period of the session the regular Indian appropriation bill was passed. The estimates in accordance with law were made up to the commencement of the session of Congress; but, in consequence of the reports not being received from the Pacific coast in time, the estimates for the Indian service on that coast were not included in that bill. This bill and House bill No. 555 might almost be considered in one bill. But in consequence of the appropriations contained in that bill being to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the department, the Committee of Ways and Means have therefore separated those two bills. This bill appropriates between six and seven hundred thousand dollars; and is, properly speaking, an appendix to the regular Indian appropriation bill. All the items of appropriation reported by the Committee of Ways and Means in this bill are in accordance with the requirements of treaty stipulations and the expenses necessary for carrying on the Indian department; and the bill cannot therefore be properly amended. I move that the bill be read through by clauses, for amendment.

Mr. SEWARD. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means why, if the appropriations provided for in this bill are in accordance with treaty stipulations, there should have been any necessity for deficiencies?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The inquiry of the gentleman from Georgia, I presume, is intended to apply to bill No. 555, which is a deficiency bill.

Mr. SEWARD. I thought this was the bill.

The Clerk commenced reading the bill by clauses, for amendment.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I desire to amend, by inserting at the end of line seventy-four the following:

For the expenses of bringing to this and other cities of the States a delegation of Indian chiefs from the Territories of Oregon and Washington, $30,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Is that provided for by treaty stipulations?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. It is contained in the estimates of the Department, and I think should be included in the bill.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. As it is not provided for by treaty stipulations, I submit that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to decide the amendment out of order.

Mr. OTERO. I move to amend by striking out "$75,000" in the following paragraph, and inserting "$150,000":

"For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in New Mexico, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuit of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $75,000."

Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means why it is that the estimates of the superintendent of Indian affairs in New Mexico have been reduced one half, in the face of the fact that the superintendent had, to my own knowledge, reduced his estimate to the lowest possible point before he handed them in, in consideration of the bankrupt condition of the Treasury? It is a fact, sir, susceptible of no contradiction, that many of the Indian tribes in the Territory are actually compelled to steal or to starve to death, in consequence of the pitiful allowance made by the Government for their subsistence. They have been, during the past winter, stealing and robbing the citizens of the Territory of their property for the purpose of keeping themselves alive; and I say now, sir, that the whole of the $150,000 estimated for by the superintendent will be needed to purchase their peace.

Permit me to read here extracts from letters and other sources, that I have in my possession, in order to show the condition of our Indian relations in that Territory, that gentlemen and the committee may know the necessity of this appropriation, as asked for by the superintendent.

In a letter which I received from S. M. Yost, Esq., present Indian agent of the Pueblos in the Territory, dated February 14, 1858, he says:

"I have sent John Ward off to-day to the Navajo country to examine into an alleged murder of some Mexicans by the Navajoes; and the stealing of sheep, &c. Colonel Harley's resignation, I fear, will have a bad effect on the Indians. He was forced, however, to leave; he had no money to meet the demands of his agency, and the Indians were constantly pressing upon him for food."

Further on, in the same letter, he says:

"I very much fear we will have trouble with the Indians this coming spring. There is much restlessness among them, and an evident disposition to be quarrelsome. General Garland, however, is on the qui vive, and will arrest any incipient symptoms. I expect he will have to make a campaign against the Navajoes this spring or summer."

I will read, also, an extract from the Santa Fé Gazette, dated February 20, 1858, which is as follows:

"This tribe of Indians [speaking of the Navajoes] have suffered much during the winter for want of provisions. Last year their crops were a failure. Heretofore they have generally raised enough produce to support themselves comfortably; and consequently it has not been the policy of the Government to feed them to such an extent as other tribes of this superintendency. They will have to be fed, or their suffering will be great. It is thought that a special agent will have to be sent among them, in the absence of a regular agent. This policy, it is believed, will have to be adopted immediately, in order to prevent depredations. They must either be fed, or they will have to steal or to starve."

I have here also a letter from Don José L. Perea, a leading and influential citizen in the Territory, and upon whose statement can be placed implicit reliance. I will read:

BERNALILLO, March 30, 1858.

SIR: By the mail which arrived here on the 10th instant, I received your favor, dated January 17th.

The Navajo Indians, during the last month, have been committing depredations upon the citizens in various parts of our frontier, by stealing their property, and by killing some of them. The latest information which we have received is, that the Navajoes have attacked, near the Pueblo of Jemez, a herd of live stock, and have driven off a number of the horses, mares, and mules belonging to said Pueblo. In Abiquiu a few days since, the same Indians stole two thousand head of ewes; and the rumor is now afloat that the Navajoes have declared war. If such be the case, sir, what can we, the citizens of this Territory, do with regard to this matter? Nothing, absolutely nothing! The Federal troops, some at least, have been sent for service to Utah, to attend to the Mormons, who it is believed have had something to do with the disturbance on the part of the Navajo Indians. The other tribes of Indians which surround us threaten us daily also, and it is impossible to say what will befall our interests during the coming six months.

HON. M. A. OTERO.

I might read many more extracts, sir, from different other sources of respectability, which I have in my possession, but which I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee in reading, as what has been read ought, and I trust will, satisfy the committee with regard to the action it ought to take upon this matter. I think that the appropriation asked for by the superintendent should be granted.

I am not advocating, sir, here the necessity of this appropriation of $150,000, for the reason, as some gentlemen might suppose, that it is to be expended in the Territory of New Mexico, and because my fellow-citizens expect to derive any benefit from it. No, sir, far from that. The whole appropriation cannot enrich the people of New Mexico, nor any portion, nor any one of them. It is well known, sir, that the Government has adopted the policy of feeding the Indian tribes living within its territorial limits. In New Mexico we have some thirty-two thousand Indians, for whom it is asked to be appropriated the pittance of $150,000, being a fraction less than five dollars a year per head, about forty cents per month for each Indian, one cent and one third per day for every Indian. So far as I am concerned, sir, and I am authorized to speak for the people of New Mexico, it is our wish that the Government had never inaugurated such a policy. I wish you had coerced them, as you ought to do, to settle in military reservations, and there compel them to work for their bread, and gain their livelihood "by the sweat of the brow," as every creature of Heaven is bound to do; and you ought not, sir, to ignominiously purchase their peace; and, by feeding them, put a price upon indolence. I confess I have no sickly sympathy for a thief of any kind, and of any race, much less for a set of men who are called Indians, but who are not only thieves but murderers. Why they should be treated with consideration, and even go so far as to allow them a price, as it were, for the property and blood of our citizens, I cannot comprehend, nor can anybody who has any sense at all, and who understands and appreciates the character of our present roving tribes of Indians. But I will not argue this point now.

Mr. Chairman, there are now about thirty-two thousand Indians under the superintendency of New Mexico, within ten thousand of the whole number comprehended under the superintendency of Oregon and Washington Territories. The appropriation which I ask for is, indeed, insignificant and almost useless, specially so when it is reduced to one half, which allows for every Indian a little less than two dollars and fifty cents a year, about twenty cents per month, and not one cent per day. I have here, sir, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, of March 24, 1858, transmitting "a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with supplemental estimates of funds required for the Indian service upon the Pacific coast, and in remote Territories upon either side of the Rocky Mountains, for the next fiscal year; also, estimates for deficiencies for the same service for the year ending June 30, 1858, together with such transcripts of correspondence between the Indian office and its agents, as it is thought may be serviceable in explanation of the same. I find in it, sir, the following estimates:

"For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Oregon, &c., $59,700.

"For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in the Territory of Oregon, $12,500.

"For defraying incidental expenses of removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon Territory to Indian reservations therein, &c., $222,000."

Total amount asked to be appropriated for Oregon, $294,200, which, when reduced one half, is almost as much as the whole appropriation required for New Mexico, without reduction.

Washington Territory is put down as follows:

"For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington, &c., $36,000.

"For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in Washington Territory, $12,500.

"For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of the Indians in Washington Territory to the reservations therein, &c., $123,000."

Total, $171,500, being $21,500 more than the entire appropriation asked for New Mexico. I admit that this estimate, also, has been reduced by the Committee of Ways and Means one half; but even then, it exceeds the reduced estimate for New Mexico, $10,750.

I do not desire, sir, to make any invidious comparison between these Territories and the one I have the honor to represent upon this floor. But justice to my Territory and to myself, requires me to state something more here, in order that you may see and judge whether the reduction made in the case of New Mexico is right and proper under all the circumstances.

What, sir, is the number of Indians under each superintendency in these Territories? From a letter that I have received from the Secretary of the Interior, the number of Indians now under the superintendency of Oregon and Washington Territories, is estimated at forty-two thousand; that of New Mexico at thirty-two thousand. Divide forty-two thousand among the two Territories; and give, for the sake of argument, Oregon thirty thousand and Washington twelve thousand, which probably may be a fair proportion, and I ask impartial and fair-minded gentlemen here, whether the proportion of appropriation between New Mexico and those Territories, even after the reduction made by the committee, is equal? If Oregon has thirty thousand Indians—which, for the sake of argument, I have allowed—why, I ask, give her for her Indian purposes, even as reduced by the committee, $147,100? being, as I have said already, almost as much as the entire estimate asked to be appropriated by the superintendent of New Mexico for Indian purposes in that Territory.

But this is not all. Washington I allowed twelve thousand Indians, and she, according to the amount allowed by the committee, gets $35,750, $10,750 more than New Mexico, which has thirty-two thousand Indians. Now, sir, I ask, is it right, is it fair? I ask for nothing more than justice, and that justice which ought always to be meted out to equals. You have established a policy towards your Indian tribes: carry it out. I repeat, sir, I do not ask for this money because it is to be expended in New Mexico, and thereby to put money in the purses of any of my constituents. No, sir. They, as well as I, scorn it. All that we ask, since you will not whip the Indians into submission, and make them work for their bread, is to carry out your policy of feeding them, and do not come here now with the disgraceful excuse that you reduce the appropriations asked for because there is no money in the Treasury; for it is unworthy of this great and mighty Government, to say the least. What! will you let the powerful nations of Europe—your rivals—and the whole world know that you are bankrupt, and thereby unable, for want of means, to carry out any policy that you may have inaugurated? If it is so, I can only express my regret to know that fact; and that it is so, the daily cry of the gentlemen from the Committee of Ways and Means against all sorts of appropriations outside of the regular ones, proves it. But, for the honor of the Government, I hope it is not so. I ask this appropriation, sir, in good faith, and I hope the committee will grant it. It is but a matter of justice and of humanity to the starving Indians in New Mexico. With these remarks, sir, I ask for a vote upon my amendment.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation, as estimated for, was as the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. Otero] has stated. The whole of this appropriation has arisen from a new policy adopted by the Government in its intercourse with the various Indian tribes. The old system was to treat with the Indians, and then act in accordance with the treaty stipulations entered into with them. The new system in the main is good and benevolent. The Indians are collected together prior to the making of treaties with them. They are taught to cultivate the soil and follow in the steps of civilized life. There they are treated with all kindness and humanity. The policy is, I think, for the benefit both of the Indians and the white settler. They are permitted to remain there until Congress is ready to negotiate treaties with them. There can be, of course, no limits prescribed in appropriation bills, except in so far as the exigencies of the case may demand. I have no doubt that the policy is a good one, if carried out, and that it would be still better if all the Indians in our States and Territories could by this sort of humane treatment, be brought to settle upon fixed reservations and placed under the control of the Government. This policy has only recently been inaugurated. In the case of New Mexico, the sum estimated for was a large one, and in view of the straitened resources of the Treasury, it was the opinion of the Committee of Ways and Means that $75,000 would answer for the next fiscal year. I have no doubt that it is equal to the demand. There is no basis for the appropriation at all, other than this policy which has been established, and which has frequently been indorsed by Congress. I consulted with the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he admitted that they could get along, with prudent management, with the sum appropriated in the bill, during the next fiscal year.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line ninety-six:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept and survey the Indian reservation designated by the act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved February 4, 1856, and to appoint an Indian agent for said reservation.

Mr. Chairman, I will state in reference to the amendment which I have offered, that the State of Texas designated five leagues of land, to be located on the west of the Pecos river. There has been an appropriation made already for the Indians of Texas; and this asks no additional appropriation, but merely authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept that reservation, and to appoint an agent for the purpose of collecting the Indians upon it. It asks not a cent of money, but merely authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to execute the act of Texas.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. For reasons already stated, I am opposed to the amendment, and ask for a vote.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is general debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has not been closed on this bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to occupy the attention of the committee for a short time. I acknowledge it is with very great regret that I feel myself constrained at this period of the session to throw myself upon the indulgence of the committee; but I shall be pardoned, I am quite sure—

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I hope my friend from Virginia will defer his remarks until we have gone through with this bill. I will take up another bill immediately, and he can submit his remarks on that bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will yield with that understanding.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I offer the following amendment:

Shawnees.

For the fifth of seven annual installments in payment for lands, per third article of the treaty 10th May, 1854, $99,000, the same having been omitted in the enrolling of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1859, approved May 5, 1858.

Mr. Chairman, the regular Indian appropriation bill appropriated $100,000, as per the treaty provision referred to; but in the enrollment of the bill there was an omission, so as to leave the amount only $1,000. This amendment is to supply that omission. In the letter of the Secretary of the Interior is the following paragraph:

"I also have the honor to invite attention to what is presumed to be a clerical error in the act recently passed making appropriation for the expenses of the Indian service, by which the sum of $1,000 only is appropriated for paying the fifth of seven annual installments of money in payment of lands to the Shawnees, per third article of the treaty of 10th May, 1854, instead of $100,000, as required by the treaty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill having been read through,

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved to lay aside the bill, to be reported to the House with the amendments, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCIES IN INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I now ask that bill No. 555, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1858, be taken up, and that the first reading be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I shall not now occupy the time of the committee with any remarks on this bill, because, in my remarks on the other bill, I stated the character and nature of this bill. It is for deficiencies in the Indian department—on the Pacific coast mainly—and for some few other items relative to the Indian department, and to the Indians in some other sections of the country.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am unaffected when I assure the committee that I rise to trespass on its time, at this late period of the session, with extreme reluctance, because the subject to which I intend to refer has an age which ought, perhaps, to prevent its further introduction here.

It will be recollected, Mr. Chairman, by the committee, that in the discussion on the Lecompton question, I participated. I would not now advert to it but for certain personal aspects, which make it necessary for me, in view of a proper self-respect, to notice it. On the 26th of March last I addressed the committee on the Lecompton question at length. In the progress of my remarks on that occasion, I reviewed the antecedents of certain gentlemen, and presented them to the consideration of the country, under a sense of duty to the position which I occupied. These remarks were, it will be recollected, noticed at the time by various members, especially by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSHALL.] While I spoke on the 26th of March, it was the pleasure of the gentleman [Mr. MARSHALL] on the 31st of March —five days thereafter, at a night session, when I was not present—to indulge in a criticism on that speech, which criticism, I understood from friends, did not call for any notice from me. His speech, delivered on that occasion, was not published in the Globe till the 16th of April. It had passed from my memory, and nothing had occurred to induce me to examine his remarks. I was informed by gentlemen who had heard those remarks as delivered on the floor of the House, that they did not call for my attention, and I was never induced by a circumstance to examine them as published till very recently, when a friend called my attention to the subject. I looked at a single paragraph of the speech, and presumed, from the representations of those who heard the speech, that it was unnecessary for me to notice it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, in this connection—as it is most pertinent at this time—that at the time the gentleman from Virginia made the charge, I denied its truth on the floor of the House; but I was not permitted to take the floor and go into the matter at length. I got the floor as soon thereafter as I could, and notified the gentleman from Virginia before I got the floor, and on the same day that I expected it, that I would allude to the remarks which he made in regard to that matter. I could only get the floor late at night—the night before the vote was taken. The gentleman from Virginia asked me if it was important that he should remain, and I told him that he might determine that matter for himself; that I intended to refer to his speech; that the charge which he made was untrue, and that I intended to comment upon it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If the gentleman had not interrupted me, he would have seen that there was no necessity for the interruption. The gentleman certainly did, as I have done to him on this occasion, give me notice that he intended to advert to my remarks; but on account of my health, it was not very agreeable, or perhaps not prudent, for me to remain out late at night. I inquired next morning whether or not anything had fallen from the gentleman, requiring my attention, and was informed that nothing had. I was going on to make a statement—and I beg the gentleman not to interrupt me, unless it is clearly necessary, as I desire to present a connected whole of the question. On an examination of the gentleman's speech, I found that if it had been spoken as it was published, my friends could not have represented to me that there was nothing in it requiring my attention. And hence I was led to infer, that, as is too frequently the case, the gentleman published one thing, when he had delivered another. I am the more particular in presenting this aspect of the question, because I want the committee and the country to understand that I am not one of those who are in the habit of lying still under criticisms that I do not think do me full and proper justice. Of course the committee will understand, that, at this late day of the session, I have no disposition to indulge in a class of remarks beyond what is indispensably necessary to a right understanding of the position I occupy and the course I pursued. On the occasion when I addressed the committee, I made an extract from Judge DOUGLAS's speech of the 12th of June, 1857, and commented upon it in the manner that I am now going to show:

"Of the Kansas question, but little need be said at the present time. You are familiar with the history of the question, and my connection with it. Subsequent reflection has strengthened and confirmed my convictions in the soundness of the principles and the correctness of the course I have felt it my duty to pursue on that subject."

That is the quotation which I made. I then comment on it as follows:

"What has occurred since to induce a change of this course? I fear ambition has done its work. I fear imaginary private griefs have been actively at work. I have heard of a meeting of the Illinois delegation to consider of the policy to be pursued. I give at least one gentleman from Illinois notice that I shall bring up a matter in connection with the movement of that delegation in reference to this defection on the Kansas question, when I have an opportunity to do so."

Mr. Chairman, I wish the committee to understand that this extract from my Kansas speech is the sharpest criticism which I made upon the course of Judge DOUGLAS. I said: "I fear ambition has done its work." "I fear imaginary private griefs have been actively at work." And if the gentleman can put his finger on any remark in the whole of that elaborate speech of mine which is of sharper significance than this, I should be glad if he would do it. This, and my array of the history of the past to confront the doings of the present, was the utmost point of my offense. What follows? I went on and said:

"I will say this, in conclusion, that the delegation from Illinois, or a portion of them at any rate, met together here, when Congress assembled, to consider the course which a certain gentleman in the other end of the Capitol should pursue, and the means he should use to secure his reelection to the United States Senate. I say that much; and I will make out the case when I have the time. I say that certain extraordinary action has resulted in a concerted movement having an eye alone to his reelection."

Cut off in my remarks by the expiration of my hour, the following immediately occurred:

"Mr. PALMER obtained the floor.

"Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

"Mr. PALMER. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

"Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I would like to state that the charge of the gentleman from Virginia is wholly and entirely unfounded.

"Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do not know about it of my own knowledge; but when a member of that delegation speaks to that effect, when he tells it to me without reserve, tells it to another person, and, I may say, to still another—I allude to the successor of the gallant Richardson—I take it to be true. He told me that they had a conference; that in that conference they came to the conclusion that the only chance for the reelection of Mr. DOUGLAS to the United States Senate was in the course he has pursued. I speak openly and squarely, because I have nothing to fear nor favor to ask.

"Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I do not know from whom the gentleman received his information; but if he intends to include the whole Illinois delegation, I, as one of that delegation, can tell him that it is wholly and entirely unfounded, so far as I am concerned. I do not believe any such general conference ever was held."

The next day a personal explanation took place, from which I make the following extract:

"Mr. SHAW, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to what I regard as a privileged question. I see by the published proceedings of yesterday that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] used this language in reference to the Illinois delegation:

"I allude to the successor of the gallant Richardson. I take it to be true. He told me that they had a conference; that in that conference they came to the conclusion that the only chance for the reelection of Mr. DOUGLAS to the United States Senate was in the course he has pursued."

"I wish to say that no such consultation was ever held, to my knowledge; that I never participated in any such consultation.

"Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I say the same for myself."

Mind you, that was what I said. I stated my conclusions; I stated the evidence upon which those conclusions were founded; I referred to the witness—that witness the colleague of the gentleman himself—all occurring in the presence of the committee and in the presence of the gentleman, [Mr. MARSHALL.] The committee will see that this whole subject was understood then.

Here, then, was a distinct understanding, that my statement of the conference rested exclusively upon the testimony of, and upon the statement made to myself and to other gentlemen by one of his colleagues, whose name was given. He, himself, had come into the discussion and entered a disclaimer, covering the ground entirely in a manner that was satisfactory. The thing was understood, and it was understood by every man. I shall not, therefore, refer further to the discussion on that occasion; but will now proceed, briefly and rapidly, to state the grounds of my complaint. I have no doubt that if the gentleman from Illinois could have got the floor earlier he would have done so. But in the Globe of the 16th of April, appeared the speech of the gentleman from Illinois, claiming to have been delivered on the previous 31st of March, and which I shall now proceed to read in detachments.

The gentleman from Illinois says:

"But the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has made himself conspicuous by his assaults upon Illinois and her distinguished Senator."

Why, sir, in my speech I stated the evidence and views upon which I relied. I indulged in no abuse; I indulged in no vituperation, no assault. My purpose was, and I state it here without hesitation, to break down the moral force of the distinguished Senator of Illinois. He had taken a position which had filled with astonishment the whole country; and, according to my impression, the course of the whole Illinois delegation had filled the country with equally as much astonishment. They came here, sir, a unit in opposition to the Administration. And, sir, such a combination is not likely to pass without exerting its influence upon the public sentiment. Representing as I do a portion of the Democracy and people of the country, I felt it to be my duty and my right, for the purpose of defeating the moral influence exerted by the Senator from Illinois, to place his past history in contrast with his present position.

But the gentleman says I made an attack upon the State of Illinois, as well as upon her distinguished Senator. I have said what was the attack which I made upon the Senator, and I now deny emphatically that I have said anything which can be construed into an attack upon Illinois, unless, indeed, the distinguished Senator from Illinois, and the Illinois delegation in this House, are that State. I deny that I uttered one solitary word derogatory of the State of Illinois. On the contrary, I acted upon the presumption that she had been ill-treated by those to whom she had given her confidence in this great controversy. I went upon the idea that the character of that State had been assailed by the course taken by her Representatives upon this floor. But the gentleman says:

"Following the example of ladies of doubtful reputation, he, too, seems desirous of patching up his own political character by assailing that of other men."

Now, sir, I am not able to draw illustrations from ladies of that character. The gentleman, however, who, in another part of his speech, said he never spoke without information, I presume has not violated his own rule, and therefore speaks from his own personal knowledge. But, sir, the gentleman says further:

"He has arrogated to himself a superior sanctity, and stands up in the market-places and thanks God that he is not as these publicans and sinners."

Sir, when have I used any such language? When have I assumed any air of superiority? I call upon the gentleman to lay his finger upon any evidence of it. He goes on to say:

"Towards the close of his singular speech he abandons, for a time, generalities and insinuations, and attempts, by distinct charges, to assail the motives of Judge DOUGLAS and his associates. One of these arraignments is in these words:

"Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will say this in conclusion: that the delegation from Illinois, or a portion of them, at any rate, met together here, when Congress assembled, to consider the course which a certain gentleman in the other end of the Capitol should pursue, and the means he should use, in order to secure his reelection to the United States Senate. I say that much; and I will make out the case when I have the time. I say that certainly extraordinary action has resulted in a concerted movement, having an eye alone to his reelection."

Mr. Chairman, what I have to complain of in this connection is, that the gentleman should have torn from the context of my speech a detached paragraph, and presented it to the country as all that I said on the subject to which it refers.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say right here, in this connection, that I did not speak of what seemed to be an insidious attack upon Judge DOUGLAS running through the whole speech, but I quoted the whole paragraph, and everything in connection with it. I stated that there was no truth in the statement; and I now state that there is no truth, and never was any truth, in it. I had no purpose to misrepresent the gentleman, and I am sorry if I have done so. But, sir, I deemed it to be my duty to state that there was not a word of truth in any statement that any such conference was held by the Illinois delegation such as that referred to by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. What I complain of, is that the gentleman should have taken a single paragraph, making what purports to be a charge, without explanation, when I stated precisely the grounds upon which I made my statement, and stated that I had no personal knowledge in relation to the matter whatever. I say, sir, that the publication of this paragraph, simply without explanation, is plainly unjust, and violates all the rules of evidence. Upon the same principle, you could make the Scriptures assert, by leaving off the first part of the sentence, "the fool hath said in his heart there is no God," that there is no God.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I do not intend to submit to any such line of criticism. I quoted the entire passage. I so stated to the House, and there was no suppression in spirit or in fact.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman must not use the term not to me. I will do just what I please. That is all. I shall do exactly what I deem right.

I have quoted from the speeches which were submitted, for the purpose of putting in my speech what I did say, and what I said to the committee and the gentleman when he had the floor, and was making his disclaimer. I do assert that the gentleman has not done me justice, in publishing a part of those remarks, all bearing on the same subject, and which, as published by him, gives an impression to the country, different from that which the character of the case would justify.

The gentleman then goes on:

"I have already stated on the floor of the House that this charge is wholly and entirely destitute of truth."

I wish that paragraph particularly noted. It can be contrasted with what the gentleman actually did say on the floor, and which I have quoted in the early part of my remarks, and we are left to judge how far he was warranted in taking that line of remark on this occasion:

"It has no foundation whatever, in fact. I allude to it now for the purpose of adding that the honorable member ought to have known at the time that it could not be true."

The gentleman goes on to tell us of the various rumors in the papers of an interview between Senator DOUGLAS and the President, and the various stories of the matter which are floating about. Let me tell the gentleman that, when he made that statement he ought to have known from the evidence which had been delivered in his presence by his own colleague, [Mr. MORRIS,] that he was unwarranted in making it.

Sir, let us look and see what his colleague did say in this very discussion, a discussion, do you not observe, which induced the gentleman to make the statement which I have just read, "that I ought to have known." How ought I to have known? Was I to give credence to the thousand and one rumors which float about in the political circles of this country? No, sir, certainly not. "I recollect," says the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRIS,] in the presence of his colleague [Mr. MARSHALL,] on this floor, on the 27th March last:

"I recollect, further, (and I apprehend that out of this has grown this whole trouble,) having a conversation with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] upon this subject. However he may have understood me, I have a distinct recollection in regard to it, and of stating that, after our arrival here, and after ascertaining that Judge DOUGLAS would take a position antagonistic to the Lecompton constitution, the question occurred as to the time when he should make his speech. The conference upon that subject, however, took place between Judge DOUGLAS, Colonel Richardson, and myself, without any knowledge of it on the part of the other members of the Illinois delegation. It was a mere casual meeting at Brown's Hotel, where Colonel Richardson was stopping. I remarked to Judge DOUGLAS, at that conference, that if he had made up his mind to oppose the Lecompton constitution, in my judgment, he should avail himself of the earliest opportunity to deliver his views in regard to it; for if he should wait until after the election on the 21st of December, when the vote was to be taken upon the adoption of the constitution, his motives would be impugned, and his enemies thereby gain an advantage of him. This, as he freely expressed himself, corresponded with his own opinion."

That was the evidence of the gentleman's own colleague, delivered in the face of the American people. Even the gentleman's own colleague did not know the fact as to the course which Judge DOUGLAS was going to take. After coming here, he ascertained that course. Yet the gentleman, in the face of the testimony which I have just read, says that I ought to have known better; I, who have a sanguine nature and a credulous one; I, who believe in the fidelity of men; I, who give up with profound reluctance the attachments I form, political and personal; I, who had watched the course of the distinguished gentleman to whom I refer with admiration and with pride and pleasure; I, who had been his friend, was asked upon vague, indefinite rumor to believe that all his glorious antecedents were to be disregarded, and that he was to take a new direction. I could not believe it unless officially informed of the fact. It seems that it was not known to the colleague of the distinguished gentleman that he would take ground against the Lecompton constitution.

And Judge DOUGLAS did not, even in that interview, tell the gentleman what was his purpose. Yet, sir, I ought to have known; I, a stranger, outside of the councils and confidence of this distinguished man, I was to know better than those who were in concerted action with him!

But the gentleman proceeds:

"It was known throughout the whole country (the matter was discussed in the newspapers some time before Congress convened) that the Senator from Illinois was opposed to the unqualified admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution."

I deny the fact. I deny that it was known throughout the country. I deny it utterly. I prove that it was unknown to his own colleagues. I say that it is a hard rule to expect that by intuition I should have been able to anticipate the political friends of the Senator. I did not know that he would take a new course; and if the gentleman desires to be assured of it, I will assure him that I did not. I did not believe it to the last. I did not believe it until Judge DOUGLAS, in the Senate of the United States, in hot haste jumped upon the President's message, and took upon himself the ungracious task of pulling down his own political friends. So much for that.

As to the question of fact, there is no occasion for any additional testimony. From the testimony of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BURNETT,] and others, it clearly appears that we had good reason to believe that there was such a conference as the one of which we have been speaking. That is a question of fact for the gentleman from Illinois to settle with his colleague.

The honorable member from Illinois then goes on to say:

"The honorable member has been equally unfortunate in the other specific charge which he thought proper to make. It is equally baseless, and equally destitute of the semblance of truth. That charge is made in the following language:

"Let me say here, also, that Mr. Calhoun wrote to Judge DOUGLAS, not as a Senator, but as a friend, stating the plan that was to be pursued, and asking his advice in reference to it. No answer to that letter was ever received, but the Chicago Times came out and indorsed the proposed plan. I state, as a fact, which will not be disputed in any quarter, that Senator DOUGLAS, not as a Senator, but as a conspicuous friend of this gentleman, was written to in the month of September, asking his advice as to the course to be pursued in the submission of the constitution, and that he never responded to that letter by dissent or affirmation."

Mr. Chairman, I will state, as a fact which will not be disputed, that Senator DOUGLAS, not as a Senator, but as a friend, was written to in the month of September by Mr. Calhoun, who asked his advice as to the course which ought to be pursued in the submission of the constitution of Kansas. It is not denied by Judge DOUGLAS or the honorable member, [Mr. MARSHALL,] that Mr. Calhoun wrote to Judge DOUGLAS, and that Judge DOUGLAS never responded on this great question in which so deep an interest was felt throughout the country; and in connection with which the Senator from Illinois was so thoroughly interwoven. His personal friend writes to him for counsel and he withholds it. He responds not. He counsels not. He advises not. I do not undertake to speak of the courtesy due from one friend to another who writes for advice. Friendship ought to have induced one friend to step in and save the other from the deep damnation of an erroneous policy, deemed, it seems, so fatal and so mischievous to the country. But Judge DOUGLAS was silent. And why? But let me proceed:

"I repeat, the Chicago Times, understood to be under his influence, was published, containing an article indorsing the suggestions of that letter. I have not time to go into this question as I would like; but such are the facts in relation to this matter."

The only question then on this particular subject is, how the Chicago Times—understood to be under the influence of Judge DOUGLAS—advised. I shall not pause to consider that question. I can only repeat what is known perhaps to every man familiar with Illinois politics, that that paper is under the influence of Judge DOUGLAS. It is the organ now, of the DOUGLAS wing of the Democracy in that city. It is in its confidence; it is now doing battle fast and furious in support of that interest, and—as I gather from the papers—in hostility to the friends of the Administration. But let that pass.

The next question is, did the Chicago Times contain such an article? You know how difficult it is to procure copies of these papers after the lapse of considerable time. I made my best endeavors to get hold of that paper, but I was unsuccessful for a long time. The gentleman, however, [Mr. MARSHALL,] in his speech, published an article from the Chicago Times, of the 14th of October, different from that which was ascribed to it by Mr. Calhoun. I know that that article does not support the allegation. But why was that article selected? The gentleman says in his speech that he selected it because he understood that Mr. Calhoun had given the date of that paper as being the paper containing it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Let me state to the gentleman—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I quote what you say in your speech.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Let me state the fact.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will state it myself. The article was selected because, as the gentleman represents in his speech, it appeared in the paper of the date designated by Mr. Calhoun. Well, I believe Mr. Calhoun did designate such a date. He spoke from memory, however. He spoke from information as to the contents of a paper published last year; and the thing remained in that indefinite and uncertain shape up to a recent hour. A short time ago, however, I received an Illinois paper. I know that gentlemen will scout the authority, as it is a Black Republican paper. I received it, and it furnished me, for the first time, with a criticism on my course, and on the speech of the gentleman from Illinois, which aroused me to this exposition.

Mr. KILGORE. I object to the gentleman from Virginia reading from Black Republican papers here.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I read from the Springfield (Illinois) State Journal of the 19th of May, 1858. The editor says:

"We give the first paragraph from the Times's article: 'In a speech delivered in the House of Representatives by Mr. WILLIAM SMITH, of Virginia—otherwise called 'Extra Billy'—he is reported as having said that the mode adopted by Calhoun and his Lecompton associates in not submitting the Lecompton constitution to a vote of the people, was adopted because it was suggested by the Chicago Times, which was supposed by Calhoun to express the opinion of Judge DOUGLAS on that point.'

"We did not meet with this statement by Mr. SMITH until we saw it quoted in a speech by Mr. MARSHALL, of this State, who quoted it to brand it as it deserved. But having met it, we now have to state that it is utterly destitute of truth. No article of the kind ever appeared in the Chicago Times. From the earliest meeting of the convention to its adjournment, we always assumed it to be an ascertained fact, that the convention would submit the constitution, and the whole of it, to the people of Kansas for rejection or approval."

"The Times, it will be seen, talks out in flat denial of this with an immense amount of emphasis."

The editor of the Journal proceeds:

"It may be forgetfulness on the part of the Times, but it is nevertheless a fact, that the organ of Senator DOUGLAS did, in the first place, as charged by Mr. SMITH, come out against a general submission of the Lecompton constitution. We do not know anything about the letter which Calhoun wrote to DOUGLAS, though it is understood in town here that such a letter was written. Neither do we know anything about the failure of DOUGLAS to respond to the 'plan to be pursued,' but it is a fact, which the Chicago Times cannot successfully contradict, that that sheet, about that time, did publish such an editorial as Mr. SMITH refers to. The editorial was of such a remarkable character that we cut it out and put it in our scrap-book for safe keeping. We have the article before us now, and the following are paragraphs taken from it:

"We think the convention that will frame the new constitution in Kansas will exhibit far more regard for public tranquility and public honesty, by conducting their proceedings without any reference to the Topeka adherents; and, as they have declared it shall never go into operation in the State, we think there is about as much propriety in submitting it to their approval as there would be in submitting it to the approval of the inhabitants of the Feejee islands."

"As the adherents of the Topeka convention refused to participate in the election of delegates, and are sworn to resist the new State government when established, they have no right to be consulted in the formation of that State government."

It will be observed that the paper vindicates what I stated as to the course of the Chicago Times. The gentleman emphatically says:

"The most amazing fact in reference to this calumny is, that no such article as the one indicated by the honorable gentleman from Virginia has ever, at any time, appeared in the columns of the Chicago Times. This fact, at least, if it existed, could be easily proven; and I defy the gentleman to produce the evidence. If he fails, which he most assuredly will, the charge is not only shown to be false, but utterly destitute of foundation or plausibility from the beginning."

To this I have only to say that, having no personal knowledge myself, and acting necessarily upon the information of others, as the gentleman himself does, I furnish a complete answer to the paragraph quoted, in the extracts I have read.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Does the gentleman give the date of the Chicago Times in which that article appeared?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Only as I stated. Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Have you given any date?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. No, sir; only as I have read. The gentleman wants to hang upon the absence of a specific date.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I do not want to hang upon anything. I stated some time ago on the floor of the House, and now repeat, that no article such as the one indicated in the gentleman's former remarks ever did appear in the Chicago Times. I care not what garbled extracts the gentleman may bring from the unscrupulous Black Republican organs, which are the proper backers of the gentleman in his tirade against the Democratic party of Illinois.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will keep cool. I read again. Says the Journal:

"But it is a fact which the Chicago Times cannot successfully contradict, that that sheet, about that time, did publish such an editorial as Mr. SMITH refers to. That editorial was of such a remarkable character that we cut it out and put it in our scrap-book for safe keeping. We have the article before us now," &c.

He must be a most unscrupulous Black Republican if he would make such a statement as that when there was no foundation for it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. The Chicago Times denies the publication of any such article.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have the evidence of it here. Let me get through and then the gentleman can respond to me. The extract goes on as follows; the editor says—

"The above is only a small part of the Times's article, but the whole of it is to the same stunning effect. If this was not a bold stand against submitting the Lecompton constitution to the people and an indorsement of the Calhoun plan, then what is it?"

Here, then, is an extract distinctly sustaining my statement, if it be a veritable extract from a veritable article. I beg the gentleman to remember that I am acting upon such evidence as I have before me. I am making a statement founded upon the article that I have just read, in which it is clearly and distinctly stated that it would be as mad to submit this constitution to the Topekaists as it would be to submit it to the inhabitants of the Feejee islands, as they had sworn it should never go into operation. Well, sir, if this be a veritable extract, then my statement, founded upon the information of others, is indicated and maintained beyond all human question. This article in the Springfield paper, then, goes on to speak of the Chicago Times as being the paper of Judge DOUGLAS—not as being under his influence, but that it was his paper.

Now, the gentleman says that this is a Black Republican paper. Well, sir, I confess that I should desire pretty strong evidence, where there was a great issue, to satisfy me that any partisan press always spoke the truth. But, without meaning to compliment the Black Republicans, I know enough of many of the members of that party, to know that there are many of them who would be as apt to speak the truth as many others.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman permit me for a moment? I simply want to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia, and the gentleman from Illinois, that they must strike out the word "black" if they mean to use this testimony, for I believe they both object to blacks giving testimony. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That is the reason that this testimony is received with so much hesitation.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman give it credit, coming from the source it does?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am making this explanation in order to excuse myself for doing it. But, sir, this statement, thus made, under the responsibility which attaches to every man who occupies a decent social position, has been extensively circulated. I have not seen it denied in the Chicago Times. The National Union, an Administration Democratic paper, established at Chicago by some warm Administration Democrats, to counteract the malign influence of the Chicago Times, gives sufficient credit to this Republican article to give it insertion in its columns of the 21st instant. I see no doubt expressed or intimated; but, on the contrary, it is headed by an article having direct reference to the gentleman

[Mr. MARSHALL] himself, and which, perhaps, he has seen.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. The paper to which the gentleman now refers is a paper calling itself the national Democratic organ, and representing a very small and unscrupulous clique, who are acting in perfect harmony with the Black Republicans—the unscrupulous portion of that party—to defeat the regular Democratic organization of the State of Illinois.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I deny that they are acting with the Republicans.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. They are patting each other upon the back for the purpose of breaking down the regular Democratic organization, and are copying each other's articles with commendation.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to deny here in my place that there is any arrangement, express or implied, between the Administration-Democratic party and the Republicans in the State of Illinois.

I wish to say one word more. The gentleman has assailed the veracity of the Springfield State Journal in my State. I do not know the editors of that paper personally. I know it to be a highly reputable and able paper; and if my colleague denies that that is a correct quotation from the Chicago Times, I assure him that I will prove that it is as soon as I can communicate with the editors of that paper; or, if I am wrong, I will make a public explanation of it. I do this merely with a view of saying what I ought to say as an honorable man, when the character of gentlemen in my State is assailed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I wish to remark that it is just as I expected. The gentleman from Virginia is acting in harmony with the Republican party to make an assault upon the regular Democratic organization of the State of Illinois, and has their sympathy in so doing. He is patted on the back, and sustained in his efforts by the Republicans, just as the same movement is sustained in Illinois.

The charge of the gentleman against Judge DOUGLAS was, in effect, although it was not directly made, that he had indicated the mode adopted by the Lecompton convention of submitting the constitution. I stated that that was untrue; that there was no truth in it; and I repeat it here to-day. In regard to the articles in the Chicago Times, I say that, admitting the quotation from it to be correct, in common fairness the whole article ought to have been quoted, so that the committee could be able to judge of the effect of it; and that the date should be given: otherwise, I say the gentleman is entitled to no credit for the assertion. I do not pretend to say that the extracts which the gentleman has quoted here may not possibly, at some time, have appeared in the Chicago Times; but I say that there is nothing in the course of that paper which indorses any such sentiment; nor has it ever been indorsed by Judge DOUGLAS.

I do not know what concert of action there may be between the party of the gentleman from Virginia and the Republicans, for the election of John Wentworth to the United States Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and Mr. KELLOGG. Abraham Lincoln is the Republican candidate for Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KELLOGG. In reply to the charge of our patting the heads of both wings, or either wing, of the Democratic party in Illinois, I desire to say that we intend to 'pat them so hard that we will beat them both, and elect our own man; which I believe we shall do.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I never knew a beaten party in my life that did not cry out "victory" before election. And what will be done by the Republicans of Illinois in the future, will be judged by their experience in the past. But let me resume—for I presume, from the frequency of the gentleman's interruptions, that he does not intend to reply.

Now, sir, I presume it is not denied that General Calhoun, being a personal and political friend of Judge DOUGLAS, addressed to him a letter indicating the policy which he proposed to pursue. It is undeniable that Judge DOUGLAS received this letter, and assented to it so far as his silence could give that assent. I have read an article in the Chicago Times. Now, sir, I will present other testimony. On the 21st of May last, the National Union, a paper also published in the city of Chicago, which copied the article I have referred to from the Springfield Journal, with the following comments—

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I am aware that the committee cannot take a great deal of interest in these personal matters; and it is unpleasant to me at any time to engage in them.

In the remarks which I made on a former occasion, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, I did it with no purpose of misrepresenting or reflecting unjustly upon the gentleman. But, sir, I deemed it due to myself, to the Senator from Illinois, and to the people of Illinois, to say what I did on that occasion. I cannot now go into the details of that discussion. I understood the whole course and tenor of the speech of the gentleman from Virginia to have been, in effect, an assault upon Judge DOUGLAS, and not a regular discussion of the principles involved in the Kansas controversy. That was the bearing and the object of it. The gentleman intimates that my speech as printed probably differs, so far as it refers to him, from that delivered. In this he is mistaken. There may have been some verbal changes—nothing more. The article from the Chicago Times, which I appended to my printed speech, I did not have time to read then, but I gave notice that I would print it. This objection sounds strange, coming from the gentleman from Virginia. Why, sir, the speech of the gentleman, which he was but one hour in delivering, covered thirty columns of the Congressional Globe—matter that he could not have delivered in two hours; and yet the gentleman complains of my having printed what I did not speak.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It is well known, as I said, on that occasion, that gentlemen very frequently intimate, as I did several times in the course of that speech, that extracts will be published which there is not time to read. But, sir, never put in personal matters which are not spoken.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Well, sir, to proceed. It is well known to gentlemen here that the speech which I delivered on that occasion, was delivered late in the evening, and I will add was almost wholly impromptu, without preparation or premeditation; and it would not have been very strange if, in the heat of debate, I had said what my cooler judgment would not wholly approve. But, sir, that the House may know exactly what I did say in regard to the gentleman from Virginia, I send up to the Clerk's desk, and will ask to have read all that portion of the speech which relates to the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

"But the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has made himself conspicuous by his assaults upon Illinois and her distinguished Senator. Following the example of ladies of doubtful reputation, he, too, seems desirous of patching up his own political character by assailing that of other men. He has arrogated to himself a superior sanctity, and stands in the market-places and thanks God that he is not as these publicans and sinners." Towards the close of his singular speech, he abandons, for a time, generalities and insinuations, and attempts by distinct charges to assail the motives of Judge DOUGLAS, and his associates. One of these arraignments is in these words:

"Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will say in conclusion: that the delegation from Illinois, or a portion of them at any rate, met together here, when Congress assembled, to consider the course which a certain gentleman in the other end of the Capitol should pursue, and the means he should use, in order to secure his reelection to the United States Senate. I say that much; and I will make out the case when I have the time. I say that certainly extraordinary action has resulted in a concerted movement, having an eye alone to his reelection."

"I have already stated on the floor of the House that this charge is wholly and entirely destitute of truth. It has no foundation whatever in fact. I allude to it now for the purpose of adding that the honorable member ought to have known at the time that it could not be true. It was known throughout the whole country (the matter was discussed in the newspapers some time before Congress convened) that the Senator from Illinois was opposed to the unqualified admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution. Upon his arrival in this city, some days before Congress convened, almost his first act was to wait on the President, and state to him frankly his views in regard to this question. Their meeting was said to be cordial, and their conference frank and friendly; but their differences on this question were also said to be radical and irreconcilable. An account of this visit and conference was at the time published in the various papers throughout the country, and ought to have been known to the honorable gentleman. I take it for granted, however, that he had forgotten or overlooked these facts, which were so well known to the whole country."

"The honorable member has been equally unfortunate in the other specific charge which he thought proper to make. It is equally baseless, and equally destitute of the semblance of truth. That charge is made in the following language:

"Let me say here, also, that Mr. Calhoun wrote to Judge DOUGLAS, not as a Senator, but as a friend, stating the plan that was to be pursued, and asking his advice in reference to it. No answer to that letter was ever received, but the Chicago Times came out and indorsed the proposed plan. I state as a fact, which will not be disputed in any quarter, that Senator DOUGLAS, not as a Senator, but as a conspicuous friend of this gentleman, was written to in the month of September, asking his advice as to the course to be pursued in the submission of the constitution, and that he never responded to that letter by dissent or affirmation. I repeat, the Chicago Times, understood to be under his influence, was published, containing an article indorsing the suggestions of that letter. I have not time to go into this question as I would like; but such are the facts in relation to this matter."

"Mr. Chairman, I am utterly amazed that any gentleman, and especially the honorable member, should travel out of his path and his line of argument for the purpose of bringing forward, and placing on record, a charge of this character against a distinguished leader of his own party; and that leader a man who has been more prominent, open, bold, and constant in the advocacy of the constitutional rights of the South, and the principles of the Democratic party, than any man now living. If the charge were true, the propriety of that gentleman bringing it forward in the manner and under the circumstances in which he lugged it into his speech, would be at least questionable; but what will the House and the country think of it when I state, what I now do, broadly and distinctly, that in every essential particular it is utterly destitute of foundation or truth? Let me be distinctly understood. It is not contended that Judge DOUGLAS ever wrote to Mr. Calhoun on the subject. The charge plainly and distinctly insinuates, rather than directly made, is that the author of the Kansas-Nebraska act, not openly and boldly, but in an underhand and skulking manner, indicated to Calhoun, through the columns of the Chicago Times, the mode of submission of the constitution which was adopted by the Lecompton convention. I repeat, sir, that the charge is as destitute of truth as any charge could possibly be. Judge DOUGLAS is in no manner responsible for the editorial conduct of the Chicago Times. That is an independent Democratic journal, friendly in its main, to the distinguished Senator from Illinois; but its editorial conduct is in charge of a gentleman who thinks, acts, and writes for himself, without submitting to the direction or dictation of any one. But this disavowal is not important. The most amazing fact in reference to this calumny is, that no such article as the one indicated by the honorable gentleman from Virginia, has ever, at any time, appeared in the columns of the Chicago Times. This fact, at least, if it existed, could be easily proven, and I defy the gentleman to produce the evidence. If he fails, which he must assuredly will, the charge is not only shown to be false, but utterly destitute of foundation or plausibility from the beginning."

"I do not, Mr. Chairman, charge the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] with willful falsehood or misrepresentation. Far be that from me. I have too high an appreciation of what is due to this body, and to the position of the honorable gentleman, even to insinuate such a charge for a moment. I would not believe for a moment that any gentleman occupying a seat on this floor, much less one so distinguished as the honorable member, would be guilty of so base a fabrication, or of giving it currency, knowing it to be false. But what I complain of, is that the friends of Judge DOUGLAS have a right to complain of, is that the gentleman should, without investigation, pick up from the parlous and streets of Washington anonymous slanders against a distinguished statesman, fabricated by plundered parasites, and the miserable leopards, hungry pack who are ready to bark at the heels of any one who they may think is under the bar of power—slanders which have been floating around the streets of Washington all winter, but which the friends of Judge DOUGLAS deemed wholly unworthy of their notice. We have a right to complain that so distinguished a gentleman should lend his name to give currency to charges which before were unworthy of notice, and allow himself to become the conduit through which this miserable spawn of malice and defamation should be poured forth upon the House, and sent out to infect the moral atmosphere of the whole country."

"Mr. Chairman, I shall append to my remarks, when printed, the article which Mr. Calhoun has indicated as the one which he supposed reflected the views of Judge DOUGLAS on the question of submission of the constitution to be framed at Lecompton. Calhoun first saw it in a Kansas paper, copied from the Chicago Times. It appeared first in the Daily Times of the 14th October, 1856. I have evidence, satisfactory to myself, that Judge DOUGLAS knew nothing of this article at the time it appeared, and probably never saw it until I furnished him, a few days ago, a copy of the Times in which it appeared. But be this as it may, it will be seen that the article, instead of sustaining, utterly disproves the charge made by the honorable member from Virginia; and I have no hesitation in saying, that if the mode of submission, indicated in that article, had been adopted in good faith, the result would have been satisfactory to the people of Kansas, and to the whole country, ultra factionists, North and South, alone excepted."

"The following is the article which appeared in the Chicago Times, October 14, 1856, which has been indicated by Mr. Calhoun as the one which he supposed reflected the views of Mr. DOUGLAS in regard to the mode in which the constitution framed at Lecompton should be submitted to the people of Kansas for their ratification or rejection:

"KANAS—THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.—The convention which was elected in Kansas to frame a State constitution for that Territory will soon meet again. They cannot fail to have observed, what all the rest of the world has observed, that the voice of the people of Kansas is in favor of a free State. We know not what may be the purpose or the feelings of the delegates upon the question of slavery, but the recent election has demonstrated that nothing else than a constitution which shall exclude and prohibit slavery will be accepted by the people of the Territory. That fact is so patent that no man can shut his eyes to it."

"It is said that the convention, when elected, was unanimously pro-slavery; that we know to be untrue; we know that there were many delegates who were in favor of obeying the wishes of the people; and a majority in favor of submitting their action, no matter what it was, to popular approval or rejection at the polls. What that convention will do, or what it will not do, we have not the means of knowing. But we know that any attempt to force a pro-slavery constitution upon the people without the opportunity of voting it down at the polls, will be regarded, after the recent expression of sentiment, as so decidedly unjust, oppressive, and unworthy of a free people, that the people of the United States will not sanction it. It would add thousands to the vote of the Republican party in every State of the Union, and give to that organization what it has never had yet—a show of justice and truth."

"To the Democratic members of that convention the course is plain. The people have decided in favor of a free State; though they have not voted on the naked issue of 'free State' or 'slave State,' they have voted practically in favor of a free State. Two thirds of the Democratic party in Kansas have voted with the 'free-State' party at the recent election, in order to make the popular decision more emphatic. As Kansas must be a free State, even those persons in the Territory, who are known as 'pro-slavery' men, must recognize in the late election a decision which must not be slighted nor put at defiance. To that expression of the popular will there should be a graceful, if not a cheerful submission. Kansas is to be a free State! That fact being ascertained, let the convention frame a constitution to suit her best interests upon all other questions, and let the prohibition of slavery be put in it, clearly, and without quibble; plainly, without disguise; explicitly, broadly, and firmly. Let the convention then submit that constitution to the people. If it be adopted, Kansas will come into the Union at the next session, and the Republican party will expire for want of sustenance. If any members of the convention desire to prolong the controversy, or to have a regular direct vote upon slave State and free State, let a free State constitution—the Topeka constitution, divested of such of its provisions as time has shown to be unsuitable—and a slave State constitution be prepared. Let them both be submitted to the people—the vote to be 'free-State constitution, yes,' or 'free-State constitution, no;'' 'slave-State constitution, yes,' or 'slave-State constitution, no.' Let them, if they desire to vote in favor of a slave State, have the opportunity; but let the constitution be submitted to the popular vote, and at an early day."

"Let the present convention submit this matter to the people without delay, and have the long controversy settled finally, and in the only effectual manner that is possible. In six months after the admission of Kansas, Black Republicanism will be no more."

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I shall detain the committee but a moment longer. In the remarks which I then made, I did not intend to do any injustice to the gentleman from Virginia. After hearing his remarks to-day, and giving them all the weight and importance I think they are entitled to, I do not believe that I did the gentleman from Virginia any injustice in the remarks which I then submitted. I intended to cast no personal reflections upon him, but I intended, in as direct and distinct language as I was capable of using, to say to the House, that the specific charges made against Judge DOUGLAS and the Illinois delegation were not true, and had no foundation in fact. And I now repeat, after hearing the evidence which the gentleman has brought forward, that I do not think any man can believe that he has brought forward even the semblance of proof to establish the truth of one of the charges. I did not propose, nor do I now, to go over the entire columns of the Chicago Times, in order to ascertain whether there was any such statement introduced as a quotation or illustration, or in some connection of which I could know nothing, as that referred to in the Journal, introduced here by the gentleman.

I will say this to those who seem to be sensitive about the Illinois Journal: that I mean now to cast no particular reflection upon the Journal or its conductors, other than to state, what we all know to be the fact, that it is too often the case that little reliance is to be placed upon statements of fact in mere partisan papers. When the editor of the Times, and gentlemen upon this floor state that no such article appeared in that paper, if anybody intends to assert the contrary, in common fairness the article ought to be produced in extenso, and the date of the paper ought to be given, so that the assertion may be directly and distinctly met. But we have nothing of that kind. The article I copied I took from the Times of the date therein indicated. There is no question about it that indicates what was the policy of the editor of the Times—at that time, at least. It is also the article which was indicated by Mr. Calhoun, while he was in this city, as the one to which he referred when he made the charge which has been floating about this city, and which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] took up and poured out upon this floor, that Judge Douglas had indicated the course to be pursued by the Lecompton convention. As I have said, the article appended to my speech was the one he referred to.

Taking all these facts together, I do not think that the gentleman from Virginia has supported himself in any respect by the evidence he has brought forward on this occasion; and whatever may be produced hereafter, it is my conviction—indeed I have not a particle of doubt about the matter—that the charge which has been floating about, and to which the honorable gentleman is endeavoring to give currency, that Judge Douglas interfered in any way or form with the conduct of the convention in Kansas or any of these conventions, is utterly destitute of truth. The gentleman has abandoned his original charge. He says now that Judge Douglas ought to have answered the letter written to him by Mr. Calhoun. I have spoken to Judge Douglas about this. He does not pretend to say that Mr. Calhoun may not have written to him. He thinks that he did; but he does not recollect the purport of such letter. Judge Douglas, as everybody is aware, has a large correspondence, and is daily receiving a large number of letters from all portions of the country. Acting on his general policy of not interfering, directly or indirectly, with the affairs of the people of that Territory, as a matter of course he would not have given any advice upon the subject. It would have been improper for him to have attempted in any manner to influence or control the free action of the people of Kansas. He could not have done so without abandoning his policy of non-intervention, of letting the people of Kansas settle their affairs in their own way. Acting on that policy, it was his duty to pay no regard to any such letter, if received. Such, at least, is my view of his duty. He never did give any answer to it. Gentlemen may arraign him, and think that he did wrong. I think that he did right. No one can object to any one making any fair criticism upon facts which do exist. What I object to is the assertion of things as facts which have no foundation whatever.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I want five minutes. The gentleman has occupied my time, and I only ask a small portion of his.

The gentleman will readily see, that when these rumors were rife throughout the country, and, moreover, when Judge Douglas took the position he did, it filled the breasts of a great many Democratic gentlemen with alarm and with distrust, and prepared them to entertain, with some degree of belief, any further statements corresponding therewith.

In reference to this particular fact, I have adverted sufficiently. I believed it because an honorable gentleman, as I supposed, John Calhoun, an old friend of Judge Douglas, so stated it. I bring this evidence up in support of my statement. I could not be erroneous in believing these things, especially when there were other circumstances which justified it. I think that the only blame, perhaps, that I can be charged with, is the moderation of my criticism. It is remarkable that, in a speech of some elongation, I was so forbearing.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I will not detain the committee. This is a matter of little importance. If I have done any injustice to the gentleman from Virginia, I should say so, and say so frankly. I have never desired to do him injustice. I do not desire to do him injustice now. In regard to this matter, I think the gentleman has assumed to himself too much importance. If the Democracy of Judge Douglas or any other gentleman is to be tried, I should object, at least, to the jurisdiction of the gentleman from Virginia. I should insist on some man trying him, or them, who has a much more unquestionable record than the gentleman possesses. I think that the honorable member, who has been endeavoring for years to affiliate the dark-lantern order, as it has been called throughout the country, may be a very proper person to come forward to assail the Democracy of other gentlemen with garbled extracts from a bitter partisan Republican paper of Illinois. As I have said before, I do this with no purpose of casting any special censure upon that paper. The extracts quoted may have appeared at some time, and in some connection, in the Chicago Times; but without the connection, without the date, without anything about the context, it is impossible for anybody to form a correct judgment in regard to it. It is unfair for gentlemen to bring them forward here even if they were derived as stated, without stating the date and the context, and the circumstances under which the language was called forth.

I will say, in conclusion, that if I have used language which the gentleman deems offensive in regard to his associations with other parties—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I trust that the gentleman will allow me a word here. I will say that I have a pretty long record, and that no man can put his finger where I have departed from any principle of the Democratic party; and the gentleman, must remember that I was never found working against the Democratic party, as the gentleman has been in the recent struggle on the Kansas question; and it is remarkable that the gentleman, who has affiliated with the Black Republicans in overthrowing the Democratic party, and did his best with that object in view to the last, should talk about my affiliation with the American party.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Such reflections, Mr. Chairman, do not disturb me a particle. I have never acted in opposition to Democratic principles, or any legitimate or authorized Democratic organization, and no man can, with truth, charge that I have. All that I have done in regard to this matter, and every act of mine on the floor of this House, has been dictated by my own judgment and my convictions of right and duty—duty to myself, to my constituents, to the country, and especially to the Democratic party, which never can be benefited by an abandonment of principles. I do not set myself up as the great organ of the Democratic party, to read other men out of it, or to make assaults upon them in regard to their course. I have done nothing of the kind. In my course on Kansas, and all other matters, I have acted according to the dictates of my own judgment, and I do not object to other gentlemen doing so. What I do object to is, that the gentleman should arrogate to himself the office of censor, and bring up far-fetched and unauthentic charges, having no foundation in fact, against those who have occupied, and now occupy, higher positions in the Democratic party than he ever did or ever can occupy; men who have devoted their whole lives to its service, and upon whose record there is neither spot or blemish.

Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I desire at this time to say in regard to this matter. If the gentleman from Virginia is satisfied, I can certainly have no motive or desire to continue this discussion any further, and will therefore let it stop here.

Mr. GROW. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield me the floor?

Mr. GROW. If it be only for a moment, I will yield.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I will move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate on this bill in five minutes after the committee shall have resumed its consideration.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois, yielded.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES then moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Bock reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 557, which he had been directed to report back with certain amendments; and also House bill No. 555, as to which the committee had come to no resolution.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved the previous question on the passage of House bill No. 557, making supplemental appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1859.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The several amendments reported back by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on bill No. 555 be closed in ten minutes after its consideration shall have been resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCIES IN INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Bock in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 555) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1858.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the controversy which sprung up some time ago at the instance of the member from Virginia, he has chosen, on this occasion, voluntarily, to renew. It has ever been my object, since I have had a seat on this floor, to treat every gentleman here with courtesy and kindness. But I found myself unexpectedly involved by the exposure which the member from Virginia thought proper to make, of what he claimed to be a private conversation in my private room. Sir, while I seek no controversies, if they are forced upon me, I shall not shrink from them. The object of the gentleman in renewing the matter here to-day is evident to the House, and will be evident to the country. He desired, sir, to assail, and, as far as he could, to blast the reputation of the honorable Senator from Illinois, Judge Douglas, the latchet of whose shoes he is unworthy to unloose.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I just want it distinctly understood that if the gentleman utters any word of offense to me I will not stand it one instant.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman may stand it or not, as he pleases.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I call upon the Chair to preserve order, or I will preserve it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois must remember that it is contrary to the rules of the House to indulge in remarks casting personal reflections on any member, and will please to refrain from doing so.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. If I have trespassed upon the order or decorum of the House, I certainly owe the House an apology for it, while I owe none to the member from Virginia, and have none to make to him. This controversy, let me repeat, has been voluntarily renewed by him; and inasmuch as he has read what he says is an article from the Chicago Times, I ask the Clerk to read an editorial in that paper in relation to the point of controversy involved, which I send up to the desk.

The Clerk read the article, as follows:

"A STALE FALSEHOOD.—In a speech delivered in the House of Representatives by Mr. WILLIAM SMITH, of Virginia, (otherwise called 'Extra Billy,') he is reported as having said that the mode adopted by Calhoun and his Lecompton associates in not submitting the Lecompton constitution to a vote of the people was adopted because it was suggested by the Chicago Times, which was supposed by Calhoun to express the opinion of Judge Douglas on that point.

"The following is the portion of the speech of Mr. SMITH in which this statement was made:

"Let me say here, also, that Mr. Calhoun wrote to Judge Douglas, not as a Senator, but as a friend, stating the plan that was to be pursued, and asking his advice in reference to it. No answer to that letter was ever received; but the Chicago Times came out and indorsed the proposed plan. I state as a fact, which will not be disputed in any quarter, that Senator Douglas, not as a Senator, but as a conspicuous friend of that gentleman, was written to in the month of September, asking his advice as to the course to be pursued in the submission of the constitution, and that he never responded to that letter by dissent or affirmation. I repeat, the Chicago Times, understood to be under his influence, was published, containing an article indorsing the suggestions of that letter. I have not time to go into this question as I would like; but such are the facts in relation to this matter."

"We did not meet with this statement by Mr. SMITH until we saw it quoted in a speech by Mr. MARSHALL of this State, who quoted it to brand it as it deserved. But, having met it, we now have to state that it is utterly destitute of truth. No article of the kind ever appeared in the Chicago Times. From the earliest meeting of the convention to its adjournment, we always assumed it to be an ascertained fact that the convention would submit the constitution, and the whole of it, to the people of Kansas for rejection or approval."

"When we ascertained that the convention had inserted a clause establishing and perpetuating slavery, in defiance of the popular wish, as expressed in the election of Parrott, we took the ground that the constitution was a ridiculous mockery, because the people, when they came to vote upon it, would vote it down. When the news came that the convention had so framed the schedule that the people would not have the privilege of voting upon the constitution—either for or against it—we were perfectly astounded, not only with the rascality of the proceeding, but with the bold, unblushing repudiation of solemn pledges which necessarily accompanied it."

"During the winter, however, we understood that Mr. John Calhoun justified his conduct by alleging that the course he had pursued had been followed because it had been recommended by the Chicago Times. Indeed, Mr. Calhoun so stated in a private letter which he addressed to us upon the subject. We took pains to have Mr. Calhoun indicate the particular article in the Times upon which he forwarded his impudent and craven apology for his own shameful conduct. That article is as follows:

"KANSAS.—THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.—The convention which was elected in Kansas to frame a State constitution for that Territory will soon meet again. They cannot fail to have observed, what all the rest of the world has observed, that the voice of the people of Kansas is in favor of a free State. We know not what may be the purpose or feelings of the delegates upon the question of slavery, but the recent election has demonstrated that nothing else than a constitution which shall exclude or prohibit slavery will be accepted by the people of the Territory. That fact is so patent that no man can shut his eyes to it."

"It is said that the convention, when elected, was unanimously pro slavery; that we know to be untrue; we know that there were many delegates who were in favor of obeying the wishes of the people; and a majority in favor of submitting their action, no matter what it was, to popular approval or rejection at the polls. What that convention will do, or what it will not do, we have not the means of knowing. But we know that any attempt to force a pro slavery constitution upon the people, without the opportunity of voting it down at the polls, will be regarded, after the recent expression of sentiment, as so decidedly unjust, oppressive, and unworthy of a free people, that the people of the United States will not sanction it. It would add thousands to the vote of the Republican party in every State of the Union, and give to that organization what it has never had yet—a show of justice and truth."

"To the Democratic members of that convention, the course is plain. The people have decided in favor of a free State; though they have not voted on the naked issue of 'free State' or 'slave State,' they have voted practically in favor of a free State. Two thirds of the Democratic party in Kansas have voted with the 'free-State' party at the recent election, in order to make the popular decision more emphatic. As Kansas must be a free State, even those persons in the Territory who are known as 'pro slavery' men, must recognize in the late election a decision which must not be slighted or put at defiance. To that expression of the popular will, there should be a graceful, if not a cheerful submission. Kansas is to be a free State! That fact being ascertained, let the convention frame a constitution to suit her best interests upon all other questions, and let the prohibition of slavery be put in, clearly, and without quibble, plainly, without disguise, explicitly, broadly, and firmly. Let the convention then submit that constitution to the people. If it be adopted, Kansas will come into the Union at the next session, and the Republican party will expire for the want of sustenance. If any members of the convention desire to prolong the controversy, or to have a regular direct vote upon slave State and free State, let a free-State constitution—the Topeka constitution, divested of such of its provisions as time has shown to be unsuitable—and a slave State constitution be prepared. Let them both be submitted to the people—the vote to be 'free-State constitution, yes,' or 'free-State constitution, no,' 'slave State constitution, yes,' or 'slave State constitution, no.' Let them, if they desire to vote in favor of a slave State, have the opportunity; but let the constitution be submitted to the popular vote, and at an early day."

"Let the present convention submit this matter to the people without delay, and have the long controversy settled finally, and in the only effectual manner that is possible. In six months after the admission of Kansas, Black Republicanism will be no more."

"And this is the article which John Calhoun, when driven to a corner, represented to the President and Cabinet as the one from which he derived the plan not to submit the constitution to the people at all! And this poor, pitiful falsehood, framed by Calhoun as an apology for conduct of which even he was ashamed, is taken up by Smith, and gravely repeated to the House of Representatives. The statement when made by Smith has not even the questionable excuse which Calhoun might have offered for his fabrication. Smith had not been a member of the Lecompton convention, like Calhoun, and therefore was not driven by personal motives to hide his own political turpitude by a falsehood."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will suspend the reading. This is a part of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois; and the Chair, in as kind and polite a manner as possible, notified the gentleman from Illinois that it was not in order to indulge in personalities.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Well, sir, the only part of the editorial that I cared anything about has been read. I wanted the editor of the Times to speak for himself in regard to this matter. He states in that editorial—and that was one object in having it read—that he took pains to have Calhoun indicate, when he heard he was making the charge that his course in Kansas was based upon an article which had appeared in the Times, to what article he referred; and Calhoun responded that he referred to the article quoted there, which is identically the same article which my colleague [Mr. MARSHALL] incorporated in his speech. Now, sir, I have done with that branch of the subject. It fixes the misrepresentation where it belongs.

The gentleman has again referred to a conversation which he says occurred with me in my private room. When this matter was before the House some time ago, I remarked:

"I invited the gentleman to my room for the purpose—as I think the gentleman will bear me witness—mainly of introducing to him an old soldier friend, who formerly lived in Virginia, and who had come on here for the purpose of obtaining a pension, and I was desirous of enlisting the members of the House in his favor."

To that remark the gentleman from Virginia replied as follows:

"It is said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRIS] that this conversation occurred in his room, in the presence of his family. That is true, sir; but I went with a view to consult with him, as he has stated, and this public subject came up in conversation after that private matter was disposed of."

He came to my private room to consult with the old soldier, as I stated, and as he has admitted. Now, sir, that old soldier, the member from Virginia, and myself and family, were the only persons present at that interview. I desire that old soldier to speak for himself as to what was said on that occasion. I ask that the affidavit which I send to the Clerk's desk may be read as a part of my speech. Not a word or line of it was written or dictated by me, nor do I know who did write it. It embodies his own recollections of the facts.

The affidavit was read, as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, McDONOUGH COUNTY, ss:

The undersigned, Thomas Smithers, being duly sworn, doth depose and say, that he was at Washington city during a part of the winter last past, for the purpose of prosecuting a claim for a pension; and while there, some time in the month of December, he, affiant, spent an evening at the room of Hon. J. N. Morris, and was informed by said Morris that ex-Governor Smith, of Virginia, would be there to see affiant in reference to said claim. Affiant further states that said Smith came to said room about half past seven o'clock p. m. of said day, and remained there from one half to three quarters of an hour. That the only persons present were the said Smith, Morris and his wife, and affiant; and affiant now most positively states that no such statements as said Smith has attributed to said Morris, in a speech recently delivered by him, Smith, in the House of Representatives, in substance that "the Illinois delegation in Congress had had a conference, and determined or agreed that the only way for Judge Douglas to secure his reelection to the United States Senate was by opposing the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution," were made by said Morris at the time, nor was anything said by said Morris which could be so construed to bear any such meaning; but on the contrary, said Morris, in said conversation, insisted, in the strongest terms, that said constitution was a fraud on the people of the Territory of Kansas, and that the same ought not to be forced upon them, against their well-known and expressed wishes, and that the admission of Kansas under said constitution would be a clear violation of the principles of popular sovereignty, and would defeat and ruin the entire Democratic party; and I am sure that Mr. Morris said nothing, in said conversation, which could have been fairly construed to imply that the Illinois delegation were opposed to the admission of Kansas for merely selfish or personal motives; nor was anything said, in said conversation, about any meeting or conference of the Illinois delegation upon the subject, or any action having been taken by them. Affiant was at the room of said Morris when said Smith came, and remained there nearly an hour after he left, and was participating in the conversation, and heard all that was said while Governor Smith remained.

THOMAS SMITHERS.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, McDONOUGH COUNTY, ss:

This day personally came before me, the undersigned, clerk of the circuit court of said county, the above-named Thomas Smithers, who made oath before me that the foregoing statement, by him subscribed, was true, to the best of his knowledge and belief.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of said court, this 5th day of April, 1855.

W. T. HEAD, Clerk.

Pending the reading of the affidavit, the time for debate having expired, the hammer fell.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I would like to have five minutes more. I would like to have time in which the Clerk might finish reading the papers I have sent to his desk.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to act in perfect fairness. I will yield to the gentleman, that he may go on with his remarks, for five or ten minutes. I hope the discussion will be soon brought to a close, and that the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. J. GLANCY JONES] has treated me with great courtesy, and I thank him for his kindness. I ask that the affidavit be read through.

The Clerk finished the reading of the paper.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I send another paper to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned citizens of McDonough county, Illinois do state that they have known Thomas Smithers, whose petition to the Congress of the United States is hereto annexed, for more than twenty years; that they know him to be an honest, upright, honorable old man, whose veracity cannot be impeached; and that they have read the foregoing petition, and firmly believe the facts set forth therein are true.

MACOMB, January 1, 1855.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. That paper was sent here under the charge of Colonel Richardson, at the time when Mr. Smithers made his application for a pension. He was here himself, as he states in his affidavit, during the month of December last; was before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and told his own story, and exhibited to them honorable scars and wounds received in the battles of his country. It is gratifying to me to be able to say that that committee were unanimous in reporting a bill for his relief, and that it has since passed both Houses of Congress, and become the law of the land, placing his name upon the pension roll of the Government. He is a highly intelligent and honorable gentleman, and stands as fair as any man in the country for truth and veracity; but I have no particular comments to make in reference to his affidavit. It speaks for itself. The people will judge of it; and they will judge, too, of this renewed attack of the member from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] upon the Senator from Illinois.

It was not my purpose to indulge in crimination or recrimination on this or any other subject; but as the member from Virginia has undertaken to assail the Democracy of Illinois, and to read out of the party Governor Wise, of Virginia, and many other prominent gentlemen, I must say a word or two in regard to him. I could go into the political history of the gentleman from Virginia, and show fully his affiliation with Know Nothingism. Indeed the evidence of that is to be found on the public records of the country. What was the character of his speech delivered in this Hall a few days ago against the admission of Minnesota but a violent Know Nothing speech? He objected to her admission, because her constitution permitted aliens to vote after a certain residence; for there was no other objection to it, and none other was assigned. It was, I repeat, a purely Know Nothing speech. Besides, a gentleman of his district, whose name I will be happy to furnish him, if he desires it, has offered me any amount of testimony to prove the gentleman's Know Nothing proclivities. He has sent to me voluntarily (I did not ask it) some evidence on that point. Here is a Know Nothing ticket, a true-blue ticket, in which the gentleman's name is printed as the Know Nothing candidate for Congress. It is headed the "American ticket." Here it is in full:

THE AMERICAN TICKET.

For Governor.

THOMAS STANHOPE FLOURNOY, of Halifax county.

For Lieutenant Governor.

JAMES M. H. BEALE, of Mason county.

For Attorney-General.

JOHN M. PATTON,
of Richmond city.

For Commissioner of Board of Public Works.

RICHARD G. MORRIS,
of Richmond city.

For Congress.

WILLIAM SMITH, of Fauquier county.

For State Senate.

For House of Delegates.

I hold here, too, a Know Nothing paper, published in the gentleman's district, in which it is contended that the gentleman was elected by the Know Nothings. Let me add that I have also been informed by a distinguished Democrat of the gentleman's district that a young man who is in the custom-house at Alexandria, and whom the member tried to have removed from office, filed in the Treasury Department certain charges of a grave political character against him, and the member agreed, if he would withdraw them, that he would withdraw his demand for his removal. He was glad to play "quits" with him. I know nothing of my own knowledge of the truth of this matter; but the member can have the name of my informant if he desires it. He will find him responsible for what he says.

But, in addition to all this, I can take the speeches the gentleman has made in this Hall, at this and at previous sessions, and prove Know Nothingism upon him beyond all controversy. He may say that he is not a member of any lodge, and has not taken their oaths, but if he eats soup out of the same bowl with them, he is with them in spirit and in fact. It may be that he is like the wolf that watches round the flock, and wishes to get the booty without being caught. He was elected to this House by Know-Nothing votes. I have read the Know-Nothing ticket on which the gentleman ran for Congress. The gentleman can decide whether the ticket is genuine or not. [Here Mr. MORRIS held out the ticket to Mr. SMITH, but he refused to take it.] He will see that his name is upon it for Congress, and how came it there if there was no community of interest or fellow-feeling?

[The committee here informally rose, and a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by JAMES BUCHANAN HENRY, his Private Secretary, when the committee resumed its session.]

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Now, if he goes outside the Democratic organization; if he refuses to support the Democratic nominees, as he did refuse to support Governor Wise, what right has he to come into this Hall and talk about reading men out of the Democratic party? It is not modest in him, to say the least. The gentleman has brought this controversy upon himself. I might add additional proofs. I have a publication of the member's in which he complains of a certain Know Nothing letter which found its way to the public, being used in that way, when it was a private one, but I will not read it. I said, Mr. Chairman, that I would not trespass upon the patience of the committee by entering into any lengthy controversy. I have set myself right, and put the member from Virginia in a position from which he cannot escape; and I will not trouble the committee further.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the committee to allow me ten minutes to reply.

Mr. ADRIN. I object. The gentleman has already had his hour.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. But new matters have been brought up now. I hope the committee will not deny me ten minutes.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Having given way ten minutes for the gentleman from Illinois, it is no more than right that I should yield a like amount of time to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman from Virginia has occupied an hour, while I have only occupied fifteen minutes of the time of this committee; and now I will not permit him to have the last word. I am more than willing he should speak, if an opportunity is given me to reply. I offered to yield the floor to him when I was speaking, but he declined; seeking for some advantage.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I do not propose myself, to occupy but a small part of my hour, and as I have yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, I am willing to yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Virginia, with the understanding that I will not again give way.

Mr. GROW. I object for this reason. The gentleman from Virginia has already occupied an hour, and I think we had better go on with the public business.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand that no one objects. Surely no one will object.

Mr. GROW. I am appealed to by my friends all around me, to withdraw my objection. I will state that my object in moving that the committee rise, was to stop this debate. I will, however, withdraw my objection, if the committee want this debate go on.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I object, unless the gentleman from Illinois shall have the same length of time to reply.

Mr. HALL. Then I object altogether.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Then I will go on with what I have to say.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will make one more appeal to the committee. If they will give me permission, I will take five minutes.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman from Virginia has occupied one hour already. If he has the floor now, he will, I am sure, say something that some gentleman will want to reply to. I think we had better go on with the public business. I do not think this matter should have been brought here at all, and I object.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to say a very few words in explanation of this bill. It is a bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1858.

The first clause makes an appropriation for restoring and maintaining, by peaceable measures, friendly relations with the Indian tribes in Oregon Territory, during the year ending 30th of June, 1858.

This is the same provision which is contained in the regular bill for the other Territories.

The second clause is for the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending 30th of June, 1858.

The third clause is for the payment of the claim of Overton Love and John Guess Chullasasos, for the value of property forcibly taken from them by citizens of Texas.

The fourth clause is for payment to such Cherokees as were omitted in the census taken by D. W. Siler, but who were included and paid under the act of July, 1848, the same per capita allowance that was paid the other Indians under that distribution, provided the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be satisfied they ought to be included in said per capita distribution.

The fifth clause is for contingencies of the Indian department, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending June 30, 1858.

The seventh clause is, for indemnity to George W. Stedham, a Creek Indian, for property stolen from him and injured by a citizen of the United States, $125. That is under the intercourse act.

The eighth is, for general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington, or so much thereof as may be required during the year ending June 30, 1858, $16,000.

The ninth and last is, for the Senecas, of New York, for interest, in lieu of investment, on $75,000, at five per centum, per act of 27th June, 1846, $3,000; and for payment of the difference in salaries of the agents for the Sioux and Seminole Indians, for the Omaha agency, for the Kickapoo agency, for the Kansas agency, and for the Neosho agency, between the rates as fixed previous to the act of 3d March, 1857, and the rate authorized by said act from the 3d March, 1857, to the 30th June, 1858, $3,991 68.

The bill was read by clauses for amendment.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend by striking out, in the thirteenth line, "$264,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$362,349 09;" so as to make the clause read:

For restoring and maintaining, by peaceable measures, friendly relations with the Indian tribes in Oregon Territory, or so much thereof as may be necessary for expenditure during the year ending 30th June, 1858, $362,349 09.

I find, by looking over the estimates, that this item has been cut down from the sum I propose to restore, to that which I move to strike out.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The gentleman will find that the sum estimated for was $264,000, and that is the amount reported by the committee.

Mr. LANE. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will look at the estimates, he will find that the committee made a mistake, and that the whole amount estimated for is that which I propose to insert.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I think the gentleman from Oregon is referring to estimates of the Indian agent, not to those of the Department.

Mr. LANE. No; I am right, and certainly the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will see the necessity of having my amendment adopted.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This item to which the gentleman refers me is an additional matter which the committee thought might be dispensed with.

Mr. LANE. Will the gentleman permit me to explain?

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

The question was then taken; and Mr. LANE's amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to strike out the following clause:

"For restoring and maintaining, by peaceable measures, friendly relations with the Indian tribes in Oregon Territory, or so much thereof as may be necessary for expenditure during the year ending 30th of June, 1858, $264,000."

We have heard much complaint, Mr. Chairman, about the Treasury being depleted, and about the want of money, and about the very great apprehensions which existed at headquarters, that the Government could not possibly be carried on in the present depressed condition of the commerce of the country. Now, sir, there is not a solitary item given for this aggregate of $264,000; and I want to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to give me one solitary item going to make up that amount; whether it is to go for clothing the Indians, or for food, or for carrying out treaty stipulations, or for any other purpose. I say it is an outrage to come here and demand this enormous appropriation without some explanation; and when the gentleman, or those whom he represents, talk to the country about economy, I arraign them and ask them to act like intelligent, sensible men, when they call upon the people of the country to contribute, in the shape of taxation, this amount of money for indefinite purposes.

Whenever appropriations are called for for regular purposes, the rules are either interposed, unnecessarily, to cut them off, or the powers that be are brought to work to crush out and interrupt the healthy legislation of the country, and to hold laws, already existing, in subserviency to their will and dictation. If money has got to be paid, I shall object to anything unless the objects are distinctly specified, and unless we have the items, and the reasons making appropriations for them necessary. I will oppose this system of voting money blindly, without having even the question discussed. I object to the plan of one gentleman having always the floor at pleasure, by the consent of the occupant of the chair, whoever he may be. For these reasons, I hope the House will take the business in charge, and not submit to dictation from any quarter.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I have but a very few words to say in reply to the gentleman from Georgia. In the first place, my friend from Oregon moves to increase the sum $98,000, and I am obliged to object to that, because we have not as much money as we want to spend, admitting that it could be well expended, and now the gentleman from Georgia wants to strike out what is left in the bill. I have simply to say that this policy has been inaugurated for some years, and I will send to the Clerk's desk what the Secretary says about it, and if the gentleman from Georgia will take the trouble, he will find all the items in detail.

Mr. SEWARD. I not only want the items, but I want the law on which they are predicated.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. It was not supposed that the items would be very interesting in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but if gentlemen wish to have them, it will give me great pleasure to produce them.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask not only for the items but for the law.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I ask that the Clerk will read what the Secretary says. I have simply to remark in addition, that this policy has been adopted, and that this amount will be required to carry it on.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"As explanatory of the propriety and necessity of estimating for this sum to supply the deficiencies of the Indian service in Oregon, reference is made to copies of letters received from Superintendent Nesmith, numbered from 1 to 3, herewith, with copies of accompanying estimates made by the superintendent for funds required for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1858; also, to copies of letters from the same, treating, at length, the subject of the policy pursued in managing Indian affairs in Oregon, the wants of the service, and the inadequacy of the means provided therefor, numbered from 4 to 6; and to copies of letters addressed from this office to the superintendent, showing the action thereof in connection with the control and direction of the appropriations made by Congress at its last session, and the remittances made therefrom for the Indian service in this Territory, numbered from 7 to 14. From the estimates made by the superintendent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1858, exclusive of treaty stipulations, which amount, in the aggregate, to $910,918 95, taken in connection with the remittances made for the same period, and for the same general objects, amounting, altogether, to $516 431 07, it would seem that the actual deficiency for this service would be greater than now asked for; but, inasmuch as the superintendent has stated that the remittances for the Indian service in Washington Territory will suffice therefor to the close of the year ending June 30, 1858, the amount asked for is deemed sufficient to meet the deficiencies in Oregon, and is the same as the amount appropriated for like purposes and objects by the act of March 3, 1857, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1857."

Mr. SEWARD. I have no desire to embarrass the business of the committee, and will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out the following clause:

"For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending 30th June, 1858, $55,500."

I make the motion, for the reason that but a few moments ago we passed an appropriation bill for the Indian service of the Government, which contained this clause:

"For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, including traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and clerk hire, $55,500."

Now, if gentlemen will look at those two clauses, they will observe that they are almost word for word the same, except that that which we have already passed upon makes specifications which ought always to be made in all these appropriation bills. But in this clause, which we are now called upon to pass, there is no specification at all, but an appropriation for a general purpose, undefined and unlimited.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The clause in the other bill was for the next fiscal year; this is for a deficiency for the current year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the remarkable fact is presented that the deficiency in the past appropriation is more than a thousand dollars greater than the original appropriation for the next fiscal year. The appropriation in the first bill was $55,000, and this is a deficiency amounting to $56,593, being $1,593 more than the total appropriation for the next ensuing fiscal year. Sir, I can give no sanction of mine to any legislation of that character. I move, therefore, that the clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the following clause:

"For the payment of the claim of Overton Love and John Guess, Chickasaws, for the value of property forcibly taken from them by citizens of Texas, $3,700."

I desire to call the attention of the committee to that item. It is a small one, it is true; but I wish the committee to know what we are appropriating money for. I find in the estimates this recommendation:

"For the payment of the claim of Overton Love and John Guess, Chickasaws, for the value of property forcibly taken from them by citizens of Texas, $3,700."

I find the following note appended to that recommendation:

"A copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated June 26, 1857, addressed to D. H. Cooper, agent, &c., marked I, herewith, will show the character of this claim, and also the promise of the Commissioner to render an estimate therefor."

I now wish to call the attention of the committee to the letter which is the authority, and the only authority, for this appropriation. I read the letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, June 26, 1857.

SIR: Your letter of the 27th ultimo, calling my attention to the claim of Overton Love and John Guess, Chickasaws, for the value of seven negro slaves forcibly taken out of their possession in 1847, and carried off by certain citizens of Texas, has been received.

I have very carefully examined and considered the case, and am of opinion that, under the treaties and laws, they should be paid the value of the same by the United States. I have taken the valuation placed upon them by David Wall, a disinterested witness, together with the comments of late Agent Smith, to be nearer their true value than that placed upon them by the other witnesses. As there are no funds at the disposal of this office applicable to the payment, I shall send in an estimate for the amount assessed by Wall, to Congress, at its next session, and ask that an appropriation may be made.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. DENVER, Commissioner.

DOUGLAS H. COOPER, Esq., Agent, &c., present.

Now, sir, we have a letter from one Indian agent to another Indian agent, and upon this is founded the opinion of Commissioner Denver that this claim of $3,700 ought to be paid to certain Indians named. There is not a particle of proof; not one fact; nothing upon which the judgment of any living man can be passed. We are to take on credit the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the law and facts of the case, without disclosing the law under which he adjudges the case, or the facts upon which he renders his decision. I take it that that is too loose a way to appropriate the money of the Government; and if no better foundation can be shown for this proposition, I trust the committee will strike it out.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I state upon information which I believe to be authentic, that this is due under the intercourse act. The gentleman will not, I presume, question the liability of the Government to pay for property taken or destroyed under the intercourse act.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not question the liability of the Government to pay, under the intercourse act. But what I object to is, that this item is here inserted in an appropriation bill, without any evidence of the facts upon which the claim is founded.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The only reply that I have to make to that is, that the Department have received the evidence, and I have no doubt they have carefully examined it. The evidence has satisfied them of the justice of the claim, and they have therefore recommended the appropriation.

Mr. LETCHER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, I will read what the Commissioner says. Here is the letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, June 26, 1857.

SIR: Your letter of the 27th ultimo, calling my attention to the claim of Overton Love and John Guess, Chickasaws, for the value of seven negro slaves forcibly taken out of their possession in 1847, and carried off by certain citizens of Texas, has been received.

I have very carefully examined and considered the case, and am of opinion that, under the treaties and laws, they should be paid the value of the same by the United States. I have taken the valuation placed upon them by David Wall, a disinterested witness, together with the comments of late Agent Smith, to be nearer their true value than that placed upon them by the other witnesses. As there are no funds at the disposal of this office applicable to the payment, I shall send in an estimate for the amount assessed by Wall, to Congress, at its next session, and ask that an appropriation may be made.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. DENVER, Commissioner.

DOUGLAS H. COOPER, Esq., Agent, &c., present.

Mr. REAGAN. One word right here. I say there is no evidence before us of the information upon which the Department arrived at its conclusions. We want the testimony of witnesses examined under oath to prove the right to the property, and the value of the property.

Mr. LETCHER. I have referred the gentleman to the letter of the Commissioner.

Mr. REAGAN. That is as to the value of the property; but not one word is said about the right to the property.

Mr. LETCHER. Why, sir, the right to the property is the first thing that the Department must be satisfied in relation to, before it takes any steps in relation to ascertaining the value.

Mr. KELSEY. I wish to ask if this is not precisely within the class of cases of persons who come here, from session to session, to prosecute their own private claims? I do not understand why the claims of these individuals should be singled out and placed in an appropriation bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I understand that this case was satisfactorily made out. It is for a violation of the intercourse act. The Department had all the evidence before them, and became satisfied that these were just and honest claims, and ought to be satisfied by Congress.

Mr. STANTON. I could not hear the letter read by the gentleman from Texas. I ask him to send it up and have it read, so that we may see upon what this claim is founded.

Mr. REAGAN. I will send it up.

The Clerk read the letter again.

Mr. STANTON. Now I want to know from the gentleman from Virginia, under what intercourse law the Government of the United States is bound to pay for slaves taken from Indians?

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I will answer the gentleman. It is the intercourse act of 1833, which provides that where a white man steals the property of an Indian, remuneration shall be made; and vice versa, where Indians, receiving annuities of the Government, despoil white men of their property, the value of that property shall be taken from the next annuity of the Indians.

Mr. STANTON. I understand the whole case; and it furnishes two or three good reasons why this provision should be stricken out. In the first place, I do not recognize the obligation of the United States to pay for slaves when they are only described by the general term, "property." I do not believe that, ex vi termini, slaves are recognized in the general term "property." And again, if the United States are bound to pay for this property which has been taken away, these are claims which should go on the Private Calendar and take their chances with the others; unless there is some reason for the adoption of this clause in the bill other than what has been presented, I think the provision should be stricken out.

The amendment of Mr. REAGAN to strike out the clause was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to strike out the appropriation in the following clause of the bill:

"For contingencies of the Indian department, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending June 30, 1858, $25,000."

Mr. Chairman, I find in this bill an aggregate of some $375,560, made up mostly of indefinite appropriations in the shape of contingencies. In spite of the doctrines of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, that specific appropriations should be made for specific items of expenditure, here is an appropriation made on the policy which superintendents of Indian affairs and Indian agents have sought to inductinate upon the Administration—an appropriation which is not in accordance with law, but to furnish employment for speculators. And yet, strange to say, when the Administration, in carrying out their economical policy, when Congress has made appropriations for the construction of important works they are stopped, and the commerce of the country is strangled, at the same time the Administration adopts the most outrageous, ruinous policy, indicated at the suggestion of men in power; and this House of Representatives is called upon to vote the money, in obedience to the behests of these Departments, which, in my opinion, are doing more to embarrass the Treasury, to strike down the public credit, and destroy public confidence, than any other cause. Two hundred and seventy thousand five hundred dollars for incidental expenses in one bill, and $375,000 in another for the same purpose. The estimates are made out, I suppose, by some officer of the Department sent here, indorsed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, and then communicated to this House. It seems almost a vain effort to resist such appropriations; and I make these statements now, because I intend that the country shall know the cause of the expenditures of the public money.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I oppose the amendment. I admire the spirit of my friend from Georgia, [Mr. SEWARD,] and I am sorry that it is not within my power to redress the grievances of which he complains.

Mr. SEWARD. I am not entitled to the gentleman's sympathies, and do not claim them.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to correct one statement that he made. He says that we take the statements of Indian agents. The estimates are sent here from the Secretary of the Interior, and reduced to as low a point as they can be put without injury to the public service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia was to strike out "$25,000." I move to amend by inserting "$24,500."

The gentleman from Georgia is mistaken when he states that this is an appropriation made upon reports of Indian agents to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is for contingencies of the Indian department, which arose in this way: during the last Congress a resolution was introduced calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to furnish all the correspondence which had taken place on Indian affairs in the Territories of Washington and Oregon. It will be recollected that we received a message from the President of the United States in answer to that resolution. I believe that there was some two or three cubic feet of manuscript sent here containing that information. A proposition was made to print it, but was negatived. Several clerks have been employed during the last year and since the adoption of that resolution, in order to comply with the request of the House. The resolution was introduced by a gentleman from New York, (Mr. Sage,) not now a member. The amount of this appropriation is what was necessary to pay for extra clerk hire in answering this call of the House for information, as well as others. The regular force of the office was insufficient to answer the call, as well as the regular duties devolving on them.

Mr. SEWARD. We hear a great deal said about incidents and contingencies. Now I want to know what these are incident to?—of what are they contingencies?

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield me the floor I will read. I refrained from reading while I was up.

Mr. SEWARD. I object to reading. I know that the gentleman can make up items from those letters from the Departments. That is what I object to—that these items are made up. I want to know what these appropriations are incident to, what they are contingent to, and upon what law they are predicated—contingent to what? I will tell you what they are contingent to. They are contingencies growing out of the reckless extravagance that is tolerated in some of the Departments of Government. They are incidents to estimates and expenditures made for objects with out the authority of law. The Departments inaugurate a policy, and send here orders for us to sanction it. I am determined, as far as I can, to break up this matter. I say that unless we are resolute in holding the Executive Departments down to the execution of the law, the Treasury will be subject to their entire control.

Here, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means exercises a predominating influence over the judgment of this House by reason of the importance attaching to the organization of that committee. I do not look upon the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, or of any other committee, as conclusive upon my judgment, especially when that recommendation is more or less dictated from the other end of the avenue, and by those in the Departments, who are not careful in obeying the behests of the law, and who, indeed, are too often prone to set themselves above the act of Congress.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend the amendment by adding $250.

My friend from Georgia has undertaken to read a lecture to the Departments about the misapplication of public money, and about the preparation of estimates to operate upon the House. If the gentleman had taken the trouble to look at what the War Department has sent here, he would have seen the precise reason for this expenditure of $25,000.

Mr. SEWARD. I want the law for it.

Mr. LETCHER. The law is this: that you, in all probability, in connection with others, in the last Congress, passed an order here demanding from the Department this information. It will be recollected that a mass of correspondence came here, weighing some fifteen hundred pounds, and that it took two stout men to place bundles of it upon the Speaker's table. It was for the copying of that correspondence, which occupied nine months, that the money is asked.

Mr. SEWARD. The gentleman from Virginia is always candid. Does he tell me that this is a contingency in the Indian department, and falls with the charge?

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, sir, it is; and I am only astonished that my friend from Georgia does not know it. The estimate is:

"For contingencies in the Indian department, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year June 30, 1858, $5,000. This estimate is made to meet and supply the deficiency in this appropriation, arising from the extraordinary demands thereon in the employment of additional clerical force consequent upon answering sundry calls for reports by Congress, and which are still in progress of execution, and for the performance of which the regular force of this office was and is inadequate."

Mr. SEWARD. Is that a contingency?

Mr. LETCHER. I say it is a contingency. Will the gentleman tell me who could have foreseen the order of this House that would have required one thousand five hundred pounds of paper to be written over? If that is not a contingency I would like to know what is. Is it not something which could not be foreseen? I think it would puzzle God Almighty himself, although it is said that His foreknowledge extends to everything—to know of some things which this House have done and will have done before the close of the session. There is a case where the House goes on and makes an order, without knowing what it is ordering. The Department is called upon to answer; and when it does answer, the House will not order the information to be printed, so absolutely worthless is it; and when money is asked for this expenditure, the gentleman from Georgia objects, on the ground that it is not a deficiency.

Mr. SEWARD. The gentleman has made out a very bad case. I voted for no such resolution of inquiry; and even if I had, I would still hold that the act of the Secretary was a usurpation of power in creating offices and in employing new clerks beyond the number of employees authorized by law.

Mr. LETCHER. How was he to answer the resolution?

Mr. SEWARD. He should have answered that he had not the requisite clerical force.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. Each Department of the Government has authority, when its force is inadequate, to employ an additional force, temporarily, for the purpose of answering a call made upon it by Congress, or any branch thereof.

Mr. SEWARD. In the first place, I take issue with the Department about the necessity of employing an extra clerical force. Judging from the general idleness of the clerks there, I should deem an extra force unnecessary; but if it was, the head of the Department has no such discretion. If his clerical force was insufficient to allow of his carrying out the order of the House, he should have announced that fact to the House.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. SEWARD. I am seeking for information myself.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Does the gentleman know the number of clerks employed in the Indian bureau?

Mr. SEWARD. I do not; but, taken in the aggregate, there are a great many of them. I see a great many of them in the streets more frequently than in the department; and when they are in the department, I generally find them sitting there smoking cigars.

Mr. GREENWOOD. There are only twelve or fourteen regular clerks in that department.

Mr. SEWARD. Well, there ought to be no such department. But that is not my position. I say that a public officer, in the exercise of his discretion, who does such a thing, becomes almost as obnoxious to the charge of corruption as if he had acted in defiance of law.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to read a section of the law?

Mr. SEWARD. I have but little time; and I will admit all that gentlemen say—that discretion is vested there. It only makes the matter worse. It is an abuse of discretion that ought not to be tolerated.

The question being on the amendment of Mr. LETCHER,

Mr. LETCHER withdrew it.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to amend by striking out the following clause:

"For indemnity to George W. Stidham, a Creek Indian, for property stolen from him and injured by a citizen of the United States, $125."

I offer the amendment because I think the clause is a private claim, and ought not to be contained in a general appropriation bill at all. It ought to be reported to the House in a private bill for the relief of the party entitled to it. I beg leave to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means what property this was which was stolen, and how the Government is responsible for it?

Mr. LETCHER. I will tell the gentleman. If he will look at page 52 of Executive Document No. 93, he will find this entry:

The United States To George W. Stidham, Dr.
1857.—January 1.—For the value of one mule stolen from him by Thomas Burkhead, a white man, who was convicted of the larceny of the same, as per the accompanying transcript of the record of the United States district court. . . . $80
For injury done to one mule, also stolen from him by the said Burkhead, &c. . . . 45

And this is accompanied by a copy of the record and notice of the conviction to the Department. Then the gentleman will find that the law on the subject is this:

"Where, in the commission, by a white person, of any crime, offense, or misdemeanor, within the Indian country, the property of any friendly Indian is taken, injured, or destroyed, and conviction is had for such crime, offense, or misdemeanor, the person so convicted shall be sentenced to pay to such friendly Indian, to whom the property may belong, or whose person may be injured, a sum equal to twice the just value of the property so taken, injured, or destroyed. And if such offender shall be unable to pay a sum at least equal to the just value or amount, what such payment shall fall short of, the same shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. BINGHAM. I have attained my object in offering the amendment, by getting information on the subject, and I now withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GARNETT. I move to strike out the following clause:

"For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington, or so much thereof as may be required during the year ending June 30, 1858, $16,000."

Mr. Chairman, I have been a member of Congress for two sessions. At the last session, as I well recollect, the appropriation bills were passed by this House almost without debate, and were sent back from the Senate loaded with amendments to the amount of millions of dollars. We heard those amendments read from the Clerk's desk, and, without being printed or considered, and without a separate vote, they were passed upon in gross. We are doing business now with a little more deliberation, but not much better. You are applied to for deficiencies in the Indian department, amounting to one or two million dollars; and we are acting on them under the force of the gag law, with but few members understanding anything about them; and I say this with all respect to the members around me. For one, I must say that I do not consider such legislation creditable to the House or to the country.

If this were a bill confined to specific appropriations, according to the principle inaugurated in the administration of Mr. Jefferson, there would be rather reason and plausibility in this method of passing it. But what is its character? The very first clause is:

"For restoring and maintaining, by peaceable measures, friendly relations with the Indian tribes in Oregon Territory, or so much thereof as may be necessary for expenditure during the year ending 30th of June, 1858, $264,000."

Does the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means call that a specific appropriation? The next clause is:

"For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending 30th June, 1858, $56,599 31."

Does the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means call that a specific appropriation? Then come some private claims; and then:

"For contingencies of the Indian department, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending June 30, 1858, $25,000."

And then comes the clause which we are now considering:

"For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington, or so much thereof as may be required during the year ending June 30, 1858, $16,000."

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania call any of these specific appropriations? And is it reasonable to ask us to vote them without explanation?

I think, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen will find how these appropriations have grown up to some extent if they look to Document No. 93, which my colleague [Mr. LETCHER] has quoted from. It consists principally of correspondence between Mr. Nesmith, the superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon and Washington Territories, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and the correspondence is marked by a disrespectful and almost impudent tone on the part of the subordinate. It seems that this Mr. Nesmith has been asking a great deal more money than was sent to him—a great deal more than Congress appropriated, and a great deal more than the department authorized. And how does he write to the department when they require him to send them estimates? He tells them in one sentence:

"In this remitting dribbling sums, [amounting to thousands and thousands] applicable only to particular quarters and none others, you have inadvertently hit upon the most direct and certain method of embarrassing the different agents in their accounts."

Again, he says:

"I can see no use in wasting time to prepare estimates if they are to be disregarded in making remittances."

This, mark you, is an agent writing to the department here. Again, sir, he says:

"If you have not confidence in the officers here, and can trust nothing to either their honesty or discretion, remove them and appoint others in whom you can repose confidence."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. The gentleman from Virginia seems to prefer a general bill of indictment against this appropriation bill. He finds fault with the whole of it on the single item now under consideration; after permitting appropriations to the amount of some two or three hundred thousand dollars to pass, he makes a point upon an appropriation of $16,000 on account of the incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory. Let me inform the gentleman and the committee that these expenses accrued under the administration of the present Delegate from the Territory of Washington, as Governor and ex officio superintendent of Indian affairs in the Territory of Washington; and that it was when an Indian war raged throughout that Territory, and when he was compelled to rely upon his own judgment of the laws of the land, and, if it became necessary, to expend money there for the purpose of restoring peace and quiet in that distant Territory, he had no opportunity to consult his superior officers, but was bound to incur expenses if he believed it would tend to the suppression of hostilities and the preservation of the lives and property of the citizens of the Territory. In this way the incidental expenses were incurred; or, in other words, the superintendent of Indian affairs having money in his hands for treaty stipulations, applied the money for incidental expenses. I will read the explanation of this item:

"On examination of the accounts of Governor Stevens and agents unsettled, it is perceived that although in the main balanced as to aggregate of debits and credits, yet, in the disbursements made by them, they will be creditors on settlement under this general head, and debtors to a corresponding amount under other heads; consequently, it will require this appropriation by Congress to make the necessary transfers on adjustment."

Mr. GARNETT. I now withdraw my amendment, and move to strike out "16,000" and insert "15,000."

I was not aware that the honorable gentleman from Washington was at all concerned in this item, and the gentleman from Missouri knew very well my remarks were not applied especially to this item, but to the general character of the bill.

I was commenting, at the close of my last speech, on the character of the correspondence of Mr. Nesmith, and I was quoting from his letters. Now, one of the points which we have made specially here, during this session, and it seems to me with great force, is that when Congress appropriates particular sums for a particular service it is not proper for the Executive Departments to exceed the appropriation. Well, it seems that Mr. Denver, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had taken the same view, and tried to enforce it on the agents in Washington and Oregon. What does Mr. Nesmith say? He says on page 29:

"It may be said that I have acted improperly in creating liabilities so far exceeding the remittances, and, for aught I know, the charge may be true."

This agent, after having been told by the Department that he must not exceed the estimates, acknowledges that he ought not to have done so, and yet goes on to do it, and accompanies it with language of official insubordination.

Mr. MAYNARD. Has not he been removed?

Mr. GARNETT. Removed! No, sir. Listen to the reply of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to him—

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I submit that the gentleman ought to confine himself to the subject-matter under discussion.

Mr. GARNETT. I appeal to the House to say whether, after having put the gag-law upon such a bill as this, it is for the Committee of Ways and Means to prevent its discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule requires the gentleman to confine his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. GARNETT. I cannot immediately turn to the letter of the Commissioner, but Mr. Mix wrote to this agent almost apologetically, that, really, in remonstrating against his extravagance, he thought he was simply doing his duty. Now, these expenditures in Oregon and Washington have gone beyond all compass and beyond all bounds. I presume that, at the time this war was commenced, there probably were not more than fifty thousand men, women, and children in both Territories; and yet they have incurred a war debt something like two hundred dollars apiece all round. Mr. Chairman, these Indian wars are too often systems of speculation upon the Government. The war is not upon the Indians, but upon the Treasury. A class of individuals living upon the frontier settlements get up these wars; they incur enormous expenses, then expect the Government to pay them. This Mr. Nesmith tells the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the Indians of Washington Territory do not cost as much as those of Oregon, for they live in part by hunting and fishing; but that it costs the Government about one thousand dollars a day to feed the Oregon Indians; that they are located on a tract of country which can afford nothing to supply their natural means of life. They are, in fact, kept prisoners, at an expense to this Government of $1,000 a day. I would suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania whether, if the Government has to support these Indians at this rate, it would not be cheaper to bring them to the city of Washington, and board them in some of the hotels here.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I think, Mr. Chairman, that injustice is done by the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARNETT] to the present superintendent of Indian affairs for these two Territories. He is a man of large experience in that country; a man of integrity of character, and of very superior business qualifications. I saw much of Colonel Nesmith when I turned over to him the superintendency of Indian affairs in Washington, and I can say that I never met a public officer in my life who was more anxious to do his entire duty to the Government. He was anxious to impress economy upon the Indian service, and I know that he has labored faithfully during his whole term of office, working many hours to reduce the expenses of that service. I visited Salem last August; I went to his office; I saw his instructions to the agents. I have had many of those instructions sent to me since I have been here, and I find a constant persevering effort running through all those instructions to bring down the expenses of that Indian service to the very smallest possible amount.

But here I meet the honorable gentleman from Virginia, firmly and squarely, on the charge of speculation and extravagance. I tell him that there has been no speculation or unnecessary expenses incurred by these two Territories, either in their Indian intercourse or their volunteer services—a service which enabled us to suppress these Indian hostilities and check the spread of rapine and massacre of our own people. It is easy to make these charges here; but, sir, we, as representing this people, deny these charges, and demand proof—unequivocal, positive proof—sworn testimony, showing the parties, showing the time, and showing the amount. If these things are not shown, then the charges will remain entirely unproved, are entitled to no weight, and will have no weight with this committee. Sir, we have been in an extraordinary position in those Territories. We have been exposed in all portions to attacks of Indians; so much exposed that, as I observed a few days since, the whole people of Washington for six months were compelled to live in block-houses. The people of Washington and Oregon have endured the most severe distresses; and yet, in that Indian service they have taken care to protect the Indians. That service has been a service of beneficence to the Indian tribes of these Territories. It has been a service which has dissuaded them from war, and has prevented them from going to war. Sir, these things ought to be known, for they are true of the people of both these Territories. It is due to the Indian agents of these Territories that they should be known; for never have officers worked in the midst of greater dangers; labored more assiduously for the Government; resisting clamor; resisting importunity; having only the service of the Government in view.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer three amendments, as separate clauses to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up one at a time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move, then, to amend, by adding the following:

For compensation of five extra clerks, employed in the office of Indian affairs, $7,000.

Mr. SEWARD. I want to know whether that amendment is in order. If it is, I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair considers it in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I am glad the Chair has so decided, for I have a very similar amendment which I want to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be very happy to apply the same rule to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I send up the following communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which will explain the necessity for the amendment.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

"OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, May 25, 1858.

"Sir: By acts of Congress of the 5th August, 1854, and 3d of March, 1855, and under appropriations made thereupon from year to year, five extra clerks have been kept in employment in this office; but for whose compensation no estimate has been made for the ensuing year. They have been employed at a compensation each of $1,400 per annum; and, as their continuance is indispensably necessary, I respectfully recommend and request that application be made to Congress for an appropriation of the required amount, namely, $7,000.

"Indeed, in view of the greatly increased and more complicated and difficult character of the duties of the office, occasioned by the extension of our relations and intercourse to and with many additional and distant tribes, and the numerous treaties entered into since 1853, there should be at least five more clerks, with salaries of not less than $1,400 per annum, added to the permanent force of the office. The condition of the business and the interests of the public service require such an addition, which would obviate the necessity of these special applications to Congress from year to year. A reorganization of the office and a new classification of its business is very much required, but to effect this in a proper and efficient manner, such an increase of the number of its clerks is necessary."

Mr. SEWARD. I am opposed to that amendment. In the first place, we are met by the fifteenth section of the act of 1842, which is brought here by way of justification for those extraordinary expenses. It is said that, under that act, the Department has a right to employ these extra clerks. That act authorizes the employment of clerks during the session of Congress, if necessary, and during the recess, if the information sought to be elicited is to be presented at the succeeding session of Congress.

I do not understand how all these expenses have arisen. We have treaties with the Indians in the western country, under which we pay them annuities of thousands annually. We have agreed to provide them with mechanical tools, to build them school-houses, &c.; yet, outside of those expenses provided for by law, we are called on to pay millions for contingencies. We begin with contingencies in the Treasury Department, and go on with contingencies in the War Department, and in the Navy Department, and in the Interior Department. We have contingencies for Indian service; contingencies for the Indian department; and we have made appropriations for them; but, besides that, we are asked now to pay, for five extra clerks in this Indian department, the sum of $30,000; who are claimed to have been employed under the fifteenth section of the act of 1842.

Mr. GREENWOOD. They have been employed for a considerable length of time. It is recommended that they shall be made permanent.

Mr. SEWARD. The law only allows the employment of such clerks during the session of Congress and upon extraordinary occasions. We are now called upon, in this time of great economy, to ingraft upon the Government this additional source of expense. I do not believe that the additional labor is necessary; and I, therefore, hope that the amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I offer the following amendment:

For compensation of one clerk in the Indian office, employed to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the regulations prescribed to give effect to the seventh section of the act of the 3d of March, 1855, granting bounty lands to Indians, $1,400.

Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment, I will read from the letter of the acting Commissioner. He says:

"The regulations prescribed to carry into effect the seventh section of the act of 3d March, 1855, granting bounty land, &c., as to its reference to Indian claimants, have also caused additional duties, for the discharge of which one clerk has been employed and paid heretofore out of the contingencies of the Indian department; and the treaty of 1832, with the Chickasaws, requiring a settlement to be made with them, involving much labor, to which none of the regular force of the office could be assigned, it has been necessary to employ two clerks specially for that purpose, whose compensation has likewise been paid from the same fund. The continuance of these three clerks is also necessary; and as the contingent fund is not adequate for their compensation, and other heavy drafts upon it, a further appropriation of $4,200, for their payment, at the rate of $1,400 per annum, should likewise be applied for."

Mr. SEWARD. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the one just adopted:

For compensation of two extra clerks, employed to carry out the treaty with the Chickasaws, in the adjustment of their claims, $2,600.

Mr. Chairman, it will be recollected that the Government disposed of the Chickasaw lands in Mississippi, for the benefit of those Indians.

The Chickasaws complained of the settlement, and by the treaty of 1852, they required a settlement which involved a vast amount of labor upon the Department, for which none of the regular force could be assigned. It was necessary to employ extra clerks, and this appropriation is for compensating them.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer this amendment, by way of addition:

And be it further enacted, In order to avoid the expenses for extra clerk hire for contingencies in the Indian department, and other Departments of this Government, that the fifteenth section of the act of 1842, conferring that authority, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Is that amendment in order? It proposes new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I appeal from that decision, and desire to say a word on the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal is not debatable. Debate is only allowed to the extent of five minutes in favor of an amendment, and five minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. SEWARD withdrew his appeal.

Mr. PHELPS, of Minnesota. I offer the following amendment:

For defraying the expenses of the several expeditions against Ink-pa-du-tah's band, and of the search, ransom, and recovery of the female captives taken by the said band in 1857, the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the amount to be ascertained and paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

I desire to have read certain letters on this subject from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the reading will be dispensed with, and that the gentleman will state the facts briefly.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not want to vote against a just appropriation; but I would like the gentleman to explain why he proposes to appropriate $20,000.

Mr. PHELPS, of Minnesota. My amendment is to appropriate $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred in the search and ransom and recovery of female captives in the several expeditions which set out against Ink-pa-du-tah's band. Every one will remember hearing of the atrocities committed near Spirit Lake, in the spring of 1857, by this band of Indian outlaws and murderers.

Immediately after the commission of these atrocities, expeditions were organized under the direction of the Indian agents, and in several parts of the country, for the purpose of following Ink-pa-du-tah and his band. Females were known to be held captives by these marauders. The public sympathy was intensely excited in their behalf, and earnest efforts were at once made for their recovery.

When the attack was made on the settlement at Spirit Lake, the men were brutally killed and the women carried into captivity and subjected to outrages worse than death itself. The expeditions were got up to rescue these women, and a portion of the supplies was furnished by the Indian agent. The Indians, also, were employed for this purpose, and certain expenses have accrued; how much, I am unable to say. Therefore, my amendment is so framed as to leave the amount to be ascertained and adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. REAGAN. How many persons were employed in this business, and for what length of time?

Mr. PHELPS, of Minnesota. I have here an estimate of expenses incurred in the organization of parties for the protection of settlers, the punishment of murderers, and the release of captives, during the Ink-pa-du-tah excitement in Minnesota, in 1857. There was paid for the ransom of Mrs. Marble, $1,200; and of Miss Gardner, $1,500; and $100 for clothing, subsistence, and transportation of Mrs. Marble and Miss Gardner previous to their arrival at St. Paul. There was $100 paid for the expenses of three Indians who accompanied Miss Gardner to St. Paul; $600 for four horses in the equipment of a party sent after Miss Gardner; $250 for goods furnished the Indians sent out; and $2,500 for the equipment of a party sent out, and which killed four of Ink-pa-du-tah's band; and $2,000 for the pay of one hundred men on the expedition for twenty days, at one dollar each per day, &c.; in all, $14,335.

One of the captives, Miss Gardner, was ransomed from the Upper Yanktons, who had purchased her from the Sioux Indians; but I believe that, at this time, the whole of Ink-pa-du-tah's band is exterminated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. By whom was this ransom made, and out of what fund has it been paid?

Mr. PHELPS, of Minnesota. The ransom was made by persons acting under the direction of the local Indian agent and Governor Medary, and has been paid in this way: the Indian agent, Mr. Flaudreau, has given his note for a portion, Governor Medary has advanced a portion, and a portion of it has been lent by the citizens, who now hold the notes of the Governor of the Territory, or agent Flaudreau, perhaps both.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to a proper appropriation, but I think the amendment should be amended so as to provide—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to propose an amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. My amendment is:

Provided, The amount shall be proven to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. PHELPS, of Minnesota. My amendment proposes that it shall be ascertained, not by a subordinate, but by the Secretary of the Interior. It is certainly a matter of little importance, as it will necessarily come under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. This is an act of humanity, as well as justice, and I hope the amendment, as modified, will be adopted.

Mr. GROW. I propose to amend by adding to the amount five dollars. The facts of this case being somewhat within my personal knowledge, I desire to say one word on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. PHELPS.] On the 15th of March, 1857, this band of Ink-pa-du-tah, numbering some twenty-five or thirty warriors, attacked the settlement at Spirit Lake, in Iowa, and massacred fifty-one men, women, and children, and carried four women, one a young girl, sixteen or seventeen years old, into captivity. These captives, with the exception of Mrs. Whitney, who was killed in crossing the Big Sioux a few days after the massacre, suffered for three months the horrors of an Indian captivity, such as have not been known up to that time in our history, since the war of 1812. While it was the duty of the Government to protect this frontier and to send its troops to retake these captives, the troops were ordered from Fort Ridgely, within sixty miles of the scene of this massacre, and from Fort Snelling, within one hundred and twenty miles, to Kansas, to protect the constitutional convention, which sat there during the summer, against the indignation of an outraged people, and this frontier was left with but thirty soldiers at Fort Ridgely; and the women who were carried into captivity had to be rescued by the settlers who assembled and took steps to ransom them. Mrs. Marble was bought by a friendly Indian, and brought back to the white settlements. Miss Gardner was purchased from the Yanktons who had purchased her from Ink-pa-du-tah's company.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is due to these men who have thus protected the frontier, and ransomed from the savages American citizens who had been carried into captivity, and whom it was the duty of the Government to have protected—it is due to them that this amount should be paid. It is doubly the duty of the Government when it has a military force stationed on the frontier for its protection, if they withdraw that force from the scene of such disasters as that at Spirit Lake, and send them to a distant part of the Confederacy for any purpose, to indemnify the citizens whose homes have been destroyed, and whose families have been carried into Indian captivity by reason of the negligence of the Government, for the ransom that they have paid for the captives. These persons were in captivity for three months, and had been carried off before this order was given to remove the troops, and the Government never raised its arm to bring them back, or to shield the settlements on the frontier of Minnesota. Under these circumstances, the Indian agent, by the advice of the Governors of Minnesota and Iowa, hired these Indians to go and ransom the captives and bring them back. Two of the captives had been murdered by the Indians, but the other two were brought back, and this appropriation is to refund the money advanced to pay the ransoms.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understand that there is no opposition to the original proposition. I am opposed to the amendment, and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. There was one suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania which I want to understand. Did I understand the gentleman to say that there was an obligation on the part of the Government to indemnify these citizens for their losses?

Mr. GROW. Oh, no; this is not to indemnify the citizens for losses, but to pay the ransoms which had to be paid for these females who were carried into Indian captivity. I now withdraw my amendment.

The amendment proposed by Mr. PHELPS, of Minnesota, was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I have an amendment which I desire to offer; but perhaps the Chair will rule it out of order. I have recommendations from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Public Lands urging the necessity of an appropriation to run, mark, and establish the western boundary of the State of Minnesota. If it is in order, I will offer an amendment for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes it is not in order.

Mr. GROW. I hope it will be put in by unanimous consent.

Mr. COBB. An indispensable necessity has arisen for this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. If no objection be made, of course the Chair will receive the amendment; but if objection be made, the Chair must rule it out of order.

Mr. SEWARD. I object to it.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes precedence.

The motion of Mr. JONES was agreed to.

VOLUNTEER REGIMENTS.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I now move to take up the bill (No. 561) making appropriations for three regiments of volunteers.

The motion was agreed to.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with. Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill making appropriations for a service which is familiar to the whole committee. On the 7th of April, 1858, Congress passed a law providing for raising three regiments of volunteers—one to protect the frontier of Texas, and the other two to prosecute the war in Utah.

Some time since—the precise date I do not now remember—the Executive of this nation, in the discharge of his duty, deemed it proper and expedient to nominate and appoint a Governor for the Territory of Utah. Brigham Young, the incumbent of that office, who had occupied it for some six years, had outraged the sentiment of the nation in sustaining, by the exercise of arbitrary power, a combination of Church and State, until, in the opinion of the Executive, the time had arrived when he should appoint a civilian to that office who would not combine, or attempt to combine, the fanaticism of a religious opinion with the discharge of the civil duties of the Territory. He soon received information that Brigham Young would not surrender his office, or recognize the power of the Executive of the nation to appoint his successor. This created what may be properly called a state of quasi rebellion in that Territory—a resistance to the laws and to the enforcement of the laws. The President of the United States having appointed his Governor, called out a sufficient force to compel the people and the authorities of Utah to recognize and receive him. Information was received by the Government, in an official communication, that the entire population of the Territory of Utah was a unit, and governed by religious fanaticism; that they were determined the President should not send a Governor into the Territory to preside over them, and were prepared to set the Government at defiance.

Now, sir, the Army of the United States being small and scattered over a most extensive frontier, every man being wanted at his post, the President found that he could not discharge his duty as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and could not profitably enforce the laws in Utah, without subjecting our extensive frontier to inroads from Indians, and the settlers there to the loss of life and property. He applied to Congress, at the opening of the session, for an increase of the regular Army. In a message sent to Congress, he set forth the object of it; that the frontier of the country required every soldier to remain at his post, that he ought not to detach one; that if the soldiers were gone from any particular post, the frontier in that vicinity would be left exposed to the depredations of the Indians. Congress, in its wisdom, thought proper, instead of increasing the regular Army, which the President recommended, and which, I think, they should have done, to authorize, as they did, by the law passed on the 7th of April, 1858, the President of the United States to raise one regiment of mounted volunteers to protect the frontier of Texas, and two regiments of volunteers to be used in the Utah service, if, in the judgment of the President, they became necessary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as this Congress, at the present session, passed this law, it is to be presumed they understand the whole subject, and are prepared to vote for supplies without the necessity of further explanation or delay. It is to be presumed that, for the purpose of calling out these three regiments and putting them into service, if the President of the United States shall deem it necessary, Congress will not hesitate to provide the money, to pay, clothe, and subsist them, and this bill is for that simple purpose. The only question that can possibly arise, will be as to whether two of the regiments will be needed. I believe it is admitted on all hands that, in any event, the regiment for Texas will be wanted. But the question is, whether the other two regiments will be needed? I have simply to say that, for the purpose of ascertaining that fact, I have kept the bill back till the very last moment, in order that if any information be received justifying the President in not calling out these regiments, the appropriation might be dispensed with. I am sorry to say that no such information has reached here yet; nothing reliable going to show that they may not be wanted. They may not be wanted; but there is nothing which will justify Congress in adjourning without putting the money at the disposal of the Executive, in case they are wanted. I say that I have kept this bill back for the purpose of getting information; but no information having reached me, I am obliged now, within a week of adjournment, to bring up this bill, which is the last appropriation bill, which is simply to pay for the regiments which Congress has placed at the disposal of the President. It is very likely they may not be wanted; but it would not be safe for Congress to decline action on the subject. The very fact itself that Congress had declined, might be sufficient to prevent these difficulties from being brought to a close. I am authorized to say that, if this money is appropriated, the President will not use it, unless it becomes absolutely necessary to enforce the law.

I wish now to give notice to the committee that as this is the last appropriation bill, and as I have understood it is the wish of gentlemen to make speeches upon other matters this evening, I propose to pass this bill, and, as soon as it is laid aside, to take up the loan bill, which is the last bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, on which we require the action of the House, and then to take a recess for the evening, for the purpose of general debate.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I wish to give notice to the committee, that at the very earliest moment I propose to bring up the bill for the improvement of harbors and rivers, and press it to a final vote.

VOLUNTEER BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina, obtained the floor.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to know of the gentleman from North Carolina if he proposes to speak upon this bill?

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I do not.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Then I will suggest to the gentleman that he allow us to go through with this bill. I will then move to take up the loan bill, and I have no doubt that, by general consent, he will be allowed to have the floor upon that bill. ["Agreed."]

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. With that understanding I will give way.

Mr. GILMAN. I presume the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has official information, and I would be very glad to know from him whether Governor Cummings has entered Salt Lake City unaccompanied by any military power?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I have no information except what the gentleman himself has. There is no official evidence of the fact.

Mr. GILMAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether he believes Governor Cummings has entered Salt Lake City unaccompanied by military power?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I am satisfied of this fact from unofficial evidence that Dr. Kane, without any official authority, went to Salt Lake City, and that Governor Cummings, in response to his invitation, did go there without escort, for the purpose of hearing what Brigham Young has to say. From that time nothing has been heard from him.

Mr. COMINS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether, as soon as this bill is disposed of, he will not permit me to take up the light-house appropriation bill and dispose of it before the committee goes into general discussion. It will not require more than thirty minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I have no objection, if that is the wish of the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to know of the chairman whether appropriation bills must take precedence of all other bills on the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Virginia, that it is always in order to move to take up an appropriation bill, and to that extent they have precedence.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. All I desire is this. There are other bills on the Calendar, some of which there is great necessity for action upon, which I believe are ahead of the appropriation bills in their order, and unless the appropriation bills, under the rule, have precedence, I do not see why those bills should be passed over.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that by common consent the light-house bill will be taken up and disposed of this evening.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. If that is the will of the committee, I am satisfied; but I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. COMINS,] who has charge of that bill, that as the committee is very thin, and he may perhaps break up the committee by pressing action upon that bill, he had better not insist on it this evening.

Mr. COMINS. I do not insist on it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. Here stands the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for the purpose of going on with the business regularly before the House. Instead of bargaining what we shall do, let us go on with the business before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition was made with a view to facilitate business. If there be no objection, the Chair will consider that general debate on this bill is terminated.

There was no objection.

Mr. QUITMAN. The Committee on Military Affairs have had this bill informally under consideration, and have ascertained, in some instances, that the appropriations in the bill may be diminished. I believe that the Committee of Ways and Means are satisfied with the amendments proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill:

"For regular supplies of the quartermaster's department—fuel, forage, straw, and stationery, $360,147 24."

Mr. QUITMAN. I move to strike out of that paragraph the words "$360,147 24," and insert in lieu thereof the words "$240,093 16."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The act for the raising of this volunteer force provided for not exceeding eighteen months' service, and the estimates sent to us were for that time. The Committee of Ways and Means struck off six months. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUITMAN] has attracted my attention to sundry amendments, where this appropriation may still be reduced. I have compared views with him, and am satisfied that his amendments are all right and proper. I do not propose to discuss them seriatim.

The amendment was adopted.

"For incidental expenses of the quartermaster's department—for blacksmiths' and shoing tools, horse and mule shoes and nails, iron and steel, horse medicines, picket ropes, shoeing horses, and miscellaneous, $22,500."

Mr. QUITMAN. I move to strike from that paragraph the words "$22,500," and in lieu thereof to insert the words "$17,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

"For transportation of supplies, transportation of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, ordnance, subsistence, quartermasters' and medical stores, for the purchase of mules, and the purchase and repair of wagons, and for the hire of teamsters, $2,094,689 23."

Mr. QUITMAN. I move to strike from that paragraph the words "$2,094,689 23," and in lieu thereof, to insert the words, "$1,396,459 43."

The amendment was agreed to.

"For clothing, camp and garrison equipage, $224,443 02."

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST Session.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1858.

NEW SERIES....No. 161.

Mr. QUITMAN. I move to strike from that paragraph the words "$224,443 02," and to insert in lieu thereof, "$149,628 68."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUITMAN. I now submit an amendment, which has not been submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, but which has met with the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs:

Provided, That in the event the President shall not deem it advisable to call out one or both of the two regiments of the volunteers provided for by law for the Utah and frontier service, the several sums of money herein appropriated shall be reduced one third for each regiment so dispensed with.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. At my own suggestion, I move to add to that the following: And that none of this appropriation shall be used for any other service than that herein designated.

Mr. HOUSTON. As I understood the amendment of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. QUITMAN] as it was read from the Clerk's desk, it does not accomplish the object he has in view. When this bill has been passed, and the money stated in the several provisions appropriated, I would suggest that the better way would be to provide that in case of the non-calling into service of any one of the regiments, one third of these appropriations shall return into the Treasury. The object the gentleman has in view is a good and proper one.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not prevail. According to the law, it cannot possibly be used for any other purpose.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am told by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that we should not put this in, because it cannot possibly, by law, be used in any other way than in the manner in which it is designed. The House has a practical illustration of that. It is certainly no reflection on anybody connected with the Government or the War Department, for Congress to limit the appropriations to the very service for which it is made. Now, sir, I say in contradistinction to the proposition of the gentleman at the head of the Committee of Ways and Means, that if we appropriate this for the regiments which are not to go to Utah, and do not say that it shall not be used for any other purpose by the War Department, it is within the competency of the War Department, under the existing law, to take the appropriation and to use it for the regular troops, or for any other military purpose; and my amendment is exactly to guard that point—to let the Department know that we make this appropriation for those regiments and for no other purpose.

Mr. HUGHES. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. It is an attempt, in the appropriation bill, to limit the authority of the President of the United States over the Army. By the Constitution of the United States, he is Commander-in-Chief of the Army. This House may raise troops, and may appropriate money to pay them; but this House cannot dictate to the President what regiments he shall put in the van of any proposed movement, or what regiments shall remain in garrison. I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to contemplate that object, and none other.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. It has no such idea, and no such effect.

Mr. HUGHES. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to argue that his amendment was offered with a view to cut off the authority of the President as to whether he shall put these troops in garrison, and send forward regular troops.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Oh, not at all.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. HUGHES. I have very greatly mistaken the gentleman's argument if it is not that he is driving at.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. With the consent of the gentleman from Indiana, I will say that the effect would be this: if the Executive were obliged to withdraw from many of the garrisons on the frontier the regular troops of the Army, and should be disposed to order one of these volunteer regiments to man these garrisons until the return of the regular troops, he could not do so, were this amendment to prevail.

The amendment, and the amendment to the amendment, were again read.

Mr. HUGHES. I now assert what I asserted before, that the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, and that of the gentleman from Kentucky, will, if adopted, restrict the payment of this appropriation, and make it conditional to the using of these volunteer regiments in Utah.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. They are for frontier service.

Mr. HUGHES. I am in favor of the President of the United States sending to Utah any troops which he may think most efficient. The state of things in that Territory has been such as to require a military expedition and the presence of an armed force there. I cannot state what I desire to say, more fully than to quote the language of my colleague [Mr. COLFAX] in the early part of the session, before the gentlemen on that side of the House discovered that this Utah expedition was the war of the Executive. My colleague made use of the following language on the 23d of December last:

"Now there has not been a more declared intent to oppose the Government of the United States; but it has been actually carried into effect. And we are to say here whether a people like this, having openly and defiantly and insultingly thrown off all allegiance to the General Government; having sent a message through their Legislative Assembly, to the President, that they will have such and such men as officers, and no others; having thus disrobed themselves of their allegiance to the Government, shall be allowed to send their representatives here with equal rights as to his speaking, with ourselves, to occupy a seat on this floor as our peer, and to draw his salary and per diem from the Treasury of the United States? The matter has been trifled with too long. This Brigham Young has been making treasonable threats against the General Government from the days of the administration of Mr. Fillmore to the present day; and he has over and over again declared publicly in the face of the assembled people, that he will be the Governor of Utah, not so long as the Government of the United States may see fit, but so long as God says he shall be Governor, declaring that he derives his commission from God instead of from the President. He has gone on fostering rebellion, till it has broken out into open war. And yet he sends, with credentials signed by the same hand which penned his proclamation of defiance to our Government, a representative here; and we are not to be allowed, because, forsooth, there has been no precedent for it, to have a committee of inquiry to ascertain if we cannot purge ourselves from the presence of a Delegate from such a Territory! I trust the resolution will be adopted."

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. I desire to know whether the gentleman is in favor of the President using this money for any other object than that specified in the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I am in favor of the President using this money to pay these regiments; and without an appropriation for that purpose, the regiments could not be brought into service at all. But I am opposed to Congress prescribing to the President, or the major-general commanding the Army of the United States, what corps he shall put in the advance of a column of attack.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. I am not entirely satisfied with that answer. I want to know whether the gentleman is in favor of the President using this money for objects other than those specified in the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. I am in favor of the bill, as it was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. Because that is the only effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. QUITMAN. I will, then, propose to amend the amendment, by inserting the words "provided that the amount so reduced shall return into the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi, that after a vote has been taken on my amendment, we shall then come back to his, and it will be still open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Mississippi, that the rule of the House does not permit a gentleman to withdraw an amendment offered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that has been construed to mean that he shall have no control over it, not even to modify it; and therefore a gentleman is not allowed to amend his own amendment. When an amendment is proposed in Committee of the Whole, under the rules it goes out of the possession of the mover, and he has no control over it.

The question was taken on Mr. MARSHALL's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. QUITMAN. I now move to amend the amendment, by inserting immediately before what has just been adopted, the words:

Provided, That the same shall be returned into the Treasury.

I offer the amendment simply for the purpose of explaining to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HUGHES] that he is entirely mistaken as to the meaning of the proposition which I have introduced. The object of the Committee on Military Affairs in offering this amendment is to provide that, if these regiments are not required, the money appropriated for them by this bill shall not be used for any other purpose; but shall return into the Treasury, under the law, at the expiration of two years. They did not, however, desire to intimate that, in the opinion of the House, the Texas regiment was not required. They therefore desired to apply the proposed amendment only to the other two regiments. But how will you distinguish them except by using the language of the bill by which this force was authorized to be raised? That bill provides for two classes of troops—one class designed for the protection of Texas, and the other two regiments to be raised for the service in Utah and on the frontier. That bill has passed. It is now the law; and this amendment is intended to be alone applicable to those regiments designed by the original bill to be used on the frontier and in the Utah service.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi. I do not understand that the bill in regard to the three regiments designates any regiment for any particular service, except the one that is to be applied for the benefit of Texas. If my recollection is not actually at fault, there is nothing said about the use or application of these regiments to Utah, but they are to be put under the control of the President for the defense of the country; and under that law, the President may use this force in that way which is most likely to secure the object, and at the same time promote the efficient prosecution of the service.

Mr. QUITMAN. Permit me to read the law. It is as follows:

"That for the purpose of quelling disturbances in the Territory of Utah, for the protection of supply and emigrant trains, and the suppression of Indian hostilities on the frontier, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers, not to exceed, in all, two regiments of seven hundred and forty privates each."

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman from Mississippi contend that, under that clause of the law, the President is bound to send these regiments to Utah, or that he is even bound to employ them for the suppression of Indian hostilities? that he cannot use them for any other purpose? that if he shall regard them as better troops to garrison the forts, and that the regular troops will be better for Utah and the Indian service, he has not a right under that law to employ them in that way? Now, I maintain, that under that law, the President is to act in that way which shall be most likely to accomplish the purpose for which the regiments are to be raised and placed at his disposal.

Mr. QUITMAN. Permit me to say that I have thought of no such thing. But I point the gentleman to the law which he stated did not contain the word "Utah."

Mr. LETCHER. Then I stand corrected upon that point. But, what is the meaning of this amendment which is proposed here, and which does restrict them to Utah and to the frontier? Now, if my construction of the law be right, then it strikes me that the amendment must be palpably wrong.

Mr. CURTIS. I would say to the gentlemen that these regiments are restricted to the Utah service, and the defense of the frontier. They could not be brought into the interior, for Kansas or any other service of that sort.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to know if Kansas is not on the frontier? And, if Kansas is on the frontier, the President has the right to order the volunteers there, if he sees fit. It would be an anomaly in legislation, when these volunteers are placed in charge of the President, if this House should undertake to prescribe that he shall not use the regular troops for a particular service, although they may be found more effective for that service.

And now, sir, in reference to the gentleman's remarks about the power of the President to make war. This House has this morning authorized the President in his discretion to make war upon Paraguay; and yet it seems they cannot trust these three regiments to his discretion without putting in a provision in this appropriation bill saying how the money shall be used.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. HUGHES. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

Provided, That nothing in this act, or in the act authorizing three additional regiments for the Army, shall be construed to limit the authority or discretion of the President in assigning the said regiments to duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it be true, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] has said, and as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUITMAN] has said, that the object of the amendments proposed by these gentlemen is, not to limit or restrict the constitutional authority of the President of the United States over the Army, there can be no objection to the amendment I have proposed, which simply declares that nothing in this act, or in the act raising three additional regiments in the Army, passed by this Congress, shall be so construed as to limit the authority or discretion of the President of the United States in assigning these regiments to duty; and unless there is an objection to his exercising his ordinary constitutional power; unless it is the object to say where those regiments shall go or—which seems to me to be the purpose of gentlemen in offering the amendment—to say where they shall not go, I apprehend that the amendment I have proposed will pass unanimously; but if it is the object of gentlemen to restrict the power of the President in this exercise of his constitutional functions, I want gentlemen to avow their purpose and to disclose their position. I want it to be put on record in some unmistakable form.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, for the reason that it can produce no effect in the world. The President has a constitutional right in regard to the disposition of the Army; and any attempt, upon the part of this House to limit that right would be void; therefore, it is no use for us to declare that there is nothing in this act contained which we intend shall be construed to limit the right of the President to control the Army.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question? If this declaratory provision is practically a redundancy, if it is simply affirming what is in the Constitution of the United States, it can certainly do no harm; and what objection has the gentleman, therefore, to the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. My objection is, that there is no necessity for it; that it is simply a declaration that we do not intend to do what we have no right to do; and I object to it for the further reason that there seems to be some mistake upon the part of my friend from Indiana, and his amendment might mislead the President. The law authorizing the use of these volunteer troops authorized them for a specific purpose; but, if I understand the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, the law may be construed to mean that, notwithstanding those troops were raised for the frontier service, it is within the competency of the President to send them anywhere. I suppose the gentleman would hold that the President would have the right, under the law raising these volunteers for frontier service, to throw a noose around them, and send them off to Paraguay. Now, sir, I am not disposed to indicate the propriety of such a course to the President for the disposition of these volunteers, whether they are raised in the East or in the West.

Mr. HUGHES. I understood the gentleman to oppose my amendment on the ground that it would amount to nothing.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. My amendment attaches to nothing but the money, and I do not want the money to be paid out for any other purpose than that intended by the law. That was the only object of my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order; but he is at the same time of opinion that the question raised by the gentleman comes too late.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Very well. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GROESBECK. I move to amend by adding the following proviso, to come in at the end of line thirty-one:

Provided, That if it shall be determined that the two regiments not raised for the State of Texas shall be mounted, the Secretary of the Treasury shall furnish the horse equipments; and the sum of $60,000 is appropriated for that purpose; And provided further, That he shall purchase the horses for said two regiments; and for that purpose shall use the fund to which such regiments are entitled for the use and risk of horses, to wit: forty cents per day for each horse; and so much of the act approved April 7, 1853, as is inconsistent herewith, is repealed.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order. That amendment is certainly not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOCK reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly a bill (H. R. No. 555) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1853; and also a bill (H. R. No. 561) making appropriations for the support of three regiments of volunteers, authorized by the act of Congress approved 7th April, 1853; and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BOCK. I understand that an important message has been received from the President relative to the outrages of British cruisers upon American shipping in the Gulf; and I propose that it be taken up, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th instant requesting information relative to attacks upon United States vessels in the Gulf of Mexico and on the coast of Cuba, a report from the Secretary of State; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill (No. 41) to locate certain confirmed land titles in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes, was referred to a Committee of the Whole House. I only ask that the motion shall be entered, intending to call it up for action hereafter.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move to recommend the bills just reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the Committee of Ways and Means; and I call for the previous question.

Mr. GARNETT. I move that we adjourn. I think that we have done business enough for one day.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I only propose that we shall go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for general debate; and if the gentleman will withdraw his motion to adjourn, I will submit that motion.

Mr. GARNETT. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to make a statement personal to myself. When the question was up this morning on the adoption of the Paraguay resolutions, I was absent, attending to the business of the Committee of Elections. If I had been present when my name was called, I would have voted in the negative.

SHERLOCK AND SHIRLEY.

Mr. GROESBECK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill (No. 287) for the relief of Sherlock & Shirley, for reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

There was no objection.

The bill was taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask that all the bills upon the Speaker's table be taken up and referred. It may be that some of them will be acted on at this session.

TREASURY NOTE BILL.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I insist on my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOCK in the chair.)

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee take up House bill (No. 582) to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of $15,000,000. It is the understanding that the bill shall be open this evening for general debate, and that no votes shall be taken.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina, obtained the floor.

Mr. COMINS. I trust that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree that I shall, in the morning, move for the reconsideration of the light-house appropriation bill before this loan bill is considered.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Oh, no; there is the river and harbor appropriation bill, that ought to be acted on too.

A general debate then ensued, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in which Messrs. WRIGHT of Georgia, SHAW of North Carolina, GILMER, HAWKINS, STEVENS of Washington, WINSLOW, ANDREWS, HATCH, GOODWIN, LEITER, SMITH of Virginia, and COX, participated.

[These speeches will be published in the Appendix.]

At the close of the debate,

Mr. COX moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WINSLOW reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally, under consideration, and particularly a bill (S. No. 396) to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of $15,000,000, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. WINSLOW, (at eleven o'clock and thirty-five minutes,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 1, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. B. F. BITTINGER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SEWARD presented the memorial of John Gardner, agent of the American Timber Bending Company, praying that a commission, to be composed of naval officers and naval constructors, may be appointed to examine Blanchard's patent for bending timber for ships' knees, and if approved, that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to purchase the right to it in the construction of ships of war; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRIGHT presented two petitions of Robert Ould, Henry Addison, and other property holders and merchants of Georgetown, District of Columbia, praying that the bill passed by the House of Representatives, for a railroad along Pennsylvania avenue, in the city of Washington, may become a law; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITCH presented the petition of R. F. Hunter, a lieutenant in the Army, praying to be allowed a credit in his accounts for certain public money stolen while in his custody; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

Mr. BIGLER presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Coalmount to Burnt Cabin, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GWIN presented the petition of Samuel J. Hansley, praying Congress to recall his papers from the Court of Claims, and to make an appropriation to pay him for cattle purchased of him by O. M. Wozencraft, commissioner and Indian agent of the United States to fulfill the stipulations of Indian treaties; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MALLORY presented a memorial of the Faculty of Georgetown College, District of Columbia, praying that the bill which has passed the House of Representatives for a railroad along Pennsylvania avenue, in Washington, may become a law; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. YULEE presented papers in relation to the claim of Captain William H. Payne's company of mounted volunteers to compensation for services during the Seminole war, in 1838 and 1839; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

Mr. TOOMBS presented papers in relation to the claim of Israel D. Andrews, late agent of the United States, in reference to the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HUNTER presented papers in relation to the claim of Messrs. Majors & Russell, contractors for Army transportation, to indemnity for losses of trains, animals, &c., destroyed and run off with by the Mormons during the past season; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

PROTECTION TO INDUSTRY.

Mr. CAMERON. I am requested to present a petition, signed by a large number of laboring men engaged in the manufacture of iron in Pennsylvania. I receive a great many letters daily from persons of this class, and I will say here what will save me the trouble of writing a great many letters. They think the Congress of the United States can relieve them from all their troubles. There never has been a time, in the history of the iron business of Pennsylvania, when there was so much real distress among the laboring men of my State—the men who do the work, the men who go to the forge before daylight, and remain there long after the moon has risen—as there is at present. It is not a complaint now on the part of the capitalist. Men of capital, men of fortune, can take care of themselves—capital can always take care of itself; labor, poverty, indigence, want, always need sympathy and protection.

These persons reside in the town of Norristown, on the Schuylkill river, some twenty miles above Philadelphia. The river Schuylkill is traversed on both sides by a railroad, one extending some twenty or thirty miles, another one hundred miles. On one side of the river is a canal. All these works have been made for the purpose of conveying coal and iron to the place of manufacture and sale. The county of Schuylkill, the great coal deposit of Pennsylvania, has a population of some eighty or ninety thousand people, all of which has grown up within the last twenty-five years.

At this time the whole laboring population engaged in the iron and coal business of the country extending from Philadelphia to the mountains of Schuylkill county are entirely idle; the boats are tied up; the locomotives are in a great measure standing still; and the laborers are running about hunting for employment and hunting food. These are the persons who complain; they think that Congress can relieve them. I have told them and I have written to them that they have the power in their own hands.

The laboring men of this country are powerful for good always. They do control when they think proper, and I think the time is coming when they will control the politics of this country. I tell them that before they can get proper protection they must change the majority in this Senate, they must change the majority in the other House of Congress, and above all they must change the occupant of the White House, who is the dispenser of the power which controls the legislation of this country. In place of gentlemen who sneer when we talk about protection, they must send men here who know something of the wants, something of the interests, something of the usefulness of the laboring man.

Hitherto they have not acted as if they cared for their own interests; while they talked about a tariff which would guard their labor from competition with the pauper labor of Europe, they would go to the elections under some ward leader and vote for men to represent them here and elsewhere who cared only for party drill, and who had no interest above party success. This system they must change if they hope for success. I think the laboring men of Pennsylvania, at least, are now beginning to put their own shoulders to the wheel, and I believe they will make such a noise in next October, as will alarm the gentlemen all over the country who laugh at them.

The canals, railroads, and mining operations of this region of country have cost more than a hundred million dollars; the furnaces and other works connected with the manufacture of iron an enormous sum; and the people interested in the iron and coal business, directly or indirectly, along the valley of the Schuylkill, amount to more than three hundred thousand souls.

Since 1855 there has been a blight upon the business growing out of the unwise legislation of Congress, which has really protected the iron of England, Russia, and Sweden, and thus taken the labor and the bread from our own workmen.

The iron interest of Pennsylvania, in which these men are employed, commenced in 1820, with a production of only two thousand tons. In 1855, when it was up to its greatest extent, the production was a million tons of pig metal. When this pig metal is worked into the various uses in which iron is to be consumed, it amounts to many, many million dollars. The annual produce of coal in Schuylkill county alone, in 1855, amounted in value to $20,000,000. When it is known that it requires two tons of coal to make one ton of iron, you can imagine the number of persons who rely for their daily bread on the production of iron and coal. Iron, in its native mountains, is worth but fifty cents a ton; when it is worked into pig metal, it ranges from twenty to thirty, and some times to forty dollars a ton; and when worked into its various uses, it frequently amounts to many hundred dollars a ton. I have said that these people have the power in their own hands—I am speaking to them now—and I wish them to exercise the power they have. I cannot help them, much as I desire to do so, nor can any of their friends here; but when they go to work, as men determined to succeed should do, I have no doubt they will get protection.

The people in this valley, and on the slope of the Schuylkill mountains have votes enough to change and control the politics of the Union; for as Pennsylvania goes, so goes the Union, in all great elections; and their votes can at all times decide the politics of Pennsylvania. Let them exercise the power wisely, and they will no longer be without plenty of work and good prices. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 344) for the relief of Captain Stanton Sholes;

A bill (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Joseph Webb;

A bill (H. R. No. 455) for the relief of Michael Brooks;

A bill (H. R. No. 462) granting an invalid pension to James Fugate, of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 512) for the relief of Elijah Close, of Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 514) granting an invalid pension to Conrad Schroeder;

A bill (H. R. No. 515) granting an invalid pension to Alexander S. Bean, of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 523) for the relief of Wyatt Griffith; and

A bill (H. R. No. 530) for the relief of Stephen Fellows.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Leach, praying to be allowed the benefits of the act of June 7, 1832, granting pensions to soldiers of the Revolution, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 257) to increase the pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Mary A. M. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 518) to continue the pension heretofore paid to Mary C. Hamilton, widow of Captain Fowler Hamilton, late of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 524) for the relief of Francis Carver;

A bill (H. R. No. 525) for the relief of Robinson Gammon;

A bill (H. R. No. 526) for the relief of Frederick Smith; and

A bill (H. R. No. 535) for the relief of David Watson.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 522) for the relief of Wright Fore, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 460) granting a pension to Beriah Wright, of New York, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition, reported it without amendment.

Mr. YULEE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom were referred the following bills and resolution, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 492) for the relief of John Dearnit;

A bill (H. R. No. 493) for the relief of Stuckey & Rogers; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 24) for the relief of Henry Orndorf.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 510) for the relief of Dr. George H. Howell, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 496) for the relief of the representatives of Henry King, deceased, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 356) for the relief of Roswell Minard, father of Theodore Minard, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 451) for the relief of the legal representatives of Jean Baptiste Davidrine; and

A bill (H. R. No. 543) for the relief of the legal representatives of John McDonough, deceased, late of New Orleans.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 327) to affirm certain entries of land in the State of Louisiana, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the memorial of James H. Birch, jr., and the petition of T. D. W. Yonley and others, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART. There is a large mass of papers in the case which I do not ask to have printed, but I think they had better be placed on the files of the Senate.

Mr. PUGH. I think, as a member of the committee, the papers ought to be printed. I move that they be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion will go to the Committee on Printing, under the rules.

Mr. BRODERICK. I wish to say that I entirely dissent from the report which has been made by the Senator from Michigan, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, in this case.

BINDERS OF THE GLOBE.

Mr. BRIGHT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the binders of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the Thirty-Fourth Congress be paid the same price per volume as is allowed by law for binding the same for the Thirty-Fifth Congress.

POST ROUTES IN DACOTAH.

Mr. JONES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing the following post routes in Dacotah Territory: from Sioux City, in Iowa, via mouth of the Big Sioux river, the mouth of James river, and Choteau creek, to Indian agency on the Yankton Sioux reserve and Fort Randall; from Sioux City, via Nebraska, to the Indian agency of the Ponka Indians, and the valley of the Nebraska river, to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains; from Sioux City, via Sioux falls, to the mouth of Snake river; from Fort Randall, via the mouth of White Earth river, to the mouth of Little Medicine Knoll river; from Sioux falls to Fort Randall; from the mouth of James river, via Blue Earth, Rocky Hill, and Sandy Hill, to Wakandapi Hills; from Nebraska, via the Ponka reserve, to Chimney Rock.

WILLIAM H. PAYNE.

Mr. YULEE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia inquire into the claim of Captain William H. Payne's company for service in 1838-9, in the Seminole war.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GWIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 419) for the relief of John Ferguson and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

OUTRAGES ON AMERICANS.

Mr. MASON. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. No. 42) to confer additional powers on the President for the redress of injuries upon the persons and property of citizens of the United States in the Central American States, and to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 402) to restrain and redress outrages upon the flag and citizens of the United States, have instructed me to report them back to the Senate, with an amendment by way of substitute for the bill. I ask that the bill be made the order for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. FOOT. Let the substitute be read.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to hear the original bill read, as well as the substitute.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 402) introduced by Mr. DOUGLAS on the 24th of May, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in cases of flagrant violation of the laws of nations, by outrage upon the flag, soil, or citizens of the United States, or upon their property, under circumstances requiring prompt redress, and when, in the opinion of the President, delay would be incompatible with the honor and dignity of the Republic, the President is hereby authorized to employ such force as he may deem necessary to prevent the perpetration of such outrages, and to obtain just redress and satisfaction for the same when perpetrated; and it shall be his duty to lay the facts of each case, together with the reasons of his action in the premises, before Congress, at the earliest practicable moment, for such further action thereon as Congress may direct.

The substitute of the Committee on Foreign Relations was read, as follows:

Whereas, grave and repeated outrages have been at various times committed against the persons and property of citizens of the United States by the Governments; or by those acting under authority of the Governments, of the Republics of Mexico, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and New Granada, or by insurrectionary or revolutionary forces within those Republics respectively; and after earnest remonstrance, and in many cases protracted negotiation, with said Governments, neither reparation for such injuries past, nor security against their repetition, has been obtained; for remedy and prevention whereof:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ such force as he may deem necessary, by blockade or otherwise, to obtain reparation and redress for such injuries or outrages as may be shown to him to have been committed by the Governments of said Republics, or by those acting under the authority of said Governments, or by insurrectionary or revolutionary forces within the respective territories of Mexico, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and New Granada, or elsewhere, upon the persons or property of citizens of the United States, or to afford protection to the persons or property of citizens of the United States against any sudden attack, or threatened attack, on the persons or property of such citizens passing in transit over the Panama railroad, or any other transit route, across the Isthmus of Central America or Mexico; or further, as the case may require, to prevent the commission of such injuries and outrages; and that the President communicate to Congress, as early as may be practicable thereafter, the facts in each case, together with the reasons for his action in the premises, for such further action, if any, thereon, as Congress shall direct. This act to continue in force until the 1st day of January, 1860.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion to make this bill the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. HUNTER. I trust that no such order will be made. I think it ought to be the understanding of the Senate that we shall dispose first of the appropriation bills, and then, if there be any time remaining of the session, devote that to measures of this character. I hope we shall not make any special order that will interrupt the progress of the appropriation bills. We are very much behind on them now. I shall have to call for the yeas and nays on this proposition, if it be persisted in.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. If the Senate should make it the special order for to-morrow, and the Senate should then agree with my colleague that there are more important measures requiring action, it can be deferred by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. STUART. I move to amend the motion of the Senator so as to make it the special order for Saturday, with the hope that his resolutions will be postponed until that day, and that we may dispose of the whole subject then.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Michigan will withdraw that amendment. This is a bill; the other is a mere resolution for the action of the Senate; and if we intend to act on this subject at all, we ought to act on it at once, so that the other House shall have an opportunity to act during the session. If, after reporting this bill, Congress adjourns without doing anything on this subject, it will be looked upon by these Republics that they have full license to depredate upon our citizens, and there never will be redress. I hope the motion of the Senator from Virginia to make it the special order for one o'clock will be so modified as to say twelve o'clock.

Mr. MASON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GWIN. This is a bill, not a resolution of the Senate alone; and I hope the Senator from Michigan will withdraw his proposition. The other resolution we can act upon on Saturday, because it requires only the action of the Senate; but if, after this bill has been reported, it is permitted to go over without being acted upon at all, we have no safety for our citizens in any of the Republics named in the bill.

Mr. SEWARD. I was on the committee by which this proposition was reported, and I am one of a minority which dissented from it entirely. I am entirely satisfied that there is no advantage to result from discussing the bill, even if it should be right in itself, unless it should be passed; and I am satisfied that such a bill cannot pass Congress during the present session, if the session is to end on Monday next. I think, therefore, the first question for the Senate to determine is, whether they will ask the House of Representatives to rescind the resolution for adjournment on Monday next. I shall vote against making this the special order for any day until the session shall be prolonged, or the expression of the will of the Senate on that subject shall be obtained.

Mr. GWIN. I am sorry to hear the Senator say that he is entirely opposed to this bill. It is merely to redress outrages committed on our own citizens. They have been murdered and robbed in the Central American States, and there has not been the first step taken by the Government of the United States to protect them, except by treaties, which have always been evaded. I should not think there was any member of the Senate opposed to a measure intended to protect our own citizens from depredations by foreign Governments. I hope the bill will be made the special order for twelve o'clock to-morrow, that we may see who is opposed to the passage of a measure which will protect our citizens from the depredations that are committed on them.

Mr. SEWARD. I am sure the honorable Senator from California will be very much mistaken if he supposes that there is only one member of the Senate who will be opposed to making war, in the aggregate, against all the nations on this continent south of us; and that there is not more than one Senator here who will oppose giving the President of the United States power to make war against even one nation, much more half a dozen, or all together.

Mr. GWIN. I do not care how many there are; I want them on the record, to see who they are.

Mr. STUART. I made my motion simply in a business point of view. This very question has occupied the Senate for two days in the morning hour; and, in regard to it, we have accomplished nothing yet, as I think will be conceded by everybody. If we put it into as many morning hours as you choose, we shall have the same result. If we postpone it until Saturday, with the understanding that we shall then take it up, and act upon it decidedly, we can, in the mean time, dispose of two or three appropriation bills without difficulty, and dispose of the private bills from the House on Friday, and be prepared to act, and act definitely. The proposition to throw this into the morning hour to-morrow, and spend an hour on it then, will accomplish nothing; and so you may continue it here until the end of the session. My object was solely to put it over to Saturday, at a time when the Senate can take it up, and decide what they will do, both upon the bill and upon the resolutions. I therefore hope that, inasmuch as we all desire, I think, alike to dispose of the proper business of the session, it will be put off until Saturday, and that we shall be able to get along with the business without consuming the entire morning every day in debating this question, without coming to any definite action.

Mr. MASON. My proposition was, to make it the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock. The Senator from California asked that it should be made the special order for twelve o'clock, and I had no objection. I did not thereby mean to limit any discussion that might take place upon it to the morning hour. It will be in the power of the Senate to continue the subject under consideration then, or to defer it, if there be any other business, in the estimation of the Senate, more important; but I want to bring it to the attention of the Senate, in order that part of the public business may be disposed of as to the Senate may seem right and proper.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask my friend from Virginia if the bill includes Great Britain?

Mr. MASON. No, sir.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope it will be so amended.

Mr. MASON. It contains Mexico, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and New Granada.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think we ought to put the same rule to the strong as to the weak.

Mr. MASON. The Senator may have very good reasons for that, and may induce the Senate to agree with him. It is confined now to those four Republics. I cannot go into the merits of the bill further than to say that upon these transit routes there pass now annually probably some fifty thousand citizens of the United States, going and coming, all of whom are in peril of their lives, of their liberty, and of their property, in making these transits; and there is no means of affording them protection. The last Administration, and the present, have been obliged to keep ships of war at each of the termini, by their presence to afford such protection as their presence may do. We know that two years ago a riot occurred there—whether under the authority of the local Government or not is not known at this day. It is believed to have been countenanced by the Government of New Granada or the authorities of Panama. A riot took place which resulted in putting some of our citizens to death who, as passengers, were passing through under treaty obligations. A great many others were wounded. Their property was despoiled, and that goes unredressed to this day; and why? Because, as to Nicaragua, as to Mexico, as to Costa Rica, whenever the Government of the United States presents itself, it finds no Government with which to put itself in communication. They are in such a decrepit state as to appear incapable of constructing a Government that will last from month to month or from year to year. So with our commerce. It goes into their ports under treaties of protection, and it is seized and despoiled there by the Government or some insurrectionary force. That is the existing state of things within the last three weeks at Tampico. Vessels going from our ports to Tampico, under the protection of a treaty, arriving at the port, were seized by insurrectionary forces, the men imprisoned, the flag insulted, and the property despoiled. Where is the redress? There is no Government to redress it; there is none that a Minister can be put in communication with; there is no means of affording redress; and when a Government is reconstructed the remonstrance will go upon file; and there it will lie; because of the utter inability of the Government of Mexico to afford redress.

Now, the purpose of the bill is to do whatever Government must have power to do if its citizens are to be protected, not against accredited nations of the world, who are able to afford redress or to refuse it, but against that character of unsettled population that are found from Mexico, certainly, down to the continent of South America, incapable of constructing Governments, and yet claiming the immunities of Governments. They are to be treated, in my judgment, as such a people must be treated when they are found in such a condition—be compelled by force to respect the laws of civilized man. That is all that is proposed.

Now, in reference to the very proper criticism of the Senator from Georgia; the committee, after a great deal of consideration, by a majority deemed it proper, for the present, to confine the object of the bill to the Republics named in it. It will be in his power, if he thinks it proper, to extend it to more, or to extend it to the whole world. In my judgment, that would have been wrong. The bill, I think, deserves consideration at the present session. If it be put over to Saturday, it will amount to nothing. Even if it should pass the Senate, it may not, at that late period, pass the House of Representatives. At any rate, I hope it will be made the order of the day for an hour to-morrow, that the Senate may then determine whether it is one of those public measures which deserve present consideration.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have had the pleasure of hearing the gentleman from Virginia, and his remarks have only convinced me of the necessity and propriety of the adoption of the resolutions which I introduced some time since in relation to a protectorate, and the expediency of giving some attention to that subject. It is admitted by the gentleman from Virginia, who is possessed of the first order of intelligence in this body on international subjects, that Mexico, and the other States alluded to, are not in a condition of self-government; that they are disorganized; that they are irresponsible; that treaties negotiated with them are not binding upon them, and that some course must necessarily be adopted that will give security to our citizens and our transit through their country. Nothing could be more conclusive to my mind as to the expediency, at least, of an inquiry into the course that ought to be adopted.

I have long been satisfied of the incapacity of these people for self-government. They have had the opportunity of the experiment for nearly or more than a quarter of a century, and they have accomplished nothing of order, of regularity, of good government. Instead of advancing in civilization, and improvement, and good government, they are greatly deteriorated, and are becoming more wretched and more anarchical in their condition. Feeling this, I was anxious that we should make a grave inquiry into the subject of their condition; that we should know what our future relations were to be with these several nations, and whether or not they were to go on as they have done on our borders, insulting our people and annoying them, slaughtering them when it served their convenience, robbing and committing every outrage possible on them. It was necessary, I thought, to inquire into these circumstances; but I have met with but little countenance in the efforts which I have made.

Mr. President, it is an extraordinary thing that we are apprised that France, too, has arisen and has her eye on a consolidated Republic of these small States, under the protectorate of France. It is enough to alarm the United States and direct their attention, with some degree of particularity and gravity, to the subject. France is not indifferent to the condition of the South American States. She has an imperial scepter, wielded by hands capable of controlling it. France has now a master, and when she has a master she is a mighty nation; she shapes the nations of the earth about her; and that she should cast her eye to the transatlantic settlements and communities that are here in a situation to be appropriated to her ambition in the aggrandizement of her commerce and her dominion, is not at all to be wondered at. Whilst we are lying here in tranquillity, reposing with our arms folded, indifferent to the passing events of the world, they are alert on the other side of the Atlantic, and they are directing their eyes to this side of it for the purpose of aggrandizement and monopoly.

If we are to maintain the principles that we have set forth; if they are not to be to us, at a future day, a reproach, we have something to do. Are we to remain like the dog in the manger, contending that no one shall touch or lay hand upon this continent, or set foot upon it; that no transatlantic Power shall appropriate any portion of it, and yet do nothing ourselves by which these nations may be made useful to the community of nations, and advantageous to the cause of commerce, social organization, and good government? Does it not behoove us to turn our attention to it with a careful eye, and a just regard to our own situation and our own interests? Sir, we have proclaimed to the nations of the earth that we will not allow any transatlantic Power to interfere with the Governments of America, or with the affairs of this continent. It is time that we should not only assert the principle upon paper, but should give some practical manifestation of our purpose, and show that we are capable of making something out of a declaration that we have held forth to the world, of our rights, our privileges, and what we have assumed to be our national prerogative.

If we are disposed to abandon the Monroe doctrine, if we are disposed to relinquish to foreign Powers, as we have partially done to England in relation to the occupation of Roatan under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, in violation of their own construction of that treaty in the first instance, let us do it gracefully; let us recede from our position; this is the occasion to do it; and let us ignore the indications that have already been given in the Senate, and that are making their way in the hearts of the American people. Do this, and you will bring disrepute upon the Government, and the people will rise in their majesty. The Monroe doctrine has been asserted; it has been contended for. We must maintain it or shrink from it. We cannot maintain our national dignity and abandon the position we have taken before the world. We must either maintain the attitude we have pretended to assume, and make it a reality, or we must shrink back degraded and humbled in the eyes of the world.

I have proposed nothing in the resolution that I have introduced here, but an inquiry into the affairs of Mexico and these other nations. Now, we may contemplate these transactions at a distance, but scenes are every day transpiring which tend to force us to take our stand. We must soon form our determination whether we shall become humbled and degraded in the eyes of the world, or whether we shall step forward in a manly attitude, assuming our position, and vindicating our declarations to the world. Either one or the other must be done. I am in favor of any measure that will advance the national character and national honor, and will trench in our rights, and enable us to vindicate our citizens, and give them protection wherever they may travel on the earth. The earth is ours with other nations, and we must occupy our share of it. Sir, the boasted ensign of our nation will cower and lose all its pride and prestige unless we uphold it, and vindicate our national honor by an onward, determined course; not by boast or bravado, but by acting in our legislative capacity so as to vindicate the feelings of the nation, and show that we are a part of the mighty whole, and that we are determined to uphold our rights, and maintain our honor.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe it is not in order to discuss the merits of a proposition on a motion to make a subject a special order; and I shall have to ask the Chair to enforce the rule, because we shall have the whole debate on our foreign relations; and the motion we now have before us is one which will supersede the special order and everything else, unless we have a vote on it. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to vote, and let us go on; because, if they determine to postpone the appropriation bills to take up this subject, then I think we ought to take up the resolution of the Senator from New York, and prolong the session. Two weeks more will not do it; it will take a month at this rate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to Senators that the subject is not under discussion. The question is on fixing a time for discussion. The question before the Senate is on making the subject the special order for a particular period.

Mr. PUGH. I have waited for the last four or five days for the Senator from Virginia to get his appropriation bill out of the way; but if the hours of the Senate are to be taken up in these Senate resolutions fixing the order of time for considering subjects, I feel it my duty to call up for consideration the question of privilege which I reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. It has been decided to be a question of privilege, and I call for its present consideration. It is the resolution relative to the seats of the Senators from Indiana.

Mr. SLIDELL. Is not this question pending?

Mr. PUGH. If it leads to no debate, I am willing Senators should take the vote on this motion; but if it is to involve further discussion, I shall insist on taking up the question of privilege.

Mr. SLIDELL. I merely wish, before this bill is made the special order, to give notice of an amendment. It is a proposition authorizing the President, under certain circumstances, to suspend the operation of the neutrality laws, which I intend to offer as an amendment to the bill. I ask that the amendment may be printed.

It was ordered to be printed, by general consent.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us vote on the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the motion of the Senator from Virginia, to make the report and bill the special order for Saturday.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. PUGH. I do not think it is necessary to put that question. They can be called up whenever a majority of the Senate are ready to consider them. I propose my question of privilege to the Senate. They may make any disposition of it they think proper. I ask the Senate to take up the report of the Committee on the Judiciary on the contested-election case from Indiana.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Michigan will withdraw his amendment, and let us see if we cannot vote down the motion.

Mr. STUART. Very well. If the Senator from Virginia wishes it, I withdraw my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] to make this subject the special order for twelve o'clock to-morrow.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Clingman, Davis, Green, Gwin, Houston, Iverson, Kennedy, Mason, Polk, Pugh, Reid, and Slidell—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Colhaver, Crittenden, Dixon, Doollittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Hammond, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, King, Mallory, Pearce, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—37.

So the motion was not agreed to; and the bill takes its place on the Calendar.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 561) making appropriations for the support of the three regiments of volunteers authorized by the act of Congress approved April 7, 1858; and

A bill (No. 555) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1858.

On motion of Mr. HUNTER, these bills were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance.

INDIANA SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. PUGH. I call up the question of privilege in regard to the seats of the Senators from Indiana.

Mr. HUNTER. Is it in order for me to move to postpone the question of privilege and all other business, in order to take up the miscellaneous appropriation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. HUNTER. I make that motion.
The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859.

Yesterday, Mr. FITCH, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, presented an amendment for the construction of certain post offices, to which Mr. POLK moved to add:

For the erection of a building for a custom-house and the courts of the United States at Jefferson City, Missouri, $30,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that this amendment was decided not to be in order by the Presiding Officer who occupied the chair yesterday, and an appeal was taken; and upon the appeal the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GREEN. I was addressing the Chair on the subject of the appeal when the Senate adjourned yesterday. I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate unnecessarily. I believe the subject is as well understood now as it would be if I were to elaborate it. I made remarks which, perhaps, had reference to the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY,] from which he exculpated himself; and I beg leave, therefore, to say that I do not desire to apply them to him, but to the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON.] The points I made I will merely recapitulate: that the mere technical rule is a very harsh and arbitrary one, in derogation of the common rights of Senators and of States, and it therefore ought to be most strictly construed by the strictest letter of the rule. It does not apply to the pending amendment, and for that reason I think the decision of the Chair was incorrect; but if it be the resolve of the Senate to vote down all these propositions, I am content to permit Missouri to abide by the fate of the other States. I am not willing, however, to see that State slipped over, and made an exception. I want them all to stand alike. Equality is equity.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I believe I was the cause of the interruption which took place last night. I avowed it at the time. I was a little amused myself throughout the whole transaction; and the remark which gave rise to it was one that is very usual under such circumstances. I must say now, that our friend from Missouri was entirely unconscious that he was consuming a great deal more time than the sense of the Senate could possibly concur in believing was necessary. It was merely as a friendly suggestion that I cried out "question," thinking he would take it as a hint; certainly with no other intention. As to the remarks made to the Senator from Alabama, I did not consider them very severe, by any manner of means; but if I am now to understand them differently from what I did then, as they are to be applied to me, I shall have to ask what they were.

Mr. CLAY. I do not think it necessary to repeat the remarks. I did not object to them because of what was said; but I thought it would perhaps shorten the question if I should let the Senator from Missouri know he was shooting at the wrong mark. I do not think there was anything to wound the sensibility of my friend from Arkansas, and I hope the Senator from Missouri will not repeat them. We shall see them in print after a while in the Globe.

Mr. GREEN. I shall not consume time. It was not for the Senate merely that I was speaking. There are responsibilities resting on Senators to discharge their duty to the satisfaction of their constituents at home; and sometimes the Senate may be a little tired of a subject. But you want to prove to the people whom you represent that you are doing your duty. I was speaking with that view; not to satisfy the Senator from Arkansas, but to satisfy a higher power—the great State of Missouri.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The great State of Missouri has no more rights here than any other; certainly no more than Arkansas, and Arkansas does not respect her any more.

Mr. STUART. I am not desirous of extending this debate; I only wish to do now what I could not do in the chair so well—make a suggestion or two in regard to the apparent distinction attempted to be made by the Senator from Missouri. He concedes that the rule excludes an amendment to an appropriation bill, the effect of which is to increase the appropriation; but he insists that when there is an amendment to that bill pending, a member may offer to amend that amendment to any amount. Now, sir, this is not a harsh construction; it is a fair construction of the rule. If the question of order cannot be made when the amendment to the amendment is pending, it cannot be made at all, because the amendment proposed by a committee is in order. If an individual member can amend that amendment to the sum of $1,000,000, that amendment, being amended, is not open to the question of order; and it would therefore be a mere evasion, and an entire evasion, of the whole rule. The fair construction of the rule is, in my judgment, the true construction; not an extended one, not a very strict one, but a fair construction. That construction, and that alone, will carry out the rule, and it was that construction which I gave.

Mr. BROWN. I want only a moment to say that there is nothing at all extraordinary in proposing this amendment, in this connection. I find, by reference to the Journal of March 2, 1855, that:

"On motion of Mr. MASON to amend the bill"—the civil and diplomatic bill—

"by inserting after line one thousand and fifty-eight, 'to reimburse Commodore M. C. Perry, of the United States Navy, the extraordinary expenses incurred by him,' &c.,

"Mr. TOOMBS moved to amend the amendment, by proposing to add:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, his full compensation, &c., $20,000."

On the same day—

"A motion being made by Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to amend the bill by inserting: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to audit and settle the accounts of George P. Marsh, &c.,

Mr. SEWARD moved to amend by adding:

"And that the sum of $18,000 be paid to John S. Pendleton," &c.

There was no pretense that either the proposition, moved at that day by the Senator from Georgia, or the one moved by the Senator from New York, came from any committee. They were moved simply as amendments to amendments, and were to pay money to parties who had claims against the Government. The committee commenced by bringing in a proposition to pay one man, precisely as the committee have brought in here the proposition to build one post office. The Committee on Foreign Relations then brought in a proposition to pay Commodore Perry, and the Senator from Georgia moved an amendment to pay Mr. Robert C. Schenck. The Senator from Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, brought forward a proposition to pay Mr. Marsh; and the Senator from New York, acting on his individual account, brings in his proposition to pay Mr. Pendleton.

Mr. SEWARD. Was the question of order raised?

Mr. BROWN. There was a question of order raised, as I will show by the record.

Mr. CLAY. I was going to ask the Senator if those propositions were not reported by committees?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; there was no pretense of that kind. I will read from the Globe. The Senator from Virginia having offered an amendment in regard to Mr. Marsh, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Mr. SEWARD. I move to amend the amendment by adding:

"And that the sum of $18,000 be paid to John S. Pendleton, in full compensation for his services in the missions in which he was associated with Mr. Schenck, deducting anything which he may heretofore have received as compensation for the same.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that both amendments, the amendment and the amendment to the amendment, are excluded by the 30th rule, which excludes private claims."

A discussion ensued, in the course of which the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS,] said:

"The amendment of the honorable Senator from New York is precisely similar to one which I gave notice at the last session I would move, if the one which I offered in regard to Mr. Schenck should be approved. Those two gentlemen, one from Virginia and one from Ohio, were engaged in the same missions."

The discussion went on for some time upon the point of order. The Senate ultimately determined to receive the amendment, and it was carried with the bill, and became a part of the law. That is precisely the ground on which I put the appeal now from the ruling of the Chair, that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads bring in a proposition to build one post office, and I may move to amend it by adding another post office. The Committee on Foreign Relations proposed to pay Commodore Perry, and I say if the rule was not violated by proposing to pay somebody else, I simply insist that I violate no rule by proposing to add another post office.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no doubt that on any question of order, you can find, if you choose to look back to the records of the Senate, a dozen conflicting decisions, because, it seems to me, it nearly always depends on the temper of the body on the particular subject-matter, whether an amendment is ruled in order or out of order. Agreeing myself with the Chair that it is not in order, I say you might as well abandon the rule if you permit this amendment to be moved.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Colman, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hayne, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Mason, Pugh, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Sill, Wade, and Wilson—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Douglas, Fitch, Generators, Houston, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, and Polk—11.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained, and the question recurred on the amendment of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Is it in order now to raise a question of order on the original amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A question of order can properly come up.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I raise the question of order, that the subject of building post offices under no action of the Senate has ever been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and that they have consequently no jurisdiction in that matter; none has been given them by the Senate, and therefore an amendment offered by them, though with the sanction of their committee, is unauthorized and not in order.

Mr. POLK. I wish to ask whether there has been by the Senate a reference of any single one of these cases to that committee?

Mr. FITCH. I did not answer that question fully yesterday. I think there has not been. They have all been brought before that committee, I believe at the personal solicitation of the Representatives or Senators from the different localities; yet I do not think the question of order is well taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question of order is not debatable until decided by the Chair. If there be an appeal, that appeal will be debatable. The Chair will cause the amendment to be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

For the construction of a building for a custom-house and other Government purposes, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York, $50,000, and also such additional sum as may be necessary to purchase a suitable site for such building.

For the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon, in Columbus, in the State of Ohio, for a post office, and other Government purposes, $50,000.

For the purchase of a site for the building for public purposes, authorized to be erected at Tallahassee, by the act of 3d March, 1857, $30,000.

For a site and building for a post office and other Government purposes, in Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, the sum of $50,000.

For the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon, in Harrisburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, for a post office and other Government purposes, $50,000.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas raises the question of order that this amendment, though offered by a standing committee of the Senate, is not in order, because the subject-matter has not been referred to the committee by the Senate. The Chair will cause the 30th rule to be read.

The Secretary read the 30th rule, as follows:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate," &c.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Under that rule the Chair decides the amendment to be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Then, I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I do so on this ground: whilst the rule requires such an amendment to come from a standing committee in order to be admissible, there is a parliamentary rule which exists behind that, requiring that the committee shall properly have jurisdiction of the subject-matter. I call the attention of the Senate to the evident injustice that must result from a course the contrary of this. Hitherto, it is well known throughout the Senate, the Committee on Commerce has had charge of all these subjects. We have been very well aware in the Senate that from the manner in which the Committee on Commerce was framed, there was little, if any, hope whatever that anything of this sort could be obtained from them. We are also aware that the subject-matter of building post offices has never been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. If notice had been given to us by even any movement of reference of this character, so as to enable gentlemen who had similar claims to come before the Senate and present them to the committee, then those of us who are here with equal rights, in some instances, I think, far greater rights than those cases now provided for, would have made inquiries, and presented their cases also. It may be that a few who happen to be upon the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have thought perhaps of their own States, and of a few of their friends, besides. They can put on any proposition, and have it considered and carried through, while cases more meritorious are not to be considered at all. The desire of preventing anything of that sort may have been one reason of the rule; but there are other reasons. Certainly, it is settled parliamentary rule that a committee must have jurisdiction of a subject before it can be permitted to report on that subject. I do not believe a committee can offer an amendment of this character upon a subject which has not been referred to them at this session, or any other session that I have ever heard of. I hope the appeal will be sustained.

Mr. CLAY. I think there is a great deal of force in what has been said by the Senator from Arkansas; but yet without the production of some rule of the Senate to support his argument, I shall vote to sustain the decision of the Chair. I think the Chair is constrained by the rule which was read by the Secretary, to make that decision. At the same time I think it proper to say that resolutions for the construction of all these works were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and they were referred, together with propositions in regard to a large number of similar works, either offered by members of the Senate, or passed by Legislatures of the States, and in every instance the Committee on Commerce reported, I believe unanimously, against making the appropriation. They did so after communicating with the Secretary of the Treasury, and after receiving communications from him adverse to the appropriations. After those adverse reports had been made, I do not know that it was strictly in order to bring the matter before another committee of the Senate without the consent of the Senate itself. I understand that individual Senators interested in these appropriations have gone before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and have submitted their propositions, shown the estimates for the construction of these works, and have prevailed on that committee to make a report, and they make a report against the adverse report of another standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I shall be obliged, very reluctantly, to vote with the Senator from Arkansas on the question which he has made. I want to state, in a word, the reason which will control my vote, and the reason which draws me irresistibly to the conclusion that the Senator from Arkansas is right. I hold that the committees of the Senate are simply the organs of the Senate, and they can act on no question, however germane to the business of the committee, unless that subject is first committed to them by the Senate. These subjects have never been committed to the Post Office Committee, as I understand. If a committee can originate propositions, they become originating bodies. They are not such; they are the organs, and only the organs, of the Senate, to mature that which the Senate commits to them, and nothing else. If they can do else, where does it end? I desire to know the necessity of presenting petitions, and memorials, and resolutions to the Senate, and having them referred to committees, if committees are originating bodies, and can act upon matter other than that which has been referred to them by the Senate? If so, they may act upon any question in the world, and they may take up any subject and the Senate may have no knowledge of it. You may have prohibited subjects in the Senate—you have, some of them—and yet a committee may take up a prohibited subject, and bring in a bill of which the Senate had no knowledge, on a subject which had never been committed to that committee. I am aware that the practice of the Senate has been sometimes different. I can only say that a service of eleven years upon the Committee on Commerce, justifies me in saying that no original proposition ever originated there.

There is another point in this matter which I do not think as important as the one I make, but still it is a point. If these questions had been submitted to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I think they are more properly the committee to consider them than the Committee on Commerce; but there were some of them referred to the Committee on Commerce in connection with other buildings; that is, the question of erecting a custom-house and post office at certain points. The Committee on Commerce gave these questions a careful consideration; and, as the chairman says, we came to the unanimous conclusion—I believe I am right; I concur in the chairman's recollection that we were unanimous—that it was not wise or expedient at this time to make the appropriations; and we reported them back. There is the action of the Senate on this subject once during this session. Now, if the committee can originate subjects, what is the object of acting upon the report of a committee? Suppose I refer any question you choose to any committee you please, and that committee deliberate and examine it, and come forward with a report, and that report is considered by the Senate and unanimously adopted; still, some other committee takes that subject up without notice to the Senate, without notice to the parties who are interested, and comes in here and makes a report on nothing, for they have got nothing on which to make a report: you might as well build a superstructure without a foundation. I never vote against a decision of the Chair without great reluctance; but, with this view of the case, I shall be obliged to vote with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The same question was raised by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. TOOMBS] some time ago, and the Chair decided it as he has on the present occasion. The Senator from Georgia took an appeal, which, I think, was withdrawn. I thought at the time that the decision of the Chair was incorrect; at the same time, I must say that it is astonishing there are so few of the decisions of the Chair which do not command the entire approbation of the Senate, considering the suddenness with which the questions are sprung, and the degree of common law on this subject, I may say, that rules in the Senate. Our rules have become the subject of interpretation by a kind of usage with which the Chair cannot yet be familiar. I rarely say a word on a question of order; but I think there is a principle lying behind this, to which I beg to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate. I fully agree with the Senator from Arkansas, that the rule of the Senate provides against the abuse which originated in the attempt of Senators to increase appropriations; and to prevent that abuse, it was established that no proposition to increase appropriations in a general appropriation bill should be in order, unless reported from a committee of the Senate. That is the part of the rule now under discussion.

Now, sir, is it not true, as the Senator from Arkansas says, that behind that lies the other parliamentary rule that no committee has a right to report upon a subject that is not germane, at all events, to the business of the committee? I am chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims: can I introduce, here, an appropriation from that committee to build a fort in Louisiana, if I can get my committee to agree to it; or, if I cannot get that committee to agree to it, can I go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ask them to move such an appropriation as that, or ask them to move an appropriation to build a new custom-house in New Orleans? Do not these things all strike us at once as shocking common sense, as clearly not embraced within the rule of the Senate? The rule must receive such an interpretation as to carry out the objects which are palpable upon its face. Those objects are to restrain appropriations that have not been properly considered, and that have not been considered with the consent of the Senate. The consent of the Senate to the consideration of an appropriation is evinced in one of two ways: either by previous action of the Senate as an entire body, or, as has been well said by the Senator from Maine, by the action of the Senate through an appropriate committee, to which the Senate has confided the investigation of the particular subject, by referring it to the committee. I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Maine, that no committee has a right to originate business and bring it in here; that the committees are not independent bodies; but that they receive the instructions of the Senate in relation to business which they are to prepare, and to bring before the Senate. Now, here comes an appropriation to an appropriation bill, forbidden unless reported from a committee of the Senate; but is not this report to be made legitimately, legally, according to the forms and rules of the Senate?

What is the case before the Senate? It is of a large series of appropriations reported from a committee which, according to the confession of its organ, volunteers to take up the subject, and to bring it before the Senate. These very appropriations, or a part of them, had previously been committed by the Senate to the appropriate committee, and reported on.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator is entirely mistaken about that. These are appropriations for post office buildings—all of them.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand it.

Mr. PUGH. How did they get to any committee, but the Post Office Committee?

Mr. BENJAMIN. If the Senator will reflect a moment, he will remember that these public buildings, in different States, are generally constructed under one roof for post offices, court-houses, and custom-houses—in many instances all under one roof. Frequently, propositions are made for building a custom-house and court-house—

Mr. PUGH. These are not custom-houses—not one of them.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand that perfectly well—these are post offices alone; but if I am not mistaken, I heard familiar names in the list contained in the amendment that was read.

Mr. POLK. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me, I will state that I recollect distinctly that one is for "a post office and other purposes."

Mr. BENJAMIN. "A post office and other public buildings." We had this very subject of public buildings before the committee, to which the Senate has hitherto always referred it—that is, the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction of the subject of public buildings for custom-houses, post offices, and court-houses. They have been sent there by the usage of the Senate. We discussed the subject, we examined the statistics, and we came to the unanimous conclusion that the whole system was wrong and ought to be stopped—at all events, that at the present session of the Senate, and in the present condition of the Treasury, we would not recommend a solitary new appropriation for these objects. If the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom the subject was not committed, can bring it forward in this way, any other committee of the Senate can do the same, and the entire business of the Senate is thrown into confusion. This is no ordinary point of order, and I trust that the Senate will decide it on principle. I shall be compelled, with my friend from Maine, to dissent from the opinion of the Chair, with entire respect for the Chair itself, and with the renewal of my expression of astonishment that I so seldom have occasion to dissent from his opinion.

Mr. STUART. I only wish to say a very few words on this question; very few, indeed, for the consideration of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Maine. With great respect to the opinions of those gentlemen, I think, on a review of this question, they will see that the Chair has decided correctly; not that they are incorrect on the point they make, for they are entirely correct, according to parliamentary law, it is undoubtedly true that no committee can originate business. It must be referred to them either by the committee of the President's message, or by some communication from a Department, or by a direct vote of the Senate. There can be no doubt, I think, on that point; but that is not the question. The question is, what authority has the Chair to rule an amendment out of order? That authority is found in the 30th rule alone. If it is reported by a committee, that is the end of the inquiry so far as the Chair is concerned on the point of order. It is competent for any Senator to move, and for the Senate to reject, an amendment, or reject a bill that has originated with a committee without authority. It is perfectly competent for the Senator from Arkansas, or any other Senator, to move to reject this amendment on the ground, not of its merits, but that it is improperly brought to the attention of the Senate. But, sir, I would ask gentlemen what is to be the consequence if they call upon the Chair to exercise the authority now contended for on the appeal? It is not every case, probably not one in twenty, that is free from dispute as to the jurisdiction of the committee. A committee claims that it has jurisdiction on some ground or other, and would you refer to the Chair that disputed question, which is a question solely to be determined by the Senate? The Chair's authority to rule an amendment out of order is confined to the rule. The parliamentary law alone would not authorize the Chair to decide a bill out of order because it had originated with a committee, without the subject having been referred to that committee.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STUART. Certainly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Suppose, for instance, the Committee on Public Lands, of which the Senator is chairman, should bring in a bill for the construction of fortifications, and an objection by a member was made to the Chair that that bill was not in order; that the committee had no right to bring in a bill without previous notice, unless the Senate had committed the business to its charge: would not that be a question of order for the Chair?

Mr. STUART. I say to the Senator from Louisiana, with great respect, but I confess with great confidence, that it would not; and the Senator will see that if he seeks to clothe the Presiding Officer of this body with such authority as that, he puts the whole power of the Senate in the Chair. The Senate may refuse to consider the proposition, and, I take it, would refuse to consider the proposition, where there was no dispute upon the question and a committee had assumed to report upon a subject that never had been committed to them. But, sir, the Chair must clearly be right in the decision he has made on this rule; the Chair cannot reject a proposition and withhold it from the consideration of the Senate, unless he finds his authority to do so in the rules of the Senate. Whether the Senate will consent to waive this rule and consider a proposition upon grounds of great public interest, or for any other reason of its own, is another question. As a question of order, however; I respectfully submit, I say it again, with a great deal of confidence, that the Chair has not only made a correct decision under the rule, but the only decision which would be a safe one for the action of the Senate. It is in order to move to reject this amendment; and in the case of a bill, as suggested by the Senator from Louisiana, it would be in order, and undoubtedly the best way, to move to lay the bill on the table for that reason; to postpone it indefinitely, or to do anything else with it not signifying the opinion of the Senate upon the merits of the bill, but that it was a question brought here without authority.

Mr. PUGH. I do not consider it important that the rules of order of the Senate should be founded on the most correct principles; but I do consider it important that they should be uniform, and uniformly administered. If this point of order be well taken, there is not an amendment now put to the bill in order; not one of the two hundred that are now probably in the bill is in order; for I will venture to say that there is not a standing committee of this body which has reported here, in the course of the last four days, that has had authority from the Senate, by resolution or petition, or otherwise, to report on the subject of its amendment.

But, sir, it is remarkable how short the memories of some Senators are—my friend the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Maine. It is hardly ten days ago since the Committee on the District of Columbia, through its chairman, reported an amendment to pay John C. Rives divers sums of money. My friend, the Senator from Georgia, wanted to know how the Committee on the District of Columbia came in possession of the subject-matter. It was never committed to them; it was not even germane to their duties. He raised the question of order; but the Senator from Arkansas was anxious for the amendment, and, altogether, the point of order raised by the Senator from Georgia was put out; for nobody seconded it. He stood alone, as he very often does; he is able, of course, to take care of himself, with nobody to second him. I have seen in the Senate, since I have been a member, the Committee on Military Affairs report an amendment to an appropriation bill increasing the salary of a judge, and it has gone upon the bill under this rule. I can show it in the records of the Senate since I have been a member. I do not care which way the rule works; but I want it to be fixed one way, and stay there. If it is decided that no committee can report an amendment to an appropriation bill, except where the subject has been specifically committed to the committee, I am ready to acquiesce; but I want the same law for all cases. I do not want, when gentlemen are favorable to an amendment; when they want to pay Mr. Rives or Mr. Rives's reporters—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Senator will allow me to ask if he has ever raised this point of order on any case himself?

Mr. PUGH. I tell the Senator that the Senator from Georgia raised it on the very question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I say that he did not raise it.

Mr. PUGH. My recollection is that he did.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Mine is the contrary; but I ask the Senator from Georgia, because I say he did not raise it. I dispute it.

Mr. PUGH. If I am mistaken, I shall be happy to be corrected.

Mr. TOOMBS. I raised the question of order on the Committee on the District of Columbia introducing an amendment to pay the reporters. I raised that point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. State it again.

Mr. TOOMBS. I objected to the Committee on the District of Columbia introducing an amendment, by their sanction, to pay the reporters of the Globe.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. You objected because no committee had brought it in. That was the objection; and the gentleman who offered it then said he would have it brought before his committee, and he would bring it up in that form.

Mr. TOOMBS. The next morning I took the point of order when they did sanction it, and the record will show it. Probably the Senator from Arkansas was not in his seat at the time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Ohio is very complimentary—

Mr. PUGH. That time I was right, surely.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I see you were; but I say I urged no portion of it. Another thing I venture to say; there was no vote taken on that point of order.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think there was; and it was against me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Arkansas will address the Chair, he will give him an answer.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The recollection of the Chair is, that the Senator from Georgia appealed from the decision of the Chair on that occasion, and afterwards withdrew it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That is it. The point has not been decided heretofore; and the Senator from Ohio speaks, in his complimentary remarks, of the very short memory of Senators here, when he refers back to these things.

Mr. PUGH. To that case.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Or any other.

Mr. PUGH. That is the case I referred to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. He speaks of two hundred cases of amendments offered here, every one of which was out of order. Can that be really believed in this body? Can it be that there are two hundred amendments now on this bill, every one of which is out of order, if this decision be wrong? I think not. But that is no argument as to the truth or correctness of the rule at all. I know, from a service of some years in the other branch of Congress, that daily, on appropriation bills, questions like this are raised constantly and decided, and gentlemen who have come immediately and recently from that body into this, also are aware of this fact. The jurisdiction of a committee is clearly defined, and distinctly acted upon there. Here, however, the question is not usually raised. I raise it this time. I have never heard a committee asked here, "was the subject-matter referred to you?" but I think it necessary to ask it, in order to restrict the operation of the rule which allows committees to offer amendments, so as to protect the appropriation bills from being heavily burdened.

Mr. PUGH. I say again, I have no objection to any rule the Senate makes. Make the rule, and I shall promise you, for one, to stand by it. I do not know anything about the rules of the House of Representatives; I never had the honor to be a member of that branch, but I have been a member of this body for three years; and when I came, I found this rule established; and I repeat that at the very first session of which I was a member of the Senate, I saw the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs report an amendment to increase the salary of the district judge of California. I asked him the question, how the committee got jurisdiction? He said it was the rule of the Senate that any standing committee could report any amendment. It was done, and it went on the bill. I could enumerate twenty other instances in two or three years. But the point of short memory was, that I thought my friend from Arkansas was in his seat at the time the Senator from Georgia made that point of order. I know that Senator was anxious to get that appropriation on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I do not even know what the appropriation was of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. PUGH. To enable John C. Rives to pay his reporters extra pay.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. On the contrary, I was directly against it, and got up and made remarks here which I thought would conclude it, in which I asserted that he did not want the appropriation at all, and it was simply on the application of the reporters of this body; and I voted against it in the end.

Mr. PUGH. If the Senator is right, my memory is shorter than his. I shall not prolong that. I leave it to the Senate and the record. I think it is matter of record; and if I am mistaken, I will take back my assertion; and if he is mistaken, let him take it back.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Look at the record for my vote.

Mr. PUGH. I insist the decision of the Chair is the settled practice; and if the rule now contended for be established, then when the bill shall come out of Committee of the Whole, I will insist on knowing, in regard to various amendments, whether the subject-matter has or has not been committed to the committees that offered the amendments.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to entreat the Senate to decide this point of order. We shall never get through the bill if we take up time in this way in regard to points of order. With regard to the point itself, I think it is well taken. I do not think a committee can report on what has not been committed to them.

Mr. FITCH. My opinion on the point of order is good for nothing, and therefore I shall content myself by expressing it by my vote; but some remarks fell from the Senator from Arkansas to which I desire to call his attention, and that of the Senate. He objected to amendments of this kind being brought in, concocted in committee, perhaps, for the benefit—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I did not use the word "concocted."

Mr. FITCH. I did not pretend to quote the language of the Senator; but the idea that they were introduced by gentlemen on committees for the benefit of their own particular localities. I must do the Post Office Committee the justice to say that no such consideration operated on them. There was before the committee a long list of similar appropriations—I may as well say a House bill making appropriations for certain purposes, including mostly the erection of post offices. The committee saw proper not to act upon the suggestions of gentlemen who brought that bill before them, and report it; but there were some items in it, and some brought to their attention which were not embraced in that bill, under circumstances and arguments alleged in their behalf, which fixed the attention of the committee, and secured a majority in favor of them. If the Senator from Arkansas had, as other gentlemen did, presented an item asking for an appropriation for a post office in Little Rock, urging the same considerations of a public character which were urged by others in behalf of their particular items, I have very little doubt the committee would have agreed to report it. There is nothing in the amendment for Indiana, and it is due to the Senator from Connecticut to say that the appropriation for the erection of a post office at Hartford was not brought before the committee by him originally. It came from a Representative in the other House from that State.

Now, a word as to this question of order. I agree with the Senator from Ohio, that if the decision of the Chair be overruled by the Senate, and that ruling of the majority is to be made operative on this or any other appropriation bill, it will exclude very nearly, if not quite, perhaps one half of the items embraced in the bills. I think the Chair has ruled correctly. There is an effort made to have the Senate overrule him. I think, if the past history of the appropriation bills be closely scrutinized, it will be found that three fourths of the items in the appropriation bills were never referred to the committees who reported them. Then it strikes at the very root of legislation. As for these points of order, they are, after all, mere expressions of the individual wishes of the members voting. If they wish a particular item to be in order, so as to secure its passage, their wishes generally control their votes; but where a majority rules, in a doubtful case like this, a particular measure not in order, their ruling is usually brought up in judgment against them in a very short time subsequently, perhaps much to their own regret. If the subject of the construction of post offices is not legitimately within the control of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I take it nothing is. These appropriations are said to have usually come from the Committee on Commerce, perhaps appropriately, especially where custom-houses were provided. The amendment offered from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, now contemplates only post offices. But, sir, I have no feeling whatever in the matter. I merely rise to do what I have done—exonerate the committee from any intimation that they had been governed by partiality in reporting the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. As I concur in the ruling of the Chair, and think there is something of danger in reversing the practice of the Senate, as it has been established ever since I have been a member, I will very briefly state the reasons why I support these views.

The question of order must, in my judgment, depend on the written rules of the Senate. A question of order raised on parliamentary law, apart from the written rules of the Senate, must depend on how far, and to what extent, the usage of the Senate has modified it; because the practice of the Parliament of England, or of the House of Representatives of this country, cannot bind the Senate contrary to its own usages. Apart from the binding force of the 30th rule of the Senate, what would prevent any member of the Senate from moving this amendment? What restricts him? Have we ever acted on the parliamentary rule requiring that an amendment must be germane to the bill? No. We have every day permitted anything or everything to go on an appropriation bill that the will of the Senate pleases to let go there; but we have established, as a rule of order, in order to qualify the action of members in offering amendments to the appropriation bills, that "no amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session"—then any individual member may move it—"or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate." Does it not necessarily follow that this rule, as it is a negative on the previously existing right of every member of the body, conveys an implied authority on the part of any standing or select committee of the Senate to move an amendment to an appropriation bill? It is not like originating new bills. We have no rule of order that would restrict individual members apart from this; and if this rule of order, which does not restrict the individual member from offering such an amendment, qualifies that restriction by implying that an amendment may be offered if reported by a standing or select committee of the Senate, on what principle can you rule it out of order? It must be on some settled principle of parliamentary law, if it is so, which has been recognized by the custom and action of the Senate; no special rule provides for it.

I am perfectly willing to agree in the views of the honorable Senator from Louisiana if you will alter the 30th rule so as to prevent committees from reporting amendments on subjects which have not been referred to them or are not within their jurisdiction; but you have no such special rule now; and if you go to the practice of the Senate, I think, in the seven years I have been in the Senate, this is the first time I have known the question raised on an appropriation bill, unless it was the other day, in the case which the Senate did not really decide, the objection being waived. It is the first time I have known an amendment moved by a standing committee of this body objected to as out of order; it may have been voted down. Amendments on subjects within or without their jurisdiction, have, as a matter of course, been moved. It was enough that the committee moved the amendment; and the question for the Senate was not whether it was in order, but whether they chose to sanction that amendment or not.

There is great force in the remarks made on the other side as to what ought to be the rule of the Senate; but what is the rule of the Senate is a very different question. In the absence of a written rule, beyond all question, no parliamentary law or practice of the House of Representatives, or the Parliament of England, can bind the Senate of the United States as a matter of order, apart from their own usages and customs; and, so far as my memory goes, I have never known a single instance in which it has been attempted to make the objection, with the exception of the solitary case the other day, that an amendment was out of order to an appropriation bill when it was moved by a standing or select committee of this body. I shall therefore vote to sustain the decision of the Chair; but if any gentleman will move an amendment of the rule so as to restrict committees hereafter, I shall vote for it.

Mr. SEWARD. Our time is too precious to be occupied in questions of order; but, as I feel some interest in this appropriation, I must state that the simple question now before us is an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The decision of the Chair is that this amendment is in order. If it is out of order, it is out of order by virtue of some rule which exists defining and showing what shall be in order. The only rule which is referred to is a rule which prohibits the offering of such an amendment as this, unless it shall be moved by some committee of the Senate. It is not a rule which prohibits the offering of such an amendment by a committee, if the subject-matter has not been referred to the committee; but it is simply a rule which declares that an amendment shall not be received unless it is recommended by a committee. Mutatis mutandis, that is in order which is recommended by a committee of the Senate. If the rule is inadequate to meet the policy in which it is supposed to be founded, it is easier and safer to perfect the rule than it is to stretch and pervert it. The rules of order are very important, but they cannot be maintained unless they are strictly and conscientiously and honestly maintained; and if this rule shall be perverted so as to defeat an amendment upon its merits, under the pretense that it is out of order, there will be no respect hereafter for this rule, or for any other rule of the Senate.

Nor do I think that the reasoning is sound; that the committees of the Senate are limited and restrained and chained down so closely that they can report no amendment to the Senate making appropriations upon a matter of detail, which matter of detail has not been referred to the committee. This amendment is reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The subject which is referred to them, is the general care and management of post offices and post roads under the laws of the United States and under the messages of the President; and here is a bill from the House of Representatives on the subject of post offices and post roads. The committee, as a matter of detail in regard to the general management of the system may, and they undoubtedly have a right to recommend the erection, and an appropriation to defray the expenses of the erection of a post office anywhere. They may abuse their discretion; and, in that case, the remedy is not by an appeal or a rule of order, but by discussing the subject, and rejecting it on its merits. I think, therefore, that the decision of the Chair ought to be sustained.

Mr. BIGLER. I hope we shall dispose of this question. It is exceedingly important that we should proceed with the public business. If there be any question of order here, it certainly is not a question on the rule; it is one of those questions which necessarily refer themselves to the body to be decided by the power of the body.

I have a word only to say in regard to the presentation of this amendment. I am confident that it never occurred to the members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, that there would be any doubt as to their right to offer such an amendment as this under the practice in this body, under the practice which we have witnessed here since this bill was taken up. A practice of this kind has been undoubtedly indulged in. The honorable Senator from Ohio is, perhaps, too strong in his expression of the extent to which this practice has gone, but that it has been indulged in there is no doubt. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of the House of Representatives, reported a bill embracing appropriations amounting to an aggregate of six or seven hundred thousand dollars. That bill was presented to the committee of the Senate; they were asked to offer it here as an amendment, for the purpose of expediting the transaction of business, the House committee having failed to have the bill prepared to offer it in the House of Representatives. On an examination of the subject, it was agreed that it was not probable Congress, at this time, would attempt to make appropriations so extensive; and looking over the various propositions and items contained in that bill, those only were favorably regarded which seemed to be distinguished from the others by their pressing necessity or on account of the peculiar locality to which the appropriation was required; that at Brooklyn, because Brooklyn is a very large city with very bad accommodation. In other cases, the seats of government and other important points were selected. The committee reported these four items. For my own part, I have no feeling about it. I hope the Senate will decide the question.

Mr. CAMERON. I know very little about the rules of this body, and I generally take the decision of the Chair as being correct. This morning I tried to follow the lead of my friend on my left, [Mr. GREEN,] and I found myself in a very small minority, and I think I shall not very soon again differ from the opinion of the Chair. In this case, I am very desirous that this appropriation shall be carried. I hope it will be agreed to. Sir, the operations of the human mind are very strange. This morning I listened to a very able and learned speech from the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, and I believe he would have convinced me that he was right, if I had not remembered that he, like the rest of us, is sometimes governed by his interest, without knowing it; I mean his public interest. Now, the city of New Orleans has had expended, on a custom-house there, nearly three million dollars. The Senator from Maine is my personal friend, and I always listen to him with respect; but I am inclined to think that his notions are governed by the interest of his State. On looking at the list of public buildings which have been erected, I find four or five in the State of Maine—at Belfast, Bath, Bangor, and Portland. The State of Maine may now be pretty well supplied with post office and custom-house buildings. I find that several gentlemen, who disagree with the decision of the Chair, have had these public edifices erected in their towns, and, therefore, they do not care about any more being constructed. My case is different. The town of Harrisburg, the capital of the State of Pennsylvania, has never had any public buildings put there by this Government. The postmaster is compelled to rent a house, from time to time, and he often gets an inconvenient one.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to explain to my friend the difference in the cases. These appropriations were to finish certain post office and custom-house buildings, and were estimated for by the Department. This is not so estimated.

Mr. CAMERON. Precisely. This appropriation for Harrisburg will begin and finish the work. There is a population in and about Harrisburg who go to that post office for their mails, of something over twenty thousand people. The mails are kept in inconvenient places. Nothing has been done for Pennsylvania. On the contrary, Congress has always done everything it can against her interests. Why shall not this little appropriation be suffered to go along without being discussed for hours on a question of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. I have a remark to make simply on the question of order, without saying anything on the merits of the amendment, as the yeas and nays have been ordered. Practically, those of us who have served in this body for two or three years, know that whatever amendment any committee has recommended, has been considered as in order to be passed upon. That has been the practice and usage under the rule. But, sir, I will not put it on that. I think the Chair puts it on a broad principle. In passing on a question of order, the Chair ought to be enabled to decide upon the looks of the proposition, from the inspection of the face of the proposition, whether it is in order or not, by the rule. Now, what is asked? Gentlemen insist upon it that when an amendment is proposed by a committee, and a question of order is raised upon it, the Chair shall proceed to inquire whether there has been any memorial or petition sent to that committee which would enable it to report this proposition; whether there has been any measure, whether there has been any resolution, whether there has been any bill; and, in short, he must go through the examination of the records of the whole proceedings of this session to see whether the committee are authorized to report the proposition. That I consider impracticable; and it would be applying the rules in such a way that it would be impracticable to carry them into effect. I therefore think the Chair is right in saying that simply by the rule, and by the inspection of the amendment, the question is to be decided; and this is in order by such a rule as that.

Mr. YULEE. I will state, in a single word, that it has been the habit of the committees with which I have been connected, to report upon any subject with regard to the general business of the particular department to which their duties relate. I have supposed that we were at liberty to consider any subject connected with the administration of the Post Office Department, and to report upon it.

Mr. COLLAMER. I cannot but feel it my duty to protest against such a practice as that. I do not believe it has existed, except to a very limited extent, of committees originating anything that they think belongs to their department, unless there has been something authorizing them to act on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. With the leave of the Senate, the Chair will make a single remark on the point of order. Except for this rule, this amendment would certainly be in order; that is, would have to be received by the Chair. If it is not in order, it is because of the limitations of this rule. The limitations of this rule are in derogation of the common right of members of the Senate to offer amendments. The Chair did not feel himself at liberty, in his construction, to push it beyond the scope of its language, nor did he suppose it was proper for him to decide any question of order, as suggested by the Senator from Vermont, the propriety of reports from committees, especially when he found the practice of the Senate had been in accordance with the ruling which he had made. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?" The Secretary will call the roll.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 46, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Olingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Gwin, Hammond, Harlan, Hayne, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Rice, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Thomson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—46.

NAYS—Allen, Benjamin, Green, Hamlin, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Sebastian, and Toombs—9.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GREEN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment:

For the increase of the appropriation made at the Thirty-fourth Congress, for a court-house and post office at Memphis, Tennessee, $140,000; and that said building be used for a custom-house and post office.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that in order?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. There is a law existing on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there an existing law providing for the payment of this amount of money for the purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The amendment refers to the law passed at the last Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must assume, on the Senator's statement, that it is to carry out the provisions of a law.

Mr. HUNTER. On its face, this amendment is to increase an appropriation. No doubt there has already been an appropriation; but this is not to carry out that law, but to change it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair finds, on looking at the amendment, that it is for the increase of an appropriation. Unless there is some provision in the law for that increase, the Chair cannot receive the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The law authorizes the erection of the building. My amendment proposes to carry out that law by appropriating a sufficient amount.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think it is in order under the rule.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Well, sir, I withdraw it.

Mr. COLLAMER. I am exceedingly unwilling to interfere with the progress of the business of the Senate on appropriation bills; but when the yeas and nays are ordered, and I am compelled to give a vote to go upon the record, on such a question as this, I desire to say a few words in explanation. This amendment has not been printed, and I have had no opportunity to examine it; I have to rely entirely upon hearing it read from the desk. I understand that all the items in it are for the erection of post offices. In relation to that subject I would say, that until within the last five or six years, we did not own a post office in the Union. Within that time, appropriations have been made to provide post offices at Baltimore, at Philadelphia, at New York, and at Boston. I think I am safe in saying that these are the only places where we have provided for post offices. I know that in many instances, where court-houses have been required to be built, and in many other instances, where custom-houses have been required to be built, we have taken the opportunity to put a post office room into those buildings; but I am safe in my statement that we have never provided for the building of a post office, as such, except in the large cities I have named. To furnish post offices generally is no advantage to the Government, and only inures to the benefit of the postmasters. The postmaster pays the expenses of his office out of his commissions; and if you build a post office for him the effect is to enable him to pocket more commissions and get up to his maximum of two thousand dollars. The Government does not pay for the hire of post offices; that is paid for by the respective postmasters; and if we build post offices for them, we only help them so much. That is the case with the large run of post offices, except where there are large distributing offices.

If we are to enter upon this business of building post offices at the expense of the Government, I wish to pursue the course recommended by the clergyman to his congregation when there was notice given that there was a wreck. The clergyman got at their head and said, "now let us all start fair." I want to start fair in this matter, to fix some rule and carry it through. If you say you will build a post office at the capital of every State, put your bill so; if you say you will build a post office at every place where there is a distributing office, put your bill so; but do not adopt this plan of saying you will have one for A, and another for B, and another for C, making a log-rolling operation out of it, and putting in just enough to carry the measure through. That does no justice to the country at large. The effect is, when those of us who do not get post offices go home to our people, we are told, "see, there was a post office built in that State and this State, and why did you not get one for us? We have larger towns, and why are we not provided for?" We are much in the condition of those gentlemen who think it is an element of popularity to distribute public documents, by which you offend ten men where you gratify one that gets a book. It is an element of dissatisfaction, and that is all; and so it will be unless it is started on some system, some rule. I object utterly to the whole amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will merely add a word to what has been said so well by the Senator from Vermont. If this amendment passes, we must be prepared to appropriate between one and two hundred million dollars to build post offices; for if you will take your list and carry out this measure to its legitimate consequences, you cannot tell now where you will stop in building post offices. Do gentlemen know how many post offices there are in the United States? My friend from Vermont says twenty-two thousand, and others say twenty-six thousand. Long before you get the buildings constructed that are provided for in this amendment, you will have thirty or forty thousand post offices to build. You are providing no system, as the Senator from Vermont says; no line of distinction; nothing by which the country is to be guided. You are going now to set the example, and plunge headlong into a system of extravagance that no man can see the end of; and that without consideration, and when a committee which has examined the subject has reported unanimously against it. I will not add another word. I want to call the attention of Senators to this point, that they do not know where they are going; if they vote for this appropriation, there is no stopping; there is no line of demarkation. Begin it, and you will have to build post offices throughout the United States by thousands and tens of thousands.

Mr. PUGH. I only want to say one word to the Senator from Louisiana. I think we are all satisfied now that we did not know where we were going when we commenced the custom-house at New Orleans; and we do not know where the custom-house house is going to, for it is beginning to disappear, notwithstanding the lavish expenditure of money upon it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I admit that; but what has it to do with this?

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bigler, Cameron, Dixon, Fitch, Foster, Gwin, Hamlin, Iverson, Pugh, Rice, Seward, and Wade—13.

NAVS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Broderick, Brown, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Doolittle, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hale, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, King, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomsen of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wright—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 201) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask leave at this time to submit a report from a committee of conference.

The report was received and read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 201) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859, having met, have, after a full and free conference, agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate do recede from its first, sixth, eleventh, twenty-first, and twenty-seventh amendments to the bill.

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to, and concur in, the fourth, twenty-third, and twenty-fifth amendments of the Senate.

That the House of Representatives agree to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment as follows:

At the close of the said amendment add the following words: "And that such clerks shall not be employed under the authority of this act after the 3d day of March, 1859."

That the House of Representatives agree to the fifth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment as follows:

At the close of the said amendment add the following words: "For the Senate, and for stationery for the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1859, $5,000 for the House of Representatives."

Upon the thirtieth amendment the committee have not been able to agree.

J. A. PEARCE,
BENJAMIN FITZPATRICK,
LYMAN TRUMBULL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. GLANCY JONES,
JAMES JACKSON,
V. B. HORTON,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PEARCE. Since the committees have prepared this report the House of Representatives has acted upon the thirtieth amendment. The House has taken the action recommended by its committee on the various amendments which are stated in the report, and has also receded from its disagreement to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate. I therefore move that the Senate concur in the report, and that will dispose of the bill. If any Senator desires to know what are the amendments proposed to be receded from, I will state them.

Mr. POLK. I should like to hear them.

Mr. PEARCE. The first amendment from which it is proposed the Senate shall recede, is that which provides for the payment of mileage to the newly-elected members of the Senate who were in attendance at the extra session of the 4th March last. The next, the sixth amendment, is for miscellaneous items for our contingent fund for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1858, $3,000. We found that was provided for in another bill. The next, the eleventh amendment, is one striking out the compensation for certain draughtsmen and clerks employed on land maps by the House of Representatives. The twenty-first was an amendment of the Senate providing "for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and lights, at the several district land offices, of the land States and Territories, to be apportioned in such manner as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the public interest may require, $60,000." The House of Representatives agree to the fifth amendment of the Senate with an appropriation of a like sum for a deficiency in stationery for the House of Representatives. The House agree to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, with a limitation which provides that the clerks who are authorized to be employed by the district attorney of the northern district of California to transcribe records of the district court in certain land cases, shall be limited in their work to the 3d of March, 1859. I believe I have explained all the disputed points. I move that the Senate concur in the report.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HENRY, his Secretary, announced that the President of the United States had this day approved and signed the following acts and resolutions:

An act for the relief of Laurent Millaudon;
An act for the relief of John Dick, of Florida;
An act for the relief of Anna M. E. Ring, Louisa M. Ring, Cordelia E. Ring, and Sarah J. De Lannoy;

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 41) to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; and

A bill (No. 83) to vest the title to certain warrants for land in George M. Gordon.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1859.

Mr. GREEN. I have an amendment to propose as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fifth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year 1841," approved the 3d day of March, 1841, and the eighth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1858," approved March 3, 1857, are hereby construed and declared to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to allow and pay to surveyors of ports performing or having performed the duties of collectors of customs since the passage of the law first above recited, the same compensation, and no other, as is allowed to collectors for like services.

Mr. HUNTER. This amendment is designed to give back pay to a large class of officers, as I understand, surveyors of ports; and if it is, it comes within the ruling of the Chair in regard to the amendment from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GREEN. There is no question of order that can possibly be raised on this amendment. It is declaring the law, and it is declaring the law exactly as the law now is, and I have only put it in this imperative form because the Secretary will not do his duty in executing the law. It proposes no appropriation. It asks no appropriation. It is to carry out an existing law. I will read the law; and I leave it to every Senator present whether this section, which is now the law of the land, is not exactly the same as the section I propose, with this single difference only: that this is mandatory, and speaks to the Secretary in language that he cannot evade. Here is the eighth section of the act of last year, passed with the vote of the Senator from Virginia, as well as my own and others, and approved the 3d of March, 1857:

"Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fifth section of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, for the year 1841,' approved the 3d day of March, 1841, which established and limited the compensation of collectors of customs, shall be construed to apply to surveyors performing, or having performed, the duties of collectors of the customs, who shall be entitled to the same compensation as is allowed to collectors for like services in the settlement of their accounts.'"

That is the present law. How anybody can misunderstand that law, is a mystery to me.

Mr. COLLAMER. What has been the construction?

Mr. GREEN. That if they performed the duties of collectors they still are only to be paid as surveyors, and not as collectors. The difference is this, and it applies to but very few offices: the surveyor of a port is limited, under the law of 1841, to $3,000, and the collector of a port is limited to $6,000. The compensation of a collector is dependent on the amount collected, but cannot go beyond the $6,000. At many of the ports they have a surveyor and a collector, as at New York, Boston, and other points; but at some of the small ports they have nothing but a surveyor, and no collector; and, under the law, those surveyors have to give bond to perform the duties of collector, incurring the whole responsibility and discharging all the duties of a collector.

Now, my opinion under the old law was, that they were entitled to the pay of collectors if they performed the duties of collectors; but to remove all doubt, and to make it so plain that no man could misunderstand it, this eighth section was put in the law of the 3d of March last, which declares expressly that they shall be paid as collectors, and that that is the meaning of the law; and yet, in spite of that, the Secretary of the Treasury says he will not pay them as collectors, but only as surveyors, holding them down to the short limitation of $3,000. I say that if they collect a large amount, the commissions ought to be paid to them under the same limitations as apply under the law providing for the compensation of collectors. Is there anything inequitable in it? No. Do they not discharge the same duty? They are not named collectors, but they give the bond, and do perform the duty of collectors; and the law says they shall have the same pay, but yet they cannot get it. That is the whole case.

One word more: the surveyor at Mobile, knowing his rights, refused to be cut down to the $3,000 limitation. The Solicitor of the Treasury ordered suit against him. Suit was brought. He pleaded this law, claiming the compensation of a collector, and the courts sustained him and defeated the United States Government; and so every surveyor performing the duties of a collector in the United States can defeat them to-day; but that does not meet the case, for this reason: here are men in office; they do not want to be turned out of office; they do not want to incur the hazards of a suit and the name of being a defaulter; they want the law executed. The head of the Treasury can say to any surveyor of a port, "if you do not come up and settle according to my construction of the law, I can give you your walking papers and dismiss you from office; I will hold you as a defaulter; I will institute suit against you, and hurt your character in the public estimation." I want to avoid all that; I think the law is plain, and I should like to hear the Senator from Virginia upon it, whether it is not express that they are not entitled to the same pay as collectors.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe I shall lose more time than I gain by making a question of order, because it would require an exposition of the law to make it. I would rather, therefore, take the question in this case on the amendment. This section of the law of 1857, as it was originally passed, was in these words:

"Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fifth section of the act entitled 'An act making ap- appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year 1841, approved the 3d day of March, 1841, which established and limited the compensation of collectors of customs, shall be construed to apply to surveyors performing or having performed the duties of collectors of the customs, who shall be entitled to the same compensation as is allowed to collectors for like services in the settlement of their accounts."

This section, as I understand it, was not carried into execution by the Secretary of the Treasury, because it was considered indefinite; it was uncertain whether it meant to apply to surveyors only in the future, or to surveyors in the past. If it meant to apply to surveyors in the past, it had a retroactive effect until 1841, and would be so construed as to allow salaries to men who had received their salaries, been content with them, gone out of office, and some of them were dead. We should thus revise the accounts of all that class of persons; and although they had received all they expected, or desired, or ever claimed, the accounts would be reopened. I admit that whatever is the law ought to be carried out; but I merely mean to refer to this as showing the effects, if we should make it imperative. If it should turn out that the construction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which I believe he is sustained by the law officer of the Government, is correct, and that this provision was indefinite, and could not be carried out without further legislation, then, I say, I am unwilling to pass further legislation in order to enforce a provision which would have that effect. Why should we go back and pay men who received all that they were entitled to, who received all they asked, and were satisfied with the settlement? As to the construction of the Secretary and the law officer on this provision, I have nothing, just now, to say. That is the construction they have put on it; and I am not willing to force them to carry this out; that is to say, to pass a declaratory provision which shall say that this provision is to have a retroactive effect, and to allow these men this back compensation.

Mr. GREEN. I have one word to say, and it is merely this: the law is so plain that how there could be a doubt about its construction is to me a mystery. It says, surveyors of ports performing or having performed the duties of collectors, shall be paid at the rate of collectors for like services. There can be no doubt about its construction. About the bugbear to be raised up for the purpose of frightening the Senate from their propriety, with reference to the number of officers, I will say that the number of surveyors collecting enough under the ordinary percentage to go above the $3,000 is very small, only some three or four, or five, I think. At the large offices there are collectors; they receive money as collectors; they give bonds as collectors, and are limited only by $6,000. Take St. Louis: it has a surveyor of the port; he was limited to $3,000. How much revenue does he collect? From eight hundred to twelve hundred thousand dollars a year; the average is a million. He incurs that responsibility, and the law says for that responsibility and labor he shall be paid at the same rate as a collector, and yet he cannot get it. I want the law made mandatory. So with Cincinnati; so with Mobile; so with some very few ports; but the number of offices where the surveyor would, under this law, go above the limitation of $3,000 provided for surveyors, is very small.

Mr. PUGH. I agree with the Senator from Missouri completely. I believe these men have arbitrarily been deprived of what the law has given them; and therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think we may as well settle this matter by a specific provision. It is very clear, in my opinion, that under the law each one of these surveyors, four, or five, or six in number, is entitled to this allowance; and if we do not settle it now, we force them to be branded as defaulters, and go into the courts to get that to which they are entitled under the law. I think it is not just to them, nor to ourselves, to force them to go into the courts, and to be thus branded, in order to enable them to get that which is clearly their right under the law, as it exists. I think we had better pass a declaratory act. It is better for the Department, for the surveyors, and for the public.

Mr. GREEN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I have not time to investigate this matter; but it strikes me, that as it is stated by the friends of the proposition, this is a clear case for the Court of Claims. It is a question as to the construction of a law. If these parties have a right to the money under the law, let them go to the Court of Claims and get it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bright, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Green, Houston, Iverson, Jones, Polk, Tugh, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, and Wade—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Clark, Clay, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hayne, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Mason, Reid, Sidel, Toombs, Trumbull, Wright, and Yulice—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEWARD. I submit the following amendment, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, upon principles of equity and justice, the accounts of J. D. Andrews, late agent of the United States in connection with the reciprocity treaty, and that the same be paid according to said adjustment.

Mr. HUNTER. This is a private claim to allow back pay.

Mr. TOOMBS. It is not for back pay. This gentleman was appointed a secret agent of the Government, under authority of law, to conduct this treaty; but the funds for miscellaneous expenses gave out, so that he could not be paid. The account is to be adjusted under the law. The President had authority to appoint him, and this is merely to pay him. It has the approbation of the Department.

Mr. HUNTER. This phrase, "upon principles of equity and justice," generally covers private claims that cannot go through according to law.

Mr. TOOMBS. It covers nothing but services in connection with the treaty. I took occasion to ask the Secretary of State about it, and, as far as his examination went, he said it was correct.

Mr. SEWARD. The Committee on Foreign Relations unanimously reported this proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The Chair will feel bound by the statement of the committee that it is to carry out an existing law.

Mr. HUNTER. Of course; but I should like to know why it is to be adjusted according to the principles of equity and justice. Does not the law cover it?

Mr. SEWARD. I suppose it does; but that is the usual form.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry that it could be an objection on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that this is to be done according to the principles of equity and justice. That rather commends it to my mind.

Mr. HUNTER. Such provisions are generally designed to give a discretion to the head of a Department, which does not exist under the law; and some of the worst claims we have ever had have passed in that shape.

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator ought to have objected to those former claims that he says were bad claims, and not to this.

Mr. MASON. I think the facts connected with that matter are very briefly these: during the administration of President Fillmore, when Mr. Webster was Secretary of State, while they were preparing material, and getting information with a view to the reciprocity treaty, this gentleman, Mr. Andrews, who was perfectly well informed on all subjects connected with the fisheries and the trade between Canada and this country, was employed by Mr. Webster to collect material for information on those matters, and he made reports, as the Senate is aware, which were subsequently printed in large books, containing really a fund of very valuable information. Afterwards, during the administration of President Pierce, the same gentleman was continued in employment, or employed anew by Secretary Marcy, for the same object. He was at Washington, I know, for I had a great many interviews and conferences with him, while the treaty was pending, and he did render very valuable services. How he was paid I do not know; but I am very well satisfied, on looking at the documents sent to the Department of State, connected with his mission, that in its discharge, which was very faithfully done, he incurred heavy obligations that it was not in the power of the Government to relieve him from, no money being appropriated, and the object of this amendment is to enable the Government, after examination, to do justice to the services he rendered on that occasion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BELL. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer an amendment:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st of July, 1856, the clerks and messengers in the Washington navy-yard and marine barracks, shall be entitled to receive, as theretofore, the compensation authorized by the acts of the 22d of April and the 5th of August, 1854; for the payment of which, such sum as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that for back pay—a private claim?

Mr. BELL. Allow me to explain it first. It is to carry out the provisions of a standing law. These clerks have had no appropriations made for them under that law, since 1856. The Senator from Virginia, I think, will not fail to remember that this has been before the Senate three times, and lost in the other House because of the lateness of the session. It has been twice passed by the Senate, and I have brought the records to show that. The Senator from Virginia, I remember, at one time took exception to it, when it was first offered; but the second and third times, I think, he was silent. I have the record before me to show that it passed the Senate twice. I believe the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WANE] presented the matter to the Senate, and had it referred to the Naval Committee; and it was placed in my charge because I was supposed to know something about it. From 1854 to 1856, this was regularly estimated for, and they were paid; but from 1856, up to this time, there has been no estimate and no appropriation for them. It is a standing law, but there has been an omission on the part of the officers that made the estimates. I have the law before me, and it is plain. In acts which have passed, or will pass at this session, the other clerks and messengers provided for in the act of 1854 have their appropriations made, while these are left out. The amendment is only to restore them to equal rights under the standing law.

Mr. HUNTER. Does this not propose to give them back pay? If it does, it comes within the rule.

Mr. BELL. It is not back pay. It is only from 1856. I will read the law, and I think my friend from Virginia will see that he ought not to object. The act of the 22d of April, 1854, provides:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the stamp and blank agent for the Post Office Department receive the same salary as clerks of the second class provided for in the first section of this act; and an addition of twenty per cent. is hereby added to the pay now authorized by law to each of the messengers, packers, laborers, and watchmen, of the different Executive Departments of the Government, in Washington; to the clerks employed at the navy-yard and marine barracks, at Washington," &c.

On the 6th of August, in the appropriation bill, there was a section including the messengers at the navy-yard. These two acts are those upon which this appropriation is asked. All the other persons included in the law have been regularly estimated for, and paid, not only before 1856, but subsequent to that time. If any discrimination can be made between the two classes by gentlemen, it goes beyond my power to do it; I have no such faculty. It was not denied on the two last applications made here. The Committee on Naval Affairs are unanimous in agreeing to the propriety of it. There is no difficulty, except that the matter has not been supposed to be well understood by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia make the question of order?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is impossible for the Chair to decide such a question. If the act which has been read is a continuing act, the amendment is in order; if it is an act which expired in that fiscal year, it is otherwise.

Mr. BELL. It is a permanent act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, under the circumstances, prefers to submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. Then we may as well take the question on the amendment. I withdraw the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASON. By instruction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I offer this amendment:

And be it further enacted, That when, in the absence of a secretary of legation at Constantinople, who discharges the duty of dragoman, or in like manner when there is no dragoman at that mission, the consul, or consul general, of the United States shall act as dragoman, he shall receive the compensation now provided by law for a dragoman, and for such time as he shall act as such.

The condition of things to which the amendment looks is this: the mission at Constantinople consists of a minister resident, a secretary of legation, and a dragoman, the dragoman being the interpreter; it is necessary that the dragoman should understand not only the Turkish language, but the Italian certainly, and if practicable the French language, as well as his own. Heretofore we had at Constantinople, a gentleman named Brown, who was thus accomplished. He was the dragoman, and acted as such for a series of years. Recently, probably some twelve months ago, Mr. Brown was appointed consul general, and since then there has not been at that mission either a secretary of legation or a dragoman—no dragoman, because they cannot find a competent man; and a secretary of legation, it appears, was not appointed, from the desire to combine the two offices, as the law had provided; and thus for some time, I know, while the last minister was there, as at present, there was neither secretary of legation nor dragoman. The existing law provides that when the secretary of legation discharges the duties of dragoman, he shall receive the compensation of dragoman as well as his own. The compensation of dragoman is $1,000. It has thus resulted that the consul general, Brown, the former dragoman, has been, from necessity, discharging the duties of dragoman, and the law does not authorize him to receive the compensation of dragoman, which is but $1,000. I have a letter from the present minister there, Mr. Williams, who states these facts. They were known to me from correspondence with the former minister and with Mr. Brown. The effect of the amendment only is to authorize the consul general, when he acts as dragoman, to receive the compensation now provided for the dragoman; as the law does provide that, if these duties were discharged by the secretary, the secretary should receive the compensation. There is no appropriation of course, but the amendment directs the application of an existing salary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know that I have any sort of opposition to this amendment, but I wish to understand it. I happened to be looking over a list of these officers the other day, and I found that Mr. Brown, at Constantinople held four offices, for all of which he was paid, making the whole pay he received, $6,000.

Mr. MASON. Can you enumerate them?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot; but I think one was consul, another dragoman, another commissioner, or something of that sort, and another dragoman to the commissioner; he was his own dragoman in both cases, and received $6,000, according to that list. It is a little list I saw in the hand of one of the Representatives, giving an account of our ministers and consuls, and what they received. These four offices at Constantinople were put down to Mr. Brown, who was his own interpreter in two different offices; and for being his own interpreter in those two different offices, received two separate salaries, making $6,000 in the whole. I should like to have an explanation of what this amendment is calculated to effect.

Mr. MASON. I do not know to what the Senator refers, but I do know that the only office held by Mr. Brown at Constantinople is the office of consul general. The law provides for the office of dragoman and for the office of secretary of legation; and the law further provides, that when the secretary of legation discharges the duties of dragoman, he shall receive the same compensation that the dragoman would receive if he were an independent officer; but, as I have said, there being no dragoman, and there being no secretary of legation, Mr. Brown, who was formerly dragoman, and who is now the consul general, has been discharging the duties of dragoman. I am not aware of what compensation has been made to him. I learned, by a conversation recently with the Secretary of State, that Mr. Brown had, in fact, discharged the duties of dragoman from the necessity of the case. A letter from the present minister, Mr. Williams, who recently arrived there, states that he found the mission without a dragoman; and found that Mr. Brown had been discharging the duties of that office for his predecessor; and, at his request, Mr. Brown continued to discharge them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator that I looked over the list carefully, and I was struck by the appearance of it. I cannot say that it was an official paper, but it was a printed paper in which I saw all these offices drawn out. Where it came from, I do not know; and I will not undertake to vouch for it. I should, of course, take the statements of the Senator from Virginia, from his sources of information, as much more entitled to confidence.

Mr. MASON. I think I can explain the matter. I was going on to state that the Secretary of State, in conversation the other day, speaking of this state of things, said it seemed to be right—it certainly was just—that Mr. Brown, who discharged the duties of dragoman, should receive the compensation provided by law for the dragoman; but, according to my recollection, said it had not yet been determined by the accounting officers, or by the proper authorities, whether it was competent to give it to him without a provision of law. What has been done in the premises, I do not know.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would ask, what is the necessity of an interpreter to a gentleman who is perfectly competent to interpret for himself? The only reason for having an interpreter connected with the mission, I suppose, is because he is needed on account of the individual who performs the service of minister. Now the minister is perfectly competent; and why should we pay him a salary as minister and consul, and also pay him for interpreting his own communications, whatever they may be?

Mr. MASON. The criticism of the Senator would be perfectly just if Brown were the minister.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is so stated in that paper.

Mr. MASON. I do not know anything about the paper; but I say again, the only office held by Mr. Brown is that of consul general. The minister is Mr. Williams. If it should happen, and doubtless it would happen, that Mr. Brown would be obliged to avail himself of his attainments in the Turkish language in the discharge of his office as consul general, of course he is not to be compensated for that. That is very true. But if, in addition to the office of consul general, he discharges the office of dragoman to the minister, the amendment I propose merely says that he shall then stand in the same relation to the compensation of the dragoman that the secretary of legation would have stood if there was any secretary of legation. The effect of it will be that he will receive the compensation of dragoman in the absence of a secretary of legation who is competent to discharge the duties of dragoman, or in the absence of a dragoman, when there is a secretary of legation who is not competent to discharge them. It will direct only the application of the compensation of dragoman when there is no such officer there to discharge the duties.

Mr. KING. I think there is objection to this provision on another ground. The distribution of these offices into the hands of different persons, furnishes to our citizens abroad, and to our interests there, the opportunity of more than one person to look after them; and I know that in the case of this Mr. Brown, complaint has existed. It comes under my own observation from an extensive ship-builder in Brooklyn, who went out to Constantinople to construct vessels for the Sultan, and who complained that his interests were not properly attended to by our representatives abroad, and who obtained from the Department a letter in relation to them, which has gone out. I speak of it incidentally in this matter. His statement was that Mr. Brown, who understands the Turkish language, is the principal man there; and, as interpreter, has the chief management of our affairs there, with our present minister, as well as all others. I think that the provision of law which distributes these officers, had better be carried out universally, rather than heap the discharge of all their duties on a single individual, and give him the salary of all. I should oppose it on that ground also. I know nothing specially of Mr. Brown except in this particular instance; but if there is a provision for a dragoman, I should prefer that a dragoman should be appointed.

Mr. MASON. The amendment does not in the slightest degree interfere with the existing law. The existing law provides for the appointment of a dragoman at $1,000. Mr. Brown filled that office until he was appointed consul general. The office is now vacant; but if the honorable Senator can find any man who is competent to fill that office from his attainments in the eastern languages, and has other qualifications, and which belongs to the right political complexion, doubtless he would not only receive the appointment, but the Administration would be very glad to have him. But the amendment provides that in the absence of such an officer, the officer who discharges the duties shall receive the compensation. It is but $1,000. As to what the Senator may have heard of complaints of Mr. Brown, I know very well that Senator would prefer no complaint unless he knew it to be properly founded. Of the particular instance I know nothing, nor have I the good fortune of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Brown; but I do know, that not only has he had the confidence of the Department of State in the successive administration of that Department for years past, but of all our ministers who have been there, three or four in number, within the last eight or ten years, and in every instance where Mr. Brown has been brought into personal or official communication with any individual or official personage of our Government, they have spoken of him always in terms of respect and confidence, and of his zeal, ability, and diligence in the discharge of his office. That is the character he bears.

Mr. KING. The case I refer to is that of a Mr. John Reese, a stranger to me, but who sent a communication here, stating that while at Constantinople he was unable to procure a proper understanding of his claim, as he alleged, owing to some prejudices or difficulties existing between him and Mr. Brown. I have no disposition to make any general complaint, or any charge against Mr. Brown, for I do not know him or anything about him, except in this case. I take it this proposition originates in the idea of having Mr. Brown discharge all these duties; and if he obtains the salary, whatever of influence he or his friends have will be exerted to prevent the appointment of another person. Although I have no person to recommend, I have no doubt one can be found. The reasons which I have suggested are those which will influence me to vote against conferring all these offices, with their salaries, on one individual.

The question being put, the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. MASON. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I call for a division.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. As was very natural, I saw that the attention of the Senate was not directed to this matter; and I have to say, in a single word, that the effect of the amendment is only to allow the consul general to receive the $1,000 a year provided for the dragoman, when he acts as dragoman or interpreter to the mission—the existing law providing that when the secretary of legation discharges the duty he shall receive it, and the facts being that there is no secretary of legation and no dragoman there. That is the whole case.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 33, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clay, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hammond, Harlan, Hayne, Hunter, Iverson, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Folger, Pugh, Seward, Simmons, Sill, Stuart, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, and Wright—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Cingman, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Hale, Houston, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Reid, Sebastian, Trumbull, and Yuice—13.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to offer an amendment, in the form of an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That $54,037 be appropriated for completing the improvement of the channel over the St. Clair flats, in the State of Michigan.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any estimate or recommendation of a committee for that?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; I hold in my hand the estimate of the Department.

Mr. HUNTER. Recommending it, or merely saying what the cost would be?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is an estimate by the Department of the cost of the work, and comes within the rule.

Mr. HUNTER. I submit to the Chair whether that sort of estimate brings it within the rule?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state very briefly the necessities of this case. I have the ordinary estimates of the Department in the usual form. Perhaps it will be better to have the point of order decided before speaking on the merits of the question.

Mr. POLK. There was an estimate, if I am not mistaken, for another matter that was voted down as an ordinary estimate. If that is the kind of estimate that is contemplated by the rule, I take it there have been cases in which decisions have ruled particular appropriations out of order when there has been such an estimate as that. I do not make that as an objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan; but I only wish that the rules shall be administered so that everybody shall have the benefit of them, or everybody stand subject to the disadvantages of them.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to make this suggestion: this amendment is not moved from any committee of the Senate, either standing or select; on the contrary, one of the standing committees of the Senate reported against that appropriation. It is not moved "in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments," because I venture to say that when you come to examine the estimate, it will be found that it has been made in reply to a call by a resolution of the Senate, and it has been made by the chief of the topographical bureau, and not by the head of a Department; and hence it does not come either within the letter or the spirit of this rule. Of course it was intended by the rule that the estimate should come from one of the Cabinet officers, with his recommendation. This does not come from the Secretary of War, nor does it come with his recommendation. It is an estimate made by the topographical engineer who has that work in charge, and is transmitted in compliance with a request of the Senate, by the Secretary of War, as the estimate of the topographical engineer.

Mr. CHANDLER. This estimate comes in the usual form on an application to the Secretary of War for this specific information. He sends me a letter in his own handwriting, and accompanies his letter with the report of the bureau. It is in the ordinary, usual form of all communications from the Secretary of War; and I submit to the Senate that this amendment is strictly within the rule. The estimate is in the usual form, according to the invariable method of communicating information from the Secretary of War to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send the papers to the Chair?

Mr. SEWARD. Let them be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, March 1, 1858.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 16th ultimo, I have the honor, herewith, to transmit a report of the colonel of the corps of topographical engineers, inclosing copies of communications respecting the cost of completing the channel over the St. Clair flats and St. Mary's river, in the State of Michigan, together with maps of the same.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

Hon. Z. CHANDLER, Senate.

BUREAU OF TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEERS,
WASHINGTON, February 26, 1858.

SIR: In reply to the letter of the Hon. Z. CHANDLER, of the 16th instant, asking for "estimates of the cost of completing the channel over the St. Clair flats and the St. Mary's river, in the State of Michigan, likewise a map of each work," I have the honor of transmitting herewith, copies of communications from Captain A. W. Whipple, corps of topographical engineers, dated 18th and 20th January, from which it will be seen that recent examinations of these works, and an amendment necessarily made in the contract for dredging St. Mary's river, a considerable change in the estimates for the completion of these works is made necessary.

According to the estimate given in Captain Whipple's annual report, the amount required to complete the improvement of St. Mary's river was $15,461 53

According to his modified estimate, submitted in his letter of 20th January, the amount would be 148,681 53

Showing an increase over the former estimate of $33,220 00

The amount of Captain Whipple's estimate for completing the excavation of a channel through the St. Clair flats, as given in his annual report, was $23,421 00

As will be seen from his letter of the 18th January, his first estimate contemplated a depth of twelve feet, and he now suggests an increased depth of two feet; making the whole cut fourteen feet deep, instead of twelve feet; the cost of which he estimates at 30,616 00

Which, added to the sum specified in his annual report, would make the amount required to complete the proposed cut $54,037 00

Copies of the maps of St. Mary's river and St. Clair flats are transmitted herewith.

Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

J. C. WOODRUFF,

Captain Topographical Engineers, Assistant in charge.

Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand the question to be whether an estimate from the head of a Department justifies this amendment. Is that the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is whether the amendment is admissible under the 30th rule of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. The point is that it is admissible, because it is an estimate from the head of a Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the ground taken.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose that must be the ground, as it cannot come under any other. Then the question is whether that is an estimate from the head of a Department. I say it is not. The chief of a bureau is not the head of a Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the head of a Department adopts the recommendation of the chief of a bureau, does not that make it an estimate of the head of the Department?

Mr. DAVIS. I have known exactly such statements to be made in regard to another head of a Department, here frequently, and with as little truth. When the Senate, by a resolution, or a committee, call on the head of a Department for an estimate, it is usually furnished to them. In this case, I understand this estimate to have been sent back in answer to a resolution. The compliance with the resolution was an obligation on the head of the Department; but the estimate made by the chief of the bureau is not the estimate of the head of the Department; neither is the publication, in the annual report of the Secretary of War, of any estimates made by the head of a bureau, an estimate from the Department. It is made in compliance with a resolution which directs it—a resolution of the Senate—which requires all correspondence, all reports and estimates, in relation to works of internal improvement, that had been projected at the time the resolution was introduced, to be sent to the Senate, with a statement of all expenditures accruing from appropriations then existing. These are the reports, estimates, and correspondence, sent here annually, to an amount exceeding what it can be profitable to any one to read—sent, not because the head of the Department desires to send them, but because a resolution of the Senate has commanded him to do so. Here I understand the answer to be in reply to a special resolution; and the estimates which are made by the officer in charge of the work, and sent to the head of the bureau, are furnished when called for. It is information which is there deposited, and subject to be called for. The head of a Department has no option, and therefore no responsibility for transmitting it.

If there be any reason in the rule, it must be that, in order to bring amendments under the operation of the provision, they shall be confined to those subjects which had been recommended by the head of a Department. He having charge of the operations of a particular branch of the Government, and knowing what that branch of the Government requires, calls upon Congress to make an appropriation, and sends an estimate. If there be any reason in the rule, that must be the meaning of it; and as this amendment comes under no other provision of the rule, and rests entirely on the question of whether it be an estimate from the head of a Department, I have nothing further to say in relation to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question raised by the Senator from Virginia, is whether this amendment is admissible under the 30th rule, it being claimed to be in pursuance of an estimate from the Department. The question being disputed whether it is an estimate from the Department or not, the Chair will not decide it, but will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. SEWARD. Read the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 30th rule is:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments."

Mr. SEWARD. Let me say that it is not a recommendation that is required by the rule, but it is an estimate and nothing more nor less than an estimate; and this is an estimate in the same sense and with the same effect, and precisely the same form which has always been accepted by the Senate, as a compliance with the rule heretofore. The practice of the Senate under the rule, is the illustration of the sense of the rule of the Senate. We have uniformly received estimates in that form as complying with the rule. It may be that the rule ought to be altered, and that the recommendation or formal adoption of an estimate by the head of a Department ought to be required; but standing, as the rule does, according to the practice heretofore, I think the amendment is receivable under the rule.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to ask the Senator from New York, before he closes, whether he considers that the fact that the Secretary of War covers an estimate made by somebody else, and sends it here in answer to a resolution of the Senate, makes it an estimate by the Secretary of War?

Mr. SEWARD. I answer the honorable Senator—I do, if he does not dissent from it in transmitting it to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator, still further, if it be a simple inquiry as to the estimate for a work, and the Secretary sends the estimate of the local engineer, whether it is proper for him to send with it his dissent to the application of money for that purpose?

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator will excuse me. I have never held an administrative trust, and I presume I never shall.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator, however, has held a place in the Senate; and when he sends an inquiry from the Senate to an executive officer, I ask him what would he think of that executive officer if he interposed his opinion as to the propriety of the Senate acting on it?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is usual to employ a clerk to copy the estimates. It is an estimate, and as much an estimate as was ever submitted to the Senate from the head of a Department.

Mr. DAVIS. I am waiting.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not propose to discuss this question of order. The case is so clear that I am willing to submit it either to the Chair or to a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor, unless he yields it.

Mr. DAVIS. I wanted him to get through; I wanted to hear what he had to say. I asked the Senator from New York a question; I believe he can answer it.

Mr. SEWARD. What is the question the honorable Senator puts to me?

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from New York says he has never held an executive trust; but he has held a place in the Senate, and I ask him whether, when the Senate sends an inquiry directly to an executive officer to report an estimate for a work, knowing that an estimate has been made by a local engineer employed on it, and that executive officer sends it back, he expects the executive officer to inform the Senate as to the propriety of appropriating the money or not?

Mr. SEWARD. I do not see that the question is relevant to the present purpose; I will answer, however, that on the precise case which the honorable Senator makes, I should not regard that as an estimate by the Department. That is, I understand him to say, it is the estimate of a local engineer; and the Senate, when the application is made, knows that the estimate has been made by that local engineer; and the Secretary understands that he is called upon to transmit that as a matter of information. That is quite a different thing from the estimate as I understand it here when the Department is called upon, not for a paper in its possession, but for an estimate for a specific work of improvement. If I stated that I never had held an executive trust, I beg to correct myself, so far as to say that what I meant was, that I never held an administrative one.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator states, with some circumlocution, exactly the case which he has said is the practice of the Senate. They call on the Secretary to report an estimate. They know very well that the Secretary has no estimate to make himself. They know full well, when they pass the resolution, that the only reply the Secretary can make will be the statement of the engineer in charge of the work, and that the resolution is necessarily sent to the bureau where the estimates of all the engineers in charge of specific works are aggregated in one place and deposited; and that this local engineer, having sent his estimate for the ensuing year to the bureau of topographical engineers, it is copied and sent over to the War Office to be transmitted in answer to the resolution of the Senate. The Senate knew that when the various resolutions were passed from year to year, and which, from year to year, have been represented just in the terms he represents them now, and on which he rests his claim to a practice of the Senate, knowing, when the resolution was passed, and when the answer was received, that if they had given the Secretary an opportunity to say whether he adopted the estimate or not, whether he recommended the work or not, they would obtain from him a response that would not answer the purpose of those who usually move in such matters.

Mr. SEWARD. I think the honorable Senator from Mississippi misapprehends altogether the rule of the Senate which we are discussing. It is not a recommendation or a sanction that is wanted. All that the rule requires is an estimate from a Department, and that is complied with. What I said was, that that is the construction of the rule which has hitherto prevailed. It may be wrong; it may be right to reverse that practice; but the practice which has obtained here is such as I have stated.

Mr. DAVIS. Perhaps I was unfortunate in my language, but the Senator does not seem to comprehend me. I tell him that the Secretary of War no more makes the estimate than the chief of the bureau does; that neither of them makes it; that the local engineer makes it, and the papers show the fact.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was about to call the attention of the Senate to the distinction which the Senator from New York has drawn. The difficulty in this case arises out of the construction of the language of the rule. If the rule requires what the Senator from Mississippi supposes, then, clearly, this amendment is out of order; but the rule does not require what the Senator from Mississippi supposes, according to one reading of it; according to its language it does not. The question here is not whether the Secretary approves of this expenditure of money. The question is, is this an estimate from the Department? Now, we call on one of the Departments to know what the expense of erecting a custom house at Buffalo is. The Department sends in an estimate, made by a local engineer at Buffalo. Is not that an estimate from the Department?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly it is; but not from the head of the Department. The language of the rule is, the head of a Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is not that an estimate coming from the head of a Department, I will ask them?

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I apprehend that it is an estimate from the head of a Department. It is received through him.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We do not suppose that the head of a Department in any instance goes to any of these places. Take, for example, the fortifications at New York which the Secretary of War may be in favor of improving. Suppose that he is in favor of expending one or two hundred thousand dollars upon a fortification at the city of New York, the Secretary of War will not himself make up that estimate, but he will direct the proper officers to estimate what is necessary to be done, and what it will cost. They will submit an estimate in detail; and when the Department is called upon to know what amount of money would be necessary to put that particular work in repair, he will send to the Senate this estimate made up by the proper officer. That I understand to be the estimate of the head of a Department; and if that is what the rule means, then clearly this amendment is in order. It need not be indorsed by the Secretary.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will not argue with me on a question on which we do not differ. The Secretary may make an estimate his own, and rely upon some one else as authority; as for instance, he may, by the examination of an engineer, learn the cost of a work, adopt the report of the engineer, adopt the estimate and recommend the work, and then it becomes an estimate which he submits; it is his estimate; but not when he answers you and sends you papers which contain the estimate merely.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is exactly what I would understand the Secretary as doing. Whenever he sends an estimate, made by his subordinate, in answer to an inquiry, he adopts that estimate as the estimate of the Department, not recommending the expenditure of the money at all; but still, if the work is to be constructed, he estimates that as the amount it would cost. That is all the Secretary does. He gives no opinion about the propriety of deepening the St. Clair flats; but if the St. Clair flats are to be deepened, and Congress wants to know how much it will cost to do it, then he sends in the report of the local officer showing the amount; and I suppose, unless he dissents in the communication from the correctness of the estimate, that is an estimate from the head of the Department; but I would by no means hold that the head of the Department had recommended that work to be done, or concurred in its policy. He may be opposed to the whole of it; and we all very well know that the Senator from Mississippi, when at the head of the War Department, was opposed to many of the internal improvements directed by Congress. That was well understood; but I did not understand that the Secretary of War, at that time, meant to be understood as saying that the estimates for the works were not proper; that is, that they would not cost the sum estimated, in case Congress went on to do the work. He gave us that information not approving of any such work. I do not understand, now, that the Secretary of War recommends the deepening of the St. Clair flats, or recommends this particular appropriation; but I do understand that the Secretary of War has estimated what it will cost to do it—that is all; and if that is all the rule requires, then, clearly, the amendment is within the rule. Now, let us look at the rule to see what it does require:

“No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill proposing additional appropriations, unless”

Then follow some exceptions, one of which is:—“in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments.”

If it is in pursuance of an estimate from the head of one of the Departments, it is in order; but if to be in pursuance of an estimate from a Department requires an indorsement of the head of the Department, then most clearly it is not in order.

Mr. DAVIS. I have but a word to say in answer to the last remarks of the Senator from Illinois. He says it is in pursuance of the estimate of the head of a Department, if the head of a Department has been the channel through which the estimate is transmitted—that is the amount of it. If I understand any meaning in the language employed—“in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some of the Departments”—must imply that the head of a Department asks for the execution of a work, and states the sum it would cost, not merely that he has been the channel through which the estimate is transmitted. As well might it be said, when the letter came through the post office, that the Postmaster General was the head of a Department, and that it was from him because it was transmitted through the Post Office Department. It is the mere channel of correspondence, the mode being provided as well how you should call for information as how the information should be sent. You cannot call on the bureau for the information; you cannot call on the local engineer for the information; or if you did, he would not send it. The channel of correspondence requires that it should pass through the War Office; and thus the Secretary of War becomes the channel for the transmission of the answer, and that is his whole connection with it.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to appeal to gentlemen on the other side not to offer such amendments as this—debatable, disputed matters; disputed even with regard to their constitutional propriety—on an appropriation bill which is merely designed to carry out existing laws, and to enable the Government to execute its ordinary machinery. Surely such subjects ought to be kept for separate bills. If gentlemen have a majority for this proposition, let them pass it in the shape of a separate bill, but not put it on an appropriation bill in order to force gentlemen who are willing to provide the means to carry on the Government, to vote against their own appropriation bill. Certainly that cannot be proper or fair. I submit to gentlemen it cannot be right to put such matter as that on an appropriation bill. If they have a majority, let them pass their bills separately, but not place them on this bill, and thus force many of us to vote against the bill itself. You thus disable the Government from getting along; you place it in a position in which the subject-matter of the bill becomes so complicated that it cannot command a majority. Why, sir, if you would leave the bill where it was designed to stand, applying only to the mere proper subjects of appropriation, those that are necessary for carrying on the Government, we might always be able to pass the proper appropriation bills.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I do not feel much interest in this point of order as to the relevancy of the amendment now before us, but I desire to make an appeal to those gentlemen on the other side of the House with whom I have acted, as well as to those with whom I act on this side, upon the subject of internal improvements by the General Government.

A portion of those gentlemen with whom I have acted heretofore are now putting the whole question in an attitude that is exceedingly unpleasant; and I wish to appeal to the friends of the various internal improvement measures not to attempt to put them upon a general appropriation bill. Such a course is intrinsically wrong. I have always, it is well known on every side, against the will of many of my Democratic associates, voted for these measures of internal improvement. Now, however, I am called upon by those who are more anxious in reference to these matters than I am, to violate one of the very first and one of the most sacred principles of action here by putting the whole of our internal improvement bills upon a regular appropriation bill. If this is commenced, I know to what point it may lead: it may go to the size that our internal improvement appropriation bills have hitherto gone, and may appropriate $6,000,000. The whole movement is unusual; it is extraordinary; it is dangerous; it is in no respect safe, just, or fair, whether for the measure itself or for the general interests of the Government.

I am a friend to this class of measures, as I have proved by my votes. Why is it that those with whom I have acted will force me and a number of others, who have hitherto favored these measures, and yet concur with me, into a false position, by the urging of these propositions on a general appropriation bill? For one, I must say that I will not vote for them upon a general appropriation bill. Some Senators on the other side, I know, concur with me in this; others upon this side do; and the result will be, that measures which are favorites on their own merits will be voted down by putting them in a false position. We gain nothing by this process. It is not in accordance with any safe rule of legislation; it is entirely wrong, and it puts those who cannot consent to it in a false position, and may drive them to an extent that we cannot now foresee. I hope that the few who are leading in this movement will reflect. The question of these internal improvements is before the Senate already in another form. I hope they will reflect, and not destroy the consistency of gentlemen on this point. Leave the measure to general legislation in accordance with the usual custom hitherto, and do not now start a new system that must result in conflicts between this House and the other and perhaps in the loss of appropriation bills, which would be seriously detrimental to the public interests and drive many of the very best friends of these measures from their support altogether. I cannot, for one, consistently, with my belief, vote to place these measures on the general appropriation bills; although bills are now reported here in favor of my own State, I cannot regard it as honest legislation to do so, and I hope it will not be insisted upon.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to know whether this appropriation, which is proposed by the honorable member from Michigan, comes from a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it does not.

Mr. BAYARD. If it does not come from a committee, I ask, further, the question, whether any resolution has passed the Senate authorizing such an appropriation?

Mr. CLAY. No.

Mr. BAYARD. Then, if the question of order has not been raised for the decision of the Chair, I must raise it. Without at all promulgating any opinions on the subject of internal improvements—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a question pending on the admissibility of the amendment, and the Chair has submitted that question to the Senate, because it is disputed whether the papers presented here are estimates from the head of a Department or not.

Mr. BAYARD. The question, then, is submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is: "Shall the amendment be received?"

Mr. BAYARD. I am sorry the Chair did not decide it, because our decision this morning seems to me to cover it. I shall not take this occasion to promulgate my opinions on the subject of internal improvements; I am willing they should rest upon my votes in other cases; but it is very evident to me that if we attempt to ingraft, on a general appropriation bill for other purposes, a system of internal improvements, it will lead to interminable confusion. It is literally out of order altogether; and not only is it out of order, but it is impracticable legislation. If an honorable Senator from one State can move an appropriation which he considers desirable as connected with his State, and which may be of importance to the country at large, and the Senate ingraft it on a bill of this kind, of course other Senators will feel it necessary, where improvements exist in their own States which also may be important to the country at large, to include them, and we shall thus really be considering questions which are alien to the bill. The whole proceeding is irregular in itself. If I understand the decision of the Senate this morning in a different aspect on another amendment, this amendment is clearly out of order. No vote of the Senate has recognized, at this session, the propriety of the appropriation; no committee has proposed the appropriation. Then, by the express terms of the rule, it is not in order to propose it as an amendment to a general appropriation bill. This is a general appropriation bill; and therefore I think the amendment is entirely out of order. Without reference, therefore, to whether I would vote for it or against it, as a separate measure, (for I do not think it necessary to disclaim as to what would be my vote when it comes appropriately before us,) I hold myself bound to adhere to something like order in the business of the Senate. I shall vote against any and all amendments of this kind, desirous as I might be to move an amendment of a similar kind, which in some measure connects it with my own State, but which I should consider I had no right to move as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. BROWN. The question before the Senate, as I understand it, is, whether we shall receive this amendment? Well, sir, I must say, with perfect deference to the judgment of my colleague and other gentlemen who have spoken to the Senate, that I shall vote to receive it, because I believe it is in order. I shall vote against the amendment when it is once received: that is altogether a different question. The language of the rule is that the amendment must be in pursuance of an estimate from the head of a Department. I take it that if a resolution passes the Senate calling for an estimate, and it is sent in, it is as much an estimate as though it was sent in by the head of a Department without the call. The rule is not that it shall be in pursuance of a recommendation by the head of a Department, or that he shall, in any manner, commit himself for or against the proposed improvement. You do not ask his opinion as to whether the work ought to be made, or ought not to be made. What you want of him is to tell you how much it will cost: whether it will cost so many thousand dollars, or so many more thousand, that you may exercise a judgment as to whether the work will be worth the cost of it, you reserving to yourselves the right to judge as to whether the work ought to be done or not, on the estimated cost sent to you; and therefore the head of a Department is not called upon, it would be impertinent—I use the term in no offensive sense—to volunteer an opinion as to whether the work ought to be made or not. You do not ask him for an opinion; you simply ask him to tell you how much it would cost; you determining for yourselves whether you will or will not make the improvement. Why do you ask? If it cost half a million dollars to deepen the St. Clair flats, the Senate might refuse; if it only cost $50,000, the Senate might then adopt it. What you want to know is simply how much money it will take to do the work, and that is all the Secretary is called upon to furnish you. He does not furnish you any estimate made by himself individually. He can make none. How can the Secretary of War know what it would cost, personally? He must rely upon the judgment of engineers, persons schooled in the art of surveying, who make an examination and send him their reports; and, relying on their science and their skill, he adopts their estimate as his own, and sends it to you. That is all he can do; that is all the nature of the case admits of; but he does not recommend you to apply the money; he does not say you ought to apply it; he does not say anything about that; he has no business to say anything about it.

Thus understanding the case, I think the proposed amendment comes within the rule. It is an estimate, as I understand it; for this is information sent here in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, that it is sent through the head of a Department; not that he says "this is my estimate," but he sends it in, in obedience to your resolution. Half the information you call for through the President we all know comes from the Departments and bureaus; you do not expect the President to know anything about it personally; but he sends it through the Departments; but it is his act when he sends it here, and he simply sends the facts without comment on them one way or the other. Thus regarding the case, I shall vote to receive the amendment; and then when it is once received I shall vote against it on its merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate receive this amendment?

Mr. PUGH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. With the consent of the Senate, I will withdraw the point of order, and take the question on the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I think, under the rule, after I have looked at the question about estimates, that if there has been an estimate from the Department, the amendment is not objectionable to a point of order. It is simply a question of the incongruity of the amendment, and the impropriety of it.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw the question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment itself. On that the Chair understands the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I merely wish to occupy about three minutes of the time of the Senate. I hold in my hand, as I said before, the estimate of the Secretary of War for the amount it will cost to complete this improvement of the channel over the St. Clair flats. The Committee on Commerce have reported a bill granting about one half, in other words, the sum of $23,421, to protect the channel over the St. Clair flats. The estimates from the War Department show that $54,037 will complete the channel.

I have here a map of the St. Clair flats; and if Senators will look at it, they will perceive that a channel is being excavated from this point to this, a distance of four thousand one hundred and seventy-five feet in a straight line. At present vessels have to make a circuit of seven miles, and have to box the compass almost, to take every wind that blows, to get around that channel. I ask that this amount, as estimated by the Secretary of War, may be appropriated on the bill, and I will tell you why. I hold in my hand letters of recent date, from the engineer who has charge of the work, Captain Whipple, one of the ablest engineers in the Army, from which I will read a few brief extracts. He says:

"DETROIT, April 19, 1858.
"MY DEAR SIR: The work upon the St. Clair flats has been recommenced, and I am happy to inform you that my examinations prove that the cut made last year remains constant. It has not filled up, as many predicted."

"Three dredges and one tug are now at work widening the cut. I expect another dredge and another tug from Buffalo for this work in a few days. With these four dredges and two steam-tugs, the remainder of the last appropriation will soon be used up; therefore, I have considerable anxiety in relation to the addition for which Congress has been asked. Upon the fate of that bill depends the question of success. Give me the amount of my estimate, and I have no doubt of being able to obtain an excellent channel through the flats."

Under date of May 3, he writes:

"I regret that the importance of an appropriation for St. Clair flats fails to be appreciated in Congress. The contractor has now four dredging machines and two steam-tugs at work, so as to complete the channel this season, if Congress will grant the means. Fifty thousand now would do more good than twice that sum next year, I believe."

The amount asked to complete the channel is only $54,037. The Senate will bear witness that I have persistently, perseveringly sought to pass a separate bill for this improvement from the opening of the session. Nearly four months ago, I introduced a bill and sent it to the Committee on Commerce. I applied at the office of the Secretary of War for the estimates, maps, and all the information requisite, and submitted the papers to the Committee on Commerce. They slept in their hands for more than three months. Since then, I have been using my best efforts to get a bill before the Senate, believing they would pass it. There is no hope, in my estimation, of passing the measure at this time when it is so much needed, unless we can introduce it upon this appropriation bill. The question of order is withdrawn, and I believe it is just as much in place, and far more important in this bill, than any other appropriation in it. I will not occupy the time of the Senate, but I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment as a part of this bill at once.

Mr. PUGH. I am loath to disagree to the appeal made by the Senator from Virginia, the Senator from Arkansas, and others; but I do not think, in justice to the people whom I have the honor in part to represent, that this amendment, and other amendments which I shall hereafter propose, ought to be withdrawn. If I believed, as some of those Senators do, that those appropriations were unconstitutional, I would not vote for them on any bill anywhere, but I believe they are as legitimate as any appropriations in this bill, and that this is the place where they ought to be, and ought to be every year. What is this bill for? The first item is "survey of the coast;" and under that I find "for continuing the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coast," so many hundred thousand dollars; "for continuing the survey of the western coast," so many hundred thousand dollars; "for continuing the survey of the Florida reefs and bays, and running a line to connect the triangulation on the Atlantic coast with that of the Gulf of Mexico, across the Florida peninsula;" and so on a whole chapter. Then there is a chapter on the light-house establishment, and then we come to the survey of the public lands, and then here are some other items:

"For compensation of two superintendents for life-saving stations on the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey, $3,000.

"For compensation of fifty-four keepers of stations, at $200 each, $10,800.

"For contingencies of life-saving apparatus on the coast of the United States, $12,000."

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1st Session.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 162.

How much have you expended for the protection of life on lake Erie? That is unconstitutional! It is very constitutional on the coast of New Jersey. It is the general appropriation bill, it is the regular appropriation bill, it is the orderly appropriation bill to give money to save life on the coast of New Jersey, but it is very unconstitutional to do it on the coast of Ohio, or Michigan, or Wisconsin. The whole bill is full of cases. If you put them on the ground of public works, look at the appropriations of millions on millions to be spent in the District of Columbia. If it is not the business of the Government of the United States to protect the life and property concerned in the navigation of the lakes, those who think so ought to vote such a proposition down anywhere. Those who think otherwise ought to insist that the Government shall distribute its favors equally—no, not its favors, but shall discharge its duties equally. If it is the duty of the Government to do this, the Government neglects its duty. That is my reason for voting to put it on this bill, and I believe it belongs to this bill. I do not intend, because some of the Executive Departments choose to recommend some portions of the appropriations due from the Government and to leave out others, that therefore we shall be here as members of Congress merely to register their decrees. This, then, is a vital difference between some of those Senators who make this objection, and those who agree with me. They think the Government ought not to do it. I say if the Government ought not to do it, it ought not to be on any bill; but if it is the business of the Government to do it, if they have taken from us the means of doing it ourselves, if they have forbidden it to us and taken it into their own hands, then it is our duty, representing the people concerned, to insist that it shall go on the regular appropriation bill.

Senators tell me it will defeat the bill. I cannot help that; let it defeat the bill. If this Government cannot discharge its duty to the western country, let the bill fail. Such an event has no terrors for me. Am I to stand here and tax my constituents year after year, to wring from their wages, in order that you may build great public works in the District of Columbia, and all over the Union, and then to say: "Oh, this bill will fail if you offer to put on it that which the Government ought to do for your part of the Union?" Let it fail. Probably when one of these bills has failed, the executive officers of this Government will understand what the majority of the people's representatives intend to do.

Now, sir, I say again, this Government is as much bound to take care of these improvements, and take care of them every year, as she is to survey the Atlantic and Pacific coasts; and this miscellaneous bill which consists of items of this description, is the very place for these appropriations. I shall not only vote for the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, but I shall move to add to it the provision of the other bills, which the Committee on Commerce, upon the estimates reported, have shown us to be proper for the service of the next fiscal year. I send the amendment to the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. SIMMONS. Let us have one at a time.

Mr. PUGH. I think we had better have the whole dose at once.

The Secretary proceeded to read Mr. PUGH's amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I hardly think it is worth while to read the amendment; we know what it is.

Mr. PUGH. As the Senator from Michigan seems to think he can get along better by himself, I withdraw my proposition for the present; but I shall offer it if his prevails.

Mr. BAYARD. Regretted to hear the remarks of the honorable Senator from Ohio, because I am one of those who believe that sectional questions can be raised apart from the question of slavery. It is not the first time I have heard that honorable Senator endeavor to impress upon the mind of the Senate the idea that there was a disposition in the Atlantic States or the old States to refuse to the western States the same character of appropriations that they claim for themselves. I think his views are unjust. I can see nothing in this bill of a similar character to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan. There is not a work of construction attempted in the bill. Light-houses may exist in any part of the country, and I have heard no Senator contend that a light-house on the lakes was not just as competent to be appropriated for in this bill as a light-house on the Atlantic coast. But, sir, this, as every one understands, is not a bill for the improvement of rivers and the construction of harbors. The appropriations in this bill, be they contingent or miscellaneous or not, have no connection with a measure of that kind. A river and harbor bill is perfectly understood, and every member of the Senate understands whether an appropriation falls within a class that ought to be included in such a bill or not. My objection to this proposition is, that it is incongruous to the bill; that it is an attempt to weave into a bill of this kind, which is a general appropriation bill connected with what are conceded to be the proper duties of the Government, a system of improvements which many members of the Senate believe to be unconstitutional and improper; and which, others think, though it may be within the constitutional powers of the Government, ought to be restricted, and ought, at all events, to be the subject of separate consideration, in a separate bill. We have never yet, to my knowledge, attempted to tack on an appropriation bill of this kind a river and harbor bill—I care not whether it is for the protection or repair or extension of improvements. They are bills of a different character altogether; they do not connect themselves with this bill; they are incongruous to it; and though I might be disposed to vote for a river and harbor bill, whatever I might do as to any future works, I would vote for works already commenced, looking to the general importance of the works, and to the state of the Treasury, as my guide to determine the number and amount of appropriations. It seems to me utterly incompatible with the condition of the country, or any rule of order in the Senate, that an appropriation of that kind should be placed in this bill, because it makes coercive legislation. The honorable Senator from Ohio may deem it of no importance whether this bill should be rejected or not; he may think it would lead to a desirable result; that by arraying sectional influence you should defeat a bill which connects itself with the general interests of the country. He it so—

Mr. PUGH. Where did the Senator get the idea of a sectional question? The charge was made that it was incongruous to this bill, and I was replying to that.

Mr. BAYARD. I spoke only from the Senator's own language. He named no one, but he appealed generally that an appropriation was constitutional if it was made for the Atlantic seaboard, and it was not constitutional if it was made for the lakes. That is what the honorable Senator announced. What does that mean? We all understand it. Sir, in my feelings, I never ask myself the question where an improvement is located, or where an expenditure is to be made, provided it is to be made in the United States. I do not desire to see any such feeling exist in the Senate. I would just as cheerfully vote for an improvement in the State of Michigan, or in the State of Ohio, as for one within the borders of my own State. But the question which must always arise is, whether the matter is appropriate to the particular bill before the Senate, and whether the general interests of the country require the particular appropriation, if it is proper and congruous with the bill. I regret whenever I hear Senators pressing a measure on a ground which is calculated to rally a sectional influence for the purpose of carrying it. Whenever it becomes the doctrine in the United States that the different sections of the country can rally for the purpose of carrying measures without regard to the propriety of those measures otherwise, you may bid farewell to the harmony of the Union. I am perfectly aware, and every one must see that, in a few years, the power of this country, at least in the representative branch, must pass to the great West. My hope is that, in the exercise of that power, she will exhibit the same adherence to the Federal Constitution and regard to the rights of the whole Union, that has hitherto characterized the course of the Atlantic States.

Mr. WADE. I am sorry to detain the Senate, at this period of the session, and I shall not do so for more than a very few minutes. I agree in everything my colleague has suggested on this subject. I think the argument he has made in favor of the proposition before the Senate, has not been and cannot be answered. If these improvements are to be made, I know of no place more proper for the appropriations for them than this bill. This is the miscellaneous appropriation bill; it contains a great many provisions of a general nature that do not differ in principle, so far as I can see, from the one under consideration. The provisions made for surveying the coast I understand to be upon the same principle precisely as the improvement of harbors on the lakes, or the rivers of the country. It is in furtherance of the commerce and navigation of the country. There are a great many provisions in this miscellaneous bill of a kindred character. I know it would be better to have them all in a bill by themselves, as they commonly have been; and I was anxious that the bills reported some time ago by the Committee on Commerce should have been passed; but it was intimated, in language that could not be misunderstood, by the chairman of that committee, that those bills would not be suffered to pass at this stage of the session. If I construed his declaration aright, it was that they would be argued down if they were placed in a bill by themselves. When an intimation of that kind was given, it seemed to drive us to the necessity of putting them upon some appropriation bill; and it is not incongruous, for I say again, there are many provisions of this bill that are in principle precisely like the amendment.

There are some, undoubtedly, who believe that it is perfectly constitutional and right to expend vast sums of money in order to survey the Atlantic coast, and that it is entirely unconstitutional to improve the navigation of the lakes. To me the principle of the two provisions seems to be the same; they are both for the same purpose; and all you can say is, that one is for the Atlantic and the other for the West; and that, heretofore, has created a difference which I believe has been recognized. Sir, it is time for Senators from the West to insist upon their rights. Suppose these improvements have not heretofore been ingrafted on an appropriation bill, I ask any gentleman here, do they differ in principle from many things that are contained in this bill? I know very well that there are many Senators who will neither vote for these measures as an amendment to an appropriation bill or as a separate bill, because they believe them to be unconstitutional. I expect no vote from that side; but I say to the friends of these measures, I hope you will not be so fastidious as to object to this movement because you suppose this is not exactly the time to get that justice which belongs to us of the West. To the friends of these improvements I say, be not over nice where you go for a measure right in itself. It is not particularly inappropriate that these appropriations should be inserted in this bill; here is the place for them; here is the place where their enemies cannot talk them to death without peril. I hope the real friends of these measures will vote for the amendment. I know that to their enemies there is no place appropriate for them. You cannot provide a time, a place, or a manner, when it will be right to bring them forward; but I trust those who are heartily the friends of these improvements will not be over nice as to the time and place of passing them, provided in so doing they conflict with no fair rule of the Senate. It is admitted that they are in order; they are of a kindred nature, similar in principle to many other things contained in the bill; and I cannot recognize any member of the Senate as friendly to these appropriations who shall now give his vote against them because they are sought to be added by way of amendment to this appropriation bill. Why, sir, our western lakes and harbors have been most singularly overlooked.

I observe that the chairman of the Committee on Finance rises in his place and watches me while I talk. Well, sir, I am as anxious to have this vote taken as anybody, but I wish to speak of the injustice that has been done to the West in regard to light-houses and—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will allow the Chair to announce that, in obedience to the order made yesterday, the hour of four having arrived, the Senate will now take a recess until six o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at six o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STUART) took the chair, and called the Senate to order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bills and joint resolutions; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

An act for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr.;

A resolution for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay;

A resolution to correct an error in a certain act approved May 11, 1858;

An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes;

An act to vest the title to certain warrants for land in George M. Gordon; and

An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of Government, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1859; the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. CHANDLER, in regard to the St. Clair flats.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, at the time the Senate took a recess, I had said almost all I had intended to say upon this subject. It has been so often argued here, that there is no occasion for any prolonged argument as to the necessity of the Government undertaking these improvements. If it were a new question, I might think that at this period of the session it was too late to attach these measures for internal improvements to an appropriation bill; but the argument has been entirely exhausted upon this subject, as we have seen. Year after year they have come up, and the same arguments have been recapitulated, until I believe they are familiar to everybody. When the bills containing these same appropriations were under consideration the other day, Senators who agreed in nothing else except in voting against those bills, consumed very nearly two days of this session, not in settling the principles upon which the measures ought to move, but the principles upon which they themselves should place their objections to them. They were perfectly agreed that these appropriations were unconstitutional, and they were willing promptly to vote against them; but it took them two days to settle between themselves the principles upon which they should vote against them, and the principles upon which they were supposed to be unconstitutional. That fact shows that the argument has been entirely exhausted. There is no occasion for any more.

Some of the friends of these appropriations seem to hesitate as to whether this is the proper place in which to put them. They have no doubt, however, as to the merits of the amendment. They could hardly have any doubts as to its merits. In the first place, the amounts have been fixed by the Department which has the matter in charge. They have been called upon to say what ought to be done, not for the purpose of continuing and extending improvements, but merely to do that which even economy requires for the purpose of rendering secure those works which we have already built. That is the extent to which this amendment proposes to go. We are not launching into any new system of internal improvements. It is a matter of economy, and he who is most careful of the expenditures of the public Treasury, if he would impartially and candidly consider this matter, in my judgment, would find that small appropriations, such as is proposed in this amendment, are necessary to secure the works and prevent much greater outlays hereafter.

It has been said, however, that the money appropriated for these internal improvements is money thrown away. Now, sir, of all the expenditures of the public money that I know of, none has been so beneficial to the public as that which has been spent in the improvement of the lake harbors. What would the western country be to-day, if the Government had never expended any money upon that great chain of lakes? Suppose no artificial improvements had been made there. Why, sir, it would have been as impossible to navigate those lakes as it would be to navigate the air. If you suffer them to go to decay, and you should have a war with Great Britain, as many gentlemen suppose we are about to have, you will want harbors for your shipping there. The British Government, your great antagonist, is not neglecting her harbors. She will have good ones, and she will have them perfectly secure on her side; but it is "economy" with us to let ours run to waste!

Living along the lake shore, I know something about the necessity for the appropriations now sought to be added to this bill. I know that your harbors are in ruins. I know that a small expense now will save millions hereafter, for every one acquainted with the action of the waters of the lakes knows that when decay commences upon your harbors, and they begin to succumb to the storms, they are in danger every day of being entirely swept away; whereas small appropriations by way of improvements may render them secure for years. Nothing would be more profitable, in point of economy, than to grant those improvements, and to grant them now. Are the friends of this measure at fault because we have not got it through the Senate and through Congress in a separate form? We have tried it; we have done all we could do to get these bills passed by themselves—not that I supposed they had not as much business here, and are not as proper upon this bill as the other expenditures contemplated by it; I know they are; I have already said they are on the same principle; they are on the same subject, and they are for the same purpose—that is, to improve your navigation.

But I intended to have made a few remarks about the neglect of the great West by this Government. Notwithstanding the great communication between the Atlantic coast and the West, men on that coast do not seem to realize yet the importance of the West. Why, sir, the commerce of these great lakes is scarcely inferior to that of the Atlantic itself. I have the means of showing the importance of the lakes, the amount of their tonnage, the number of their ships, and the immense fuses that have been consequent upon the decay of those harbors, from year to year; but I cannot, at this period of the session, undertake to set them forth to the Senate as they ought to be. I say we are overlooked. While the Department has provided for all your light-houses along the coast, and made the estimates necessary to repair and keep them up, I believe, as near as I can ascertain, they have totally neglected all the light-houses along the entire coast of our lakes. I know many of them are in a state of decay. There is one at the mouth of the Vermilion river, an important harbor on Lake Erie, where the piers are all washed away; and your light-house is in the lake, inaccessible in time of storms. At the very time of all others that it should be lighted up, the light-house keeper cannot get to it to put up a light there. It has been entirely overlooked. That is more or less the case with all the harbors upon the whole of the lake coast.

I am sorry, sir, that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] is not present. He has always stood by these bills, generously, as a western man, and has given us his support. They are of great interest to his constituents as well as to mine, and yet it seems that he would sacrifice the substance to the mere form; and because we desire to attach them to an appropriation bill, meritorious as they are, driven into the last stages of the session, as we have been, and this being our only chance, I understood him to say that he would feel himself compelled to resist them here although he would vote for them in another form. Sir, his constituents will not appreciate the wisdom of that argument. When this great injustice is done to them as to my constituents, they will never question us as to the form by which the act was done. The amendment is but an act of justice; it is justice to that section of the country; it is in accordance with that beneficent spirit which demands that the Government should administer its favors to all parts of the country alike, and the people will never stop to inquire whether all forms and proprieties were conformed to or not. Every man knows, the friends of these appropriations know full well, that unless they attach them to this bill, all these harbors will go unprotected during the season. It is our last, our only chance; and therefore I hope that no friend of these measures will sacrifice them to the mere shadow of form. It will cost the Government no more to place these appropriations upon this bill, than it would to pass them in separate bills, each by itself. It will be no waste to the Government; it will be the same to the people. It is the same act of justice, whether it is done in this manner or in any other, and it will cost no more.

Why, then, should any man withhold his vote from them because we propose to attach them to this bill? In a bill by themselves, you say you would pass them; and yet the enemies of these appropriations gave us warning that we should not be permitted to pass them in that way. Sir, they will force the friends of these measures always to attach them to an appropriation bill, because they have given us warning that the question shall not be fairly tried, unless we overpower them by placing these measures where they cannot defeat them without defeating something that they like. I am glad that they are proposed to be inserted on this bill. It is the very place for them. If it is proper that appropriations to a large amount should be made for the survey of your coast and for your light-house system on the Atlantic coast, it is equally proper that you should provide for repairing the harbors of the lakes. The subjects are not incongruous; they are, in principle, the same. Why, sir, no one thinks it is unconstitutional or wrong to expend almost any amount of money upon your Atlantic coast. What was your Japan expedition for? It cost a large sum of money; it cost more than we thought it would. What was it for? It was professedly to open trade with the Empire of Japan for the benefit of our commerce. We cheerfully voted for it. I voted for it myself. I believed that a great nation should foster the great interests of commerce everywhere, and I am sorry to see that there seems to be a penurious disposition when we endeavor to further the same great objects in the great and growing West.

Mr. President, I have not undertaken, nor shall I undertake, to make any formal argument upon this subject. I know very well, that to do justice to it, I ought to unfold the evidence in my possession of the enormous and growing importance of the commerce of those great lakes; for I really fear, that in the multiplicity of business, Senators have overlooked the amount and value of that commerce. I apprehend they do not appreciate it. Perhaps, if I lived at a great distance, this commerce springing into existence so recently—growing up, as it were, by magic—I should not have been able to ascertain its full importance, and should never have taken the pains probably to have done so. If you will look, however, to the tables of your Department, to the amount of revenue, and the amount of tonnage stated there, and even the amount of losses by the neglect of Government to improve your rivers and harbors from year to year, you would not longer doubt the importance of the commerce of the great lakes.

Why, sir, as I have said before, it is scarcely inferior to your Atlantic commerce, and in a very few years it will equal, if it does not surpass it.

It cannot be in the contemplation of anybody totally to abandon the commerce of the lakes to Great Britain. On her side she has the shrewdness to provide for her harbors; she is doing it every day. She is making canals round the obstructions and she is forcing us to use her canals and her improvements to carry on that commerce which it would be more honorable for us to carry on through improvements in our own country. At all hazards, she will have her harbors, and every facility for navigation; she will have her commerce, and have it protected, too. If you drive the United States into a war with her, you will not be slow in finding out the importance of the harbors you have erected upon the lakes, even for war purposes. Let those harbors all go to ruin, and then encounter Great Britain, with her portion of the lake shore all prepared, with her lakes and harbors improved, and what would be the consequence? You could keep no navy there, and the whole commerce of the lakes would lie prostrate under the heel of Great Britain. Some gentlemen act as if they thought that would be honorable to the nation, and would be an excellent policy for us to pursue. Sir, I know that these harbors are not to be abandoned by the Government; I know they cannot be abandoned. It is only, then, a question of mere economy; and in the present state of the Treasury I do not stand here to urge on you appropriations for new and doubtful subjects. I only ask you to vote to preserve that to which you are already committed. I hope I shall not ask in vain.

I will not detain the Senate longer upon this subject. I know very well, if gentlemen are opposed to appropriations for internal improvements, that it is exceedingly easy for them to say, "I would favor the project if the form was right; if it was in a bill by itself, I would vote for you." I know it is easy to dodge around the question in that manner where gentlemen are opposed to the improvements themselves; but, sir, it is no answer to the earnest man who sees and feels and knows the importance of the improvements that we propose. He will stand not at all upon form; but, reaching out to the substance, he will grant that which does justice wherever he can do it. I hope the friends of these appropriations, at least, will not be frightened from their support because we offer them now, and are driven to offer them as an amendment to this appropriation bill. I hope it will receive the vote of every friend of the measures. From those who oppose it on constitutional grounds, of course, I do not expect any help.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I merely desire to say I think no one can doubt, from my previous course in the Senate, that I am in favor of a reasonable and judicious expenditure for the improvement of rivers and harbors; at the same time, none can doubt that that is a question which has long been debated in this Government, upon which there are conflicting opinions which every member of the Senate has a right to consider upon independent grounds. I cannot consent to vote in favor of this amendment, however willingly I would support and advocate a bill independently of the appropriation bill. I cannot consent, for the purpose of carrying out this policy, to stop the wheels of Government, or to force gentlemen either to vote against the ordinary expenditures, the ordinary appropriations necessary for carrying on the Government, or else vote for a bill to which they are opposed on principle. I think these measures ought to be carried or defeated on independent grounds. I therefore desire, in order that my vote may not be misunderstood, to make these observations, and I shall vote against the amendment to the appropriation bill.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, the question of the improvement of the western rivers, and the harbors upon the lakes, is only a question of time. Every day increases and demonstrates the necessity of the policy which is proposed by those who have offered these amendments to the Senate. It was a policy that had no friends sixty or seventy years ago when the Government began, because there were then only thirteen States in the Union, and they were all Atlantic States. In the course of seventy years, however, we have reached the point when there are seventeen Atlantic States, and thirteen States located upon the rivers, and upon the lakes of the West. If Atlantic gentlemen want to know how long they can pursue this policy of throttling, strangling, crushing the West, they can ascertain it by a geometrical process, and see how long it will be before the valley of the lakes, and the valley of the Mississippi will give them twenty or twenty-five States to balance seventeen eastern States.

Sir, I have no patience with Atlantic men, North or South, who cannot comprehend this simple principle that the streams, the fountains of the revenue of this country, are in the West, and that if they will have full rivers of revenue in the Atlantic portion, they must cherish and develop the fountains in the Mississippi valley, and on the lakes. Perhaps I have seen this policy earlier and more obvious than other Senators, because I happen to live in that ravine, in that valley, where the Alleghany mountains stoop for the passage of the outlet of the lakes through the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Atlantic ocean. The State of New York has been able to conduct the waters of the Mississippi through that valley to meet in the Hudson the tides of the Atlantic ocean. Railroads, canals, and lakes carry by my door, at my feet, I might say, the tribute of the great West to the commerce of the world, and from that tribute, indirectly but certainly, comes an unfailing river of revenue which supports this Federal Government. Sir, I have no peculiar interest as a western man, as you well know. I hardly know whether I belong to the West or to the East. I stand just at that point where, commercially, the West and the East mingle together. If any man has interest, has pride in the developments of the Atlantic States, surely I ought to have it, because it culminates within the State which I represent; but if any man could be unpardonably blind to the fact that that interest is derived from free regions far away toward the setting sun, it would be one whose life has been spent, as mine has been, and yours has been spent, sir, [Mr. SEWARD in the chair,] in binding the great West with the Atlantic States.

The old States, the Atlantic States, may go on with this policy for a time, but every day that they deny this justice to the West; every day that they deny equality to the West, weakens their power, and builds up the political influence of the western States. I am amazed to hear in this Senate, where the thirty-one States are equally represented, appeals to our magnanimity, appeals to our forbearance, not to distract the Senate, not to delay and embarrass the public business by this amendment. One honorable Senator tells us that we will add too much, and swell the appropriations of this bill too largely. He says it will make it amount to $6,000,000 per annum. Sir, for the harbor of Oswego, in the State of New York, the second of the grain ports of the world, you are asked to appropriate the sum of $46,391. If you do not appropriate it, your light-house will be immersed, will be buried in the sands of the lake before another year. Not only will that be the case with your light-house, but your piers which you erected to make a harbor, will be washed into the channel, and the trade will have to make its way over or around the obstructions, resulting from the dilapidation, and decay, and ruin of the works that you have built there for the purpose of opening the harbor in better days. What is true of Oswego, is true more or less of every other harbor. It is the basis of the principle which underlies every appropriation in this bill that is made for the lakes, and for the improvement of the lakes and rivers of the Northwest. Altogether, what do they amount to? Where you have spent millions, and have millions of property invested, it amounts in the whole aggregate to $585,085, and that $585,000 is just no more than is indispensably necessary to protect, to preserve, to maintain the works that the Government has erected at such a vast cost, and for such a beneficent and so necessary a purpose, exactly in their present state and condition. When you appropriate and spend the whole $585,000, you have not improved a single river, or a single harbor in the United States, but you have merely put in the way of preservation the harbors and rivers, just as you left them when you withdrew your hands from improving them.

Why, then, should we, who deem these improvements so important, forbear from offering them as an amendment to this bill? What is this $500,000 compared with the eighty or ninety million dollars which you are spending by these appropriation bills? It is insignificant. Why is it not as proper or more proper than any other expenditure which is provided for in this bill? No one of us objects to paying the collectors, the tide waiters, the appraisers, and the whole army of Government agents at the sea-ports; no one has objected to paying the salaries for the administration of the Government; no one has objected to paying the wages of members of Congress; no one has objected to paying money by the half million and the million for improving and beautifying the Capitol; and which one of these is half as important as the protection of the public works we have already constructed, and the security of the lives and property of the seamen, the navigators, the merchants, the farmers, and producers, who use these public works on which all our revenues depend? Why, then, I again ask, should we forbear?

Senators tell us this is the wrong time and the wrong place. That is a good argument, always a reasonable argument, but it must be founded in a reasonable statement of facts and circumstances. It implies that there is a right time, that there is a right way, and a right place. I appeal to those who object to our taking this time, this place, and this way, when they have shown us, or when they have allowed us to show them a right time, a right place, and a right way? There has been no such indulgence allowed us; nor do they pretend that there ever will be, or that there ever was during this whole session of Congress, a right time, a right place, and a right way, if I may use the word "right" as a comparative word. On the contrary, we have tried every other, and it has proved to be wrong; every other time, and it has proved to be incurably wrong; and we are left to this the last and the only time and the only way. What did we do? We offered, in the first place, year after year, bills covering these improvements. That was the wrong way; the subject must be put into one bill covering all rivers and harbors. No sooner had we done that than it was altogether wrong to combine so many distinct objects in one bill, as to appeal to the interest, the cupidity, the fears, the hopes, and the expectations of members from many States, and so the bill must be disavowed. We resolved it again into the original elements of which the general bill was composed, and then the separate bills were more objectionable than ever. We only reached finally a time when we could get the Senate to consider them three or four days ago, last week. We were then within ten days of the end of the session, and not one friend of any one of these measures advocated his particular object or interest, and not one friend of any or all of them uttered one word in behalf of the policy. We submitted it to the judgment and the patriotism of the Senate, and how was it met? Opponents started from every side. Then it was demonstrated, that although it was right and reasonable and just in itself that rivers should be improved, and that harbors should be built and preserved, yet it was not to be done by the Congress of the United States; it was to be done by the States, and Congress must grant to the States leave to levy tonnage duties in order to make those improvements. When we stood patiently by, and waited for Senators to show us how that new system could be rendered practicable, and to substitute it by their act, and commit themselves to a system which would enable us to carry out this policy, we were told the time for debate had passed; other and more important questions had arisen; and a majority of the Senate decided that they would hear no more upon the subject in any shape whatever.

When that had passed, when it became evident that these bills, separately or collectively, could not be carried through the Senate for want of time, then I offered a proposition to extend the time of the session, so that that consideration might be allowed which the subject confessedly demanded; and that proposition has received no more favor, no more toleration than any other. So the question resolves itself simply into this: is there any right time and any right way to foster, cherish, and protect the commerce of the lakes and of the western rivers? The answer of the Senate will be, if this proposition is rejected, that there is none; and the responsibility will rest upon those who shall pronounce that decision.

Mr. BAYARD. I am not surprised at the remarks of the honorable Senator from New York. They have a presidential odor about them, of which, I suppose, the most obtuse olfactory nerve in the Senate must have been readily sensible.

The question before us now is not whether we will pursue a system of river and harbor improvements in reference either to the West or East, or any part of the country. The question is, whether, contrary to all our former practices, and contrary to what really the requisite order of business requires, we shall attempt, by enforced legislation, to ingraft upon an ordinary appropriation bill a river and harbor bill, whether to a limited extent, or not, is immaterial? There are other works in the country that ought to be prosecuted as well as those reported by the Committee on Commerce, which are for the mere purpose of protection, it is said. The particular amendment before the Senate is not among those recommended by the Committee on Commerce; but is an appropriation for the removal of obstructions in the St. Clair flats, to be followed, as I understand, by the different bills for the mere protection of works recommended by the Committee on Commerce. The particular amendment, however, is for the construction of a work confined to a particular portion of the country, however valuable it may be.

Now, I have said, as to existing works, that I am disposed to carry them out at a proper time, and when the capacity of the country, as regards her means, will enable her to do it. Admitting the power fully, I confess that my mind has halted, from what I have seen of the corruption necessarily incident to such a system of appropriations, as to whether, beyond the extent to which we have commenced, we ought to go one step further. I doubt it, sir. I have formed no definite conclusion, though I admit the existence of the power when confined to the navigable streams of the country—and when I use that word I do not mean tide-water streams; but I mean streams capable of public navigation, tide-water or not. I am not opposed to the system on the ground of constitutionality. I doubt its expediency when I look to its ultimate results beyond the extent into which we have already embarked.

All these measures, I admit, are for works which we have already commenced; but the particular question before us is, whether we shall ingraft upon an ordinary appropriation bill a bill for the construction of an internal improvement connected with a harbor, or the navigation in a particular section of the country? That is the question. Honorable Senators refer to the existing bill, and talk of the coast survey. What has the coast survey to do with anything like a river and harbor improvement? There is no construction there; there is an appropriation for a survey of different parts of the country; and if this bill embodied an appropriation for the purpose of surveying the lakes of this country, I should vote for it just as readily as for the survey of the Atlantic sea-board. But a work of construction and a work of survey are essentially different things. One involves nothing but information to the Government; the other involves local action and local benefit, though it may be that incidental benefit may result to the trade of the country at large. In the previous practice of the Government, (and I have a right to appeal to that,) it is very evident we have always treated river and harbor bills as distinct from bills of appropriation. We have subdivided what was called the civil and diplomatic bill into two bills. This is the secondary bill, called the miscellaneous bill, if you will; but hitherto we have certainly always kept river and harbor appropriations disconnected with either of those bills. I think the precedent a bad one which would connect them. The Senator from New York may not think so, and it may suit his views to talk about our "throttling" the West, and destroying the trade of the West. Sir, no such object is desired here. It does not connect itself at all with the objections made to the bill, though it may sound very well for the purpose of enlisting public sentiment, and appealing to the western part of this country, as if there was a peculiar friendship and regard for its interests on the part of the honorable Senator from New York. They will credit that just to the extent to which intelligence exists among the masses of the people there—no further, I believe.

Now, sir, the objection is distinct that the amendment is inappropriate on the bill. But supposing it right and proper—not only constitutional, but expedient and proper—not only to make the appropriations recommended by the Committee on Commerce, but more extended appropriations for the purpose of carrying on improvements of rivers and harbors: the question is, whether, at this time, in the present state of the Treasury, those objects stand in a relation to us that would require us to go altogether beyond our means for the purpose of carrying them on now. What is the fact? You have the clouds lowering in the political horizon; you have—I will not say even the probability of a war, but you certainly have the possibility in the present aspect of things. Notwithstanding that fact, you refuse to carry on and complete the existing fortifications of the country; you leave them half finished, tumbling into ruins, with arches half turned, and will not appropriate one dollar for their protection, though they are works which cannot be constructed in time of war, and must be constructed in time of peace if you mean to put the country in a position to resist all that this country will ever have reason to fear, which is the first onset of a war—your House of Representatives will not do that, for no other reason than that the state of your Treasury does not justify an appropriation of that kind; and yet the honorable Senator from New York asks you to appropriate money for the purpose of carrying on internal improvements connected with rivers and harbors, and impliedly, from the course of his argument, imputes to those who are opposed under those circumstances to such appropriations that they are opposed to the growth and expansion of the great West! That is the substance of the argument, however it may be colored or clothed.

I want to bring it down to the ground, and the real ground, on which I, and most of those who agree with me, are opposed to inserting this appropriation in the present bill: First, that it is inappropriate to the bill; that it is a violation of the usage and practice necessary in a legislative body to keep measures distinct in themselves, in distinct bills; next, taking the recommendations of the committee and the existing state of the Treasury and the action of Congress, that your Treasury is not in a condition to justify these appropriations now. Therefore, without reference to where these appropriations are to be expended, whether in New York, in Ohio, or any other State of this Union, they ought to be voted down. It is on that ground, and that ground alone, that my opposition to these appropriations rests.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

MR. SEWARD. I have been requested to say that the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DOOLITTLE] has paired off with the honorable Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY.]

MR. SIMMONS. I wish to state that I have paired off with the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAYNE,] and do not vote.

The result was then announced—yeas 20, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Bright, Broderick, Chandler, Colamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Kennedy, King, Polk, Pugh, Seward, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Brown, Clingman, Fitzpatrick, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Yulee—20.

So the amendment did not prevail.

MR. PUGH. I move, after the two hundred and forty-sixth line, on the 11th page, to insert the amendment I before offered, including the paragraph which continues the appropriation for the St. Clair flats; and upon the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was suggested to-day, and need not be read unless some Senator desires it.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the amendment.

MR. PUGH. I wish it understood that an appropriation of something over twenty thousand dollars for the St. Clair flats is a part of the amendment.

MR. ALLEN. Let the amendment be read. The Secretary read the amendment; which is, to insert on the two hundred and forty-sixth line, on the 11th page of the bill, the following:

For repairing and securing the public works at the harbor of Chicago, Illinois, $87,225 37.

For the preservation and repair of the piers at the mouth of Milwaukee river, Wisconsin, $38,630.

For repairing the piers at the harbor of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, $5,000.

For repairing the public works at the harbor of St. Joseph's, Michigan, $10,000.

For repairing the public works at the harbor of Monroe, Michigan, $8,588.

For deepening and widening the channel, through the St. Clair flats, Michigan, $23,431.

For securing and repairing the public works at the harbor of Cleveland, Ohio, $28,143 15.

For repairs upon the public works at Huron harbor, Ohio, $30,000.

For repairs upon the public works at Black River harbor, Ohio, $16,940 95.

For repairs upon the public works at Grand River harbor, Ohio, $8,679 55.

For repairing the public works at the harbor of Ashtabula, Ohio, $8,630.

For repairing the public works at the harbor of Conneaut, Ohio, $3,021.

For the immediate repair of the piers at Erie harbor, Pennsylvania, $3,638.

For the immediate repair of the public works at Dunkirk harbor, New York, $5,259 95.

For repairing the public works at Buffalo harbor, New York, $27,679 35.

For repairing the piers at Oak Orchard harbor, New York, $9,735 65.

For repairing the public works at Genesee harbor, New York, $41,084 34.

For repairing the piers atodus bay harbor, Wayne county, New York, and for dredging between the channel piers, $40,595.

For immediate repairs required for the preservation of the harbor of Oswego, New York, $43,391 14.

For the repairs of the piers at Burlington, Vermont, $2,185 40.

For completing the improvements in the raft region of Red river, $110,000.

For the preservation of steam dredges and appurtenances, $10,000.

For unforeseen contingencies of lake harbors, $20,000.

MR. SLIDELL. I would ask, for information, whether the appropriations mentioned in this amendment for Chicago and Milwaukee have not already been the subject of separate consideration by the Senate, and whether bills have not passed making appropriations for those places? I should like to be informed on that subject.

MR. PUGH. Undoubtedly; two bills have passed the Senate.

MR. SLIDELL. Then I raise the point of order whether these two appropriations, the Senate having already passed upon them, and voted that amount, can now be introduced in this form? I shall make no argument upon the subject. I submit it for the consideration of the Chair.

MR. PUGH. There are several items in the amendment for which separate bills have been passed by the Senate.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana makes the point of order to the Chair. If the Senator is aware of any rule that excludes those appropriations, the Chair would be glad to hear it suggested.

MR. SLIDELL. I am not; only the rule of common sense, that we cannot make two appropriations for the same subject. I do not profess to be at all cognizant with the rules; but it seems to me it needs no authority on a point of that kind. At any rate, I make the point of order for the decision of the Chair.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it a question that may be considered by the Senate, and not a question of order to be submitted to the Chair.

MR. SLIDELL. Then I will submit that question to the decision of the Senate.

MR. SEWARD. What question?

MR. SLIDELL. Whether the Senate, having already by separate bills, made two of the appropriations contemplated by the amendment, can repeat them in this form?

MR. SEWARD. I understand the question, but I should have asked the Senator how he proposed to take the sense of the Senate upon it.

MR. SLIDELL. I submit it to the Chair for decision.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator misunderstood the Chair. The Chair stated that, in his opinion, it was not a question of order, but a question to be determined by the Senate in its action upon the amendment.

MR. SLIDELL. Very well. I am very well satisfied with it in that form. I wished simply to call the attention of the Senate to that feature in the amendment.

MR. POLK. I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I desire to state in vindication of myself that while I should vote, and did vote an appropriation for the improvement of St. Clair flats, which is in the direct channel of the commerce of the great lakes, I cannot vote for that improvement when it stands connected with the appropriation of money for the improvement of harbors for the benefit of cities situated on the lakes. I cannot vote for the amendment now offered, although it contains an appropriation for the St. Clair flats, which I could vote for, and for which I have voted separately, and should be willing to do so again, because the appropriations which it proposes are intended mainly for the benefit of the cities that are situated on or around those harbors.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from Missouri is mistaken. There is no appropriation here to continue any work or make any improvement. It is simply to preserve, for one year, the works and property already begun by the Government, and those who vote against this amendment vote to destroy that amount of public property. The simple question is, can it be protected against storms for twelve months? We do not ask you to go on with the work; we simply ask you to preserve that much public property. If it be that we are so unfortunate in the Northwest, even if we have a little public property, that it must be destroyed, let the Senate say so by its vote.

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot concede to the Senator from Ohio, that we are voting to destroy any public property whatever, because we may differ with him in judgment. My own belief is, that, if we should vote anything at all for river and harbor improvements at this session, we should vote for a continuation of the works. I consider that the appropriations, based on an estimate obtained from the Secretary of War on the subject-matter of each one, will be literally money thrown away. It will be no profit to the works themselves, or to the general interests of the country, in my judgment; and, therefore, I shall vote against them.

Mr. KENNEDY. In order to satisfy myself, in regard to my vote, I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Missouri what appropriations are made for cities outside of this appropriation for the St. Clair flats? I wish simply to be informed on the subject.

Mr. POLK. I will state to the Senator. For instance, take the city of Chicago. The piers have been made there by the United States, as I am told, at a former period, in crib and wood work. The wood work is giving way, and the stones are falling out, and that is impeding that harbor, as I understand, and the appropriation proposed in this amendment is not for the purpose of securing works that are now going on, or in process of construction, from going into dilapidation, but for repairing this dilapidated state of the piers there. The work is of the same nature with the work which has been carried on in my own State by taxing the people hundreds of thousands of dollars, and an expenditure which is more especially and particularly beneficial to the particular State in which the harbor is situated.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am not fully informed. I understand that the appropriation is simply for the St. Clair flats.

Mr. POLK. Oh, no; that has been voted upon. The St. Clair flats is put in the amendment now under consideration in connection with the harbors of Milwaukee, Sheboygan, St. Joseph's—

Mr. KENNEDY. I will not require the Senator to repeat them. I will only say that I am in favor of appropriations for all those harbors. They may not be perhaps all entirely regular in form, and especially in the way in which this amendment has been offered, but I desire to accomplish their purpose in the end. I want to vote for an appropriation for those harbors as well as for the St. Clair flats. I do not know how far I am out of order in voting for this particular appropriation upon the ground the gentleman assumes that I am voting for an appropriation for harbors. I shall myself, as far as I am now informed, vote for the amendment offered.

Mr. KING. That is right.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think so; though it may be wrong.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that the remarks of the Senator from Missouri will mislead any one in the Senate, for I presume the whole Senate, and the whole country, know that the improvements upon that part of Lake Michigan near Chicago, are not simply for the city of Chicago. They are necessary for the millions of property floating upon that lake. It is necessary that there should be places of security for the shipping, whether the city of Chicago was there or not. Does the fact that there is a city near this particular point make the appropriation local? You might as well say, because the city of New York exists, that therefore upon the Atlantic sea-board near the city of New York, there should be no improvement, because, forsooth, it is for the benefit of the city of New York! It is for the benefit of the whole country, and for the commerce that is upon the ocean. This improvement at Chicago, at that point where the improvement is made, is near the city of Chicago; but is not for the benefit of Chicago alone. It is for the benefit of property in transitu to the Senator's own city; and if there is a national work anywhere upon the lakes, that is one of them. The idea of asserting that it is a local improvement for the city of Chicago merely, and for the benefit of that city, is not doing justice, I apprehend, to the proposition to improve the lake at that particular point.

Mr. JONES. I desire to know whether it will be in order to move to amend the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. JONES. Then I offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of the amendment: And that there shall be, and is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $53,000, to be expended under the superintendence of the Secretary of War, for continuing the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river at the Des Moines and Rock river rapids, in the said Mississippi river.

Mr. POLK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. Is that amendment in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. JONES. It is as much in order as the other one.

Mr. MASON. It is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. JONES. There have been regular estimates made by the War Department for this improvement; not at this session of Congress, but at the last session but one. An appropriation was then made for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river to those rapids. This appropriation is designed for the removal of the obstructions in the Mississippi river at Rock river rapids, near the mouth of Rock river, in the Mississippi river.

Mr. MASON. I did not hear the amount proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. JONES. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. MASON. I will ask the honorable Senator from Ohio, if he will give me his attention for a moment, what is the aggregate amount of appropriation in the amendment he has offered?

Mr. PUGH. Five hundred and seventy or five hundred and eighty thousand dollars.

Mr. POLK. Five hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MASON. Then I understand that the works now in progress under former laws require $580,000 to be appropriated to prevent their being destroyed by time or decay, or from other sources, in the next twelve months.

Mr. PUGH. I was wrong in stating that they were in progress of construction. My colleague corrected me in that regard. They have not been repaired for ten or twelve years. The St. Clair flats is the only one, I believe, actually in progress.

Mr. POLK. It was about to make the same explanation.

Mr. PUGH. It gives me no uneasiness whatever. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that on the 10th page of this bill he will find, for the continuation of the work on the Washington aqueduct, an appropriation of $800,000, and, in addition, "so much of the appropriation of $250,000, for paying existing liabilities for the Washington aqueduct and in preserving the work from injury" as has not been spent for that purpose. If we are to appropriate $1,000,000 to continue one work in the District of Columbia, it seems to me no great hardship to appropriate less than $580,000 for continuing twenty or thirty.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to say that I have paired off with the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMMOND.] during these night sessions, not being able, on account of my health, to be all the time in my seat.

Mr. HUNTER. I have been requested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. DAVIS] to state that he has paired off with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DURKEE.]

The result was then announced—yeas 17, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Broderick, Chandler, Douglas, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Jones, Kennedy, King, Polk, Pugh, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—17.
NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Hale, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Reid, Rice, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—30.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. PUGH.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Broderick, Chandler, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Douglas, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Jones, Kennedy, King, Pugh, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—23.
NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clingman, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—26.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PUGH. I move to strike out from the seventy-fifth to the ninety-second line, inclusive, in the first section of the bill, in the following words:

"For compensation of two superintendents for the life-saving stations on the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey, $3,000.

"For compensation of fifty-four keepers of stations, at $200 each, $10,800.

"For contingencies for life-saving apparatus on the coast of the United States, $12,000.

"For the purchase of 'Holmes's life boat,' to be placed at each of the twenty-eight life-saving stations on the coast of New Jersey, $6,440.

"For the purchase of the best life-boats, to be approved by the Treasury Department, for use on the coast of Long Island, $10,000.

"For procuring two additional improved metallic life-boats, a metallic life-car, and necessary harness, lines, and other suitable articles, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in saving life, in cases of marine disaster, off Galveston station, Texas, $10,000."

Mr. TOOMBS. My honorable friend from Ohio having started in the right direction, it will give me great pleasure to travel with him on that road. This amendment has my hearty concurrence. I do not wish to set off one bad thing against another; but he is now striking in the right way, and he will get my support with great pleasure.

Mr. PUGH. I know I shall get the Senator's support unless I make a dash against the Brunswick navy-yard, and I regret that I have not an opportunity to do so at present. If there be not money enough in the Treasury to discharge the duties of the Government towards the people who have the misfortune to live on the northwestern lakes, I wish to know if you have money enough to take care of the Atlantic coast? And in order that we may understand whether the people of the Northwest are entitled to any benefit from this Union, or whether they are merely conquered provinces, to be taxed for the benefit of the Atlantic coast, I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SEWARD. My honorable friend from Ohio will be obliged to excuse me from going with him, inasmuch as it will strike most decidedly at the State of New York, his best friend. I shall have to stand by New York.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bright, Brown, Douglas, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Hayne, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Jory, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Toombs, and Yulee—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, King, Mason, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Wright—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POLK. I move to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" in the twelfth line of the first page, and insert "one hundred;" so that the clause will read:

"For continuing the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coast of the United States, (including compensation to superintendent and assistants, and excluding pay and emoluments of officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed on the work,) $200,000."

I will merely state that about four hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars are appropriated in this bill for the coast survey. I believe that work commenced in 1790. It was then a pretty small affair; but it has been going on increasing, from that time down to the present, until the appropriation for that purpose has now reached the neighborhood of half a million dollars. If it goes on at this rate, it will bankrupt the Government. For one, I think it is time to begin reform on it. I do not mean to debate the question. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I only wish to say that, making the alteration proposed in the amendment, will about as effectually stop the work as striking out the whole appropriation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust this amendment will prevail. Like the Senator from Missouri, I have had my attention turned to the appropriations for the coast survey in this bill, which, including the publication of the books, amount to upwards of half a million dollars. This seems to be an appropriation that is to continue forever. I suppose, so long as there can be a harbor to examine or any change in the currents of the ocean, or any sand bars, this coast fleet will be at work. At any rate, they will be at work as long as you pay them $500,000 annually to keep up this establishment. The book which has been published, according to a little statement I have here, cost, in 1855, over sixty-eight thousand and some hundred dollars; and in 1856, $78,000. Adding that to the amount appropriated in this bill, and it costs $500,000 for the coast survey.

The Senator from Maine tells us we might as well vote nothing as to vote $100,000. A few years ago that would have been considered a very large sum to appropriate for this work. I have no doubt the surveys of the coast have been of benefit to the country; but I do not think such an amount of money as this should be appropriated to this particular object. The Senate has just refused to improve any of the harbors upon the lakes, where millions of property are destroyed every year; and yet you appropriate $500,000 for surveys upon the Atlantic coast, where they have been making surveys for the last half a century, and I suppose will be making them so long as the Government lasts; and this appropriation, instead of diminishing, will go on increasing. I trust the sum of $250,000 will be stricken out, and $100,000 inserted in its place. Even that, I think, is a large amount to appropriate, under the circumstances in which the Government is now placed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My friend from Illinois talks of this survey of the coast taking time. He seems to be under the impression that the Atlantic coast of the United States falls somewhat short of the coast of the State of Illinois, and that the survey of it ought to have been finished long ago. I do not accede at all to this mode of reasoning. This work has continued for some time, and it cannot be finished in a day, or in a year, or in many years. I really have no sympathy with that kind of argument, addressed to the Senate of a great nation, which says that a work ought to stop, not because it is not beneficial, not for the reason that it is not useful, not for the reason that it is not a very great work, and must necessarily, of course, to be finished, take a great time, but for the reason that it does take time and does take money. Why, sir, we have begun this, and continued it for many years, and everybody who has examined this question knows that a very few more years will complete it. If the book cost more last year than it did the year before, it was because the book itself was a larger record than the record of the year before, and more work was done.

The truth of the matter with reference to this coast survey is, that it has been going on, as everybody well knows, managed with care, with skill, with fidelity, and with ability, and as cheaply as the nature of the work would allow. What do you want more, when you have undertaken a great work for the benefit of the whole country, extending from the north to the south, and on the Pacific as well as the Atlantic? Cannot we do something else than simply stop it because it cost a few thousand more for more work one year than it did the year before, and because it costs something more in order to complete it? Why, sir, in the name of common sense, are we to stop appro-riating money for the great purposes of this nation, simply because we cannot get along without money? I do not accede to that reasoning. I must say to my friend that, although this does not strike at me, because I believe the survey of the coast, so far as Maine is concerned, is completed and record made thereof, and we have nothing more to do with it directly; yet I consider that that is a part of the country, and I feel just as much interest, as a friend of the great commerce of the country, in having that work completed on the Pacific coast as on the Atlantic, and on one part of the Atlantic coast as on the other.

I said you might as well appropriate nothing as $100,000. It is not because $100,000 is a small sum; not because it was not a sufficient sum at one year or at one time, and is not now. It was sufficient for the operations at one time, but the surveys are now carried on upon a much larger scale than they were years ago. We began on a small scale, but we have been increasing in population, means, wealth, and extent of our country, and the necessities of the country. I said that you might as well appropriate nothing as $100,000, simply for the reason that, if we are to carry on operations with the present force employed, by employing the vessels now in operation we would save money by not unnecessarily striking down the amount without any inquiry as to what the effect of striking down would be; that it would be much cheaper to appropriate $250,000 now, and we would lose less and pay less, in point of fact, in the long run, in the course of two or three years, than to appropriate $100,000 now. It is in order to save expense and conduct the work economically, and not throw away that which we have done, that I am in favor of retaining the sum named in the bill. If Senators are disposed, as I think they are not, to stop the surveys entirely, and say they will go no further, that is one thing; I am perfectly willing they should do so according to their own pleasure, as they have a right to act; but, if we undertake to do it at all, let us do it in a business, common-sense manner—not appropriate a quarter of the sum necessary, and in that way conduct the business in the niggardly form in which a man conducts his who does not know enough to carry it on, and must eternally carry it on at a loss, because he has not soul enough to do it on a scale commensurate with the undertaking.

Sir, I do not quarrel with gentlemen who oppose this appropriation on principle; that is all very well. Let them strike it out if they are strong enough to do it; but let the friends of the work act with sense and discretion, according to the interests of the measure, and, at any rate, not find fault with the surveys which, so far as they have been continued, have been conducted well, and, I believe, with sufficient economy, and certainly to very good purpose.

I must say one other thing: I have stood by these rivers and harbors upon the lakes because I believed the appropriations proper, and that they should be made; but it is hardly fair that gentlemen should turn round and crush the whole Atlantic coast, because a portion of the Atlantic States did not support them in their motions. Let us, at any rate, have the benefit of our action from those gentlemen who are in favor of the thing as a whole, and not strike it down piecemeal, because they did not get all the votes they wanted to get for their own favorite measure.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Illinois is mistaken if he supposes the whole of this appropriation is for the Atlantic coast. We have a Pacific coast, also; and the two together, I think, would compare with the lake coast. They may not be as great in his eyes; but still, I think, they will compare tolerably well with his lake coast.

Mr. POLK. I will state that the clause to which my amendment refers is for the survey of the Atlantic coast only.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know why we should strike out the appropriation for the Atlantic coast alone. Why should it be singled out, and the appropriations for the Pacific coast and the lakes left? The Senator will find, when the Army bill comes up, an analogous appropriation for the survey of the lakes, which has been going on for years.

Mr. PUGH. Whereabouts?

Mr. HUNTER. In the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army, in which there is an appropriation of $75,000 for this year. One hundred thousand dollars was the estimate. That survey has been going on pari passu with the survey of the coast.

Nor do I admit that the survey of the coast stands on the same ground with the improvement of rivers and harbors. The improvement of rivers and harbors is strictly for commercial ends, and are many of them improvements within the jurisdiction of the States. This coast survey is within the jurisdiction of the United States; and although it may incidentally be of advantage to commerce, it is defensible upon military grounds. We are bound to know the channels on our coast, both for naval and military purposes. We ought to know the channels leading into New York, that we may defend its harbors. So with regard to the entrance into Charleston; so into Norfolk; so into Mobile and New Orleans.

Mr. PUGH. Do you not expect to defend the Northwest too, in case of war?

Mr. HUNTER. There is a similar appropriation for the Northwest.

Mr. PUGH. An appropriation of only $75,000. I think the motion of the Senator from Missouri entirely right.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator will find that it has been going on in the Northwest for some time, and he will find that it is progressing quite as rapidly in proportion to the extent of lake shore as it is in proportion to the extent of the shores of the two seas. When examined, he will find, so far as that is concerned, that all the coasts and shores of the country are provided for.

Now, sir, it is a very different thing carrying on surveys which are strictly for military and naval purposes, and making improvements looking only to commerce, and which are also within the jurisdiction of the States thus claiming for the United States jurisdiction over the commerce of the States, and over those improvements which look to the commerce of the States. If we can improve rivers and make harbors for that purpose, why not railroads? why not canals? If we can take that particular jurisdiction of the States, what will remain to them?

But, sir, it was not my purpose to enter into a discussion of that question. I merely rose to show the distinction in point of principle; and when that is admitted, then the argument of the Senator from Maine is unanswerable. We have been carrying on this coast survey for a long time, and it is economy to appropriate enough to bring it to a conclusion within a reasonable space of time. I will not say there may have been no waste in regard to this work; I will not say that everything that has been done has been as economically done as it could have been; I will not undertake to indorse them to that extent; but I will say that it is a great work, which has been executed in such a manner as to command the admiration of all practical and scientific men, I believe, all over the world, who are acquainted with the manner in which it has been executed.

Mr. PEARCE. I am afraid that the Senator from Illinois is not so much moved in his opposition to this appropriation for the coast survey by a thorough study of the subject as by a little feeling of resentment, because some appropriations to objects which he deems of great importance and interest have not been made. I regret it, sir. In addition to what has been so justly said by the Senator from Virginia, I beg leave to add that the Senator from Illinois is under a great mistake as to the period of time during which this work has been in progress. He assumes that it has been going on at this rate for half a century. Now, sir, this great work, so useful to the commerce and other interests of this country, was commenced under the recommendation of Mr. Jefferson, about fifty years ago. It made no progress for a number of years, because the first step was to procure a scientific person, of proper attainments, and send him to Europe for instruments. Nothing was actually done until after the war of 1812, and very little then. There was another series of years during which the work was suspended; and not until about the year 1830 were active operations commenced on a limited scale. More active operations were carried on in 1842; but it was not until about the year 1850 that we adopted the present scale of expenditure and progress, and the results have been more than proportionate to the increased expense. That was demonstrated some years ago when this subject was fully discussed in the Senate. We then appropriated $250,000—the sum which is now given for the Atlantic coast. Since then we have extended our operations into the Gulf coast, and largely upon the Pacific coast, where the expense is greater in proportion than it is on the Atlantic.

Here I beg leave to say, that the Senator from Virginia is very correct in assuming that the expenses for the survey of the lakes have been proportionate to those on the Atlantic. A sort of equity has been attempted to be observed in that regard, and the appropriations have always been so apportioned as to bear a fair and reasonable rate in comparison with each other.

Neither is the gentleman warranted in saying that this is a work which is to go on forever. It has been going on with great rapidity for a number of years, because Congress has made liberal appropriations, and they have been judiciously and economically expended. I venture to say that no department of this Government, or of any other Government under the sun, has ever applied a sum of money of no greater amount more economically, more beneficially, and more effectually, than have the appropriations which have been made for the coast survey, been applied by that office.

The Senator assumes that this work is to go on forever; but we have the calculations of the superintendent of the coast survey—a man whose sincerity and integrity have never been questioned—calculations based upon facts, upon data about which there is no dispute, in which he shows that at the rate of progress they are now making, this work will be completed in twelve years. The Senator, perhaps, did not know that fact; nevertheless it is a fact.

I trust that the Senate will not now, in the meridian of its usefulness, when the work is making rapid progress to completion, interrupt one so essential to the commercial interests of the country. We shall, at all events, find money enough in the Treasury for this purpose. Surely it is no objection to an appropriation for an object like this, that the improvement of certain rivers and harbors, not in the West only, but on the Atlantic coast as well as in the West, have been stopped, and that we give no money for rivers and harbors from Maine down to Galveston. They are a different class of objects. They do not fall within the same rule of constitutional power. Almost everybody admits the constitutional power of this Government to provide for the survey and delineation of the coast of the United States for the protection of commerce. Many gentlemen do deny the constitutionality of the other works; and perhaps it is to that constitutional objection, more than to anything else, the gentleman owes the defeat of his favorite projects. I trust we shall not, because some gentlemen are disappointed in the success of favorite measures, strike down an establishment like this, conducted, as it has been, honorably to the science of the country, usefully to the commercial interests, which has met the approval of the judicious and wise of our own country, and has the ratification of the very highest indorsements which European science can give.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not understand how it can be constitutional to appropriate money to the survey of the lakes, and unconstitutional to appropriate money for the improvement of navigation upon the lakes. You can appropriate $75,000, we are told by the Senator from Maryland, and the Senator from Virginia, to the survey of the lakes; there is no objection to that; and they are giving as a reason why this large appropriation of $500,000 to the Atlantic and Pacific coast should pass, that in some other bill $75,000 is provided for the survey of the lakes. By what constitutional authority, I ask?

Mr. PEARCE. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the appropriation for the survey of the lakes is expended and applied under the authority of the engineer corps, and that is a reason why the appropriation for the survey of the lakes comes in the Army appropriation bill. As to the constitutional question, I have said nothing about that point, except what everybody knows to be the fact: that some gentlemen do not believe appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors to be constitutional. I do not hold that opinion myself, and even take pleasure in supporting some of those objects the gentleman has so much at heart; and if I do not do so now, it is for reasons that are palpable to the Senate, which influence my judgment. While I have frequently supported these appropriations I have not in every case given my vote for the objects proposed. I think they have sometimes been carried too far, and applied to objects altogether unworthy of national protection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is thrown out here as an objection to appropriations for the northern lakes, that they will probably be voted down because they are not constitutional; that many persons regard them as unconstitutional. Now, sir, that very class of persons who regard them as unconstitutional, it seems have no difficulty (although the Senator from Maryland is not one of them) in voting appropriations for the survey of the Atlantic coast. For my own part, I see no difference between voting money for the survey of a coast and voting money for an improvement of the harbors upon the coast, when both are for the preservation and protection of commerce; and especially do I see no difference between an appropriation of $75,000 to survey the northern lakes, and an appropriation of money to improve the harbors upon those lakes. We all know that the commerce upon the lakes is exposed to great hazards; that millions of property are annually destroyed for the want of safe harbors upon the lakes; and yet gentlemen urge as an objection to protecting those harbors, or protecting the shipping upon the coast, that it is unconstitutional; and still cite, as an instance why they will vote for this appropriation to survey the Atlantic coast, that a similar appropriation is to be made in another bill for the lakes.

Now, sir, it will do very well to talk in this general way, as the Senator from Maine has done, about the largeness of soul and the liberality of making appropriations, and to belittle the opposition to this appropriation, as if it were narrow-minded and illiberal. But are we to vote money on such considerations, because the Senator talks of the largeness of soul and the nobleness of this pursuit in examining the sand-bars and the rocks in the ocean, and learning the currents of the ocean, and because the Senator from Maryland tells us that it meets the approbation of the scientific world? I apprehend, if you had no coast survey at an expense of more than half a million dollars to the Government, that then the private enterprise of this country would ascertain where your harbors are on the Atlantic coast. It seems that this great undertaking, according to the Senator from Maryland, first commenced within a few years. It was not until the year 1850 that it amounted to anything. What was the condition of the commerce of this country before that time? It originated, he tells us, in Mr. Jefferson's time, and he says that I was in great error in saying it had gone on for fifty years; because nothing was really done until 1850.

Mr. PEARCE. From 1830.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But if I understood the Senator from Maryland correctly, nothing efficient was done until about 1850. The commerce of this country was carried on before that time with some hazard, doubtless, and is carried on with some hazard now. How much safer it is to-day than it was before 1850, I am not prepared to say; nor do I believe the Senator from Maine, who is so zealous for this appropriation, or the Senator from Maryland, can tell us. They tell us that these books have been published. Well, sir, I do not know how it may have been in Maryland and Maine, but I know that in the State of Illinois these books are of very little value. The chief benefit derived from them if any, is to make the mail contractors earn their money, by dragging them through the country. A more useless book for a great portion of this country was never published. The Senator from Maine talks about this as an appropriation for the whole country. The whole country! What do you mean by the whole country? Your Atlantic sea-board? Is that the whole country?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question? Have the western States no sort of interest in the commerce of the Atlantic coast, and the defense of the coast? Do not they feel that they have an interest in it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose we do, and I suppose the Senator from Maine and his constituents have some interest in the wheat and the bread with which we feed them. They ought to have some interest in it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We show it by our votes in voting for his harbors; but because the Senate struck them out, he is without scrutiny going against us.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am very glad to have the Senator's assistance, but because he voted for harbor improvements, I am not therefore to be made to vote for an appropriation of half a million dollars to a purpose for which I believe it is not needed and required by the wants of the country; nor is the opposition to this matter put upon any such ground. The Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Maine intimate that the only opposition we have to this clause is because the Senate refused to vote appropriations for rivers and harbors. I intended to move to strike out this appropriation, if some other person did not do so, days ago, before I knew whether the Senate would defeat the proposition to make appropriations for the improvement of the lakes or not; and had they voted to-night every appropriation demanded for that object, I should have moved, if some other person had not done so, to strike out a portion of this very appropriation. One is not dependent on the other at all.

If you are to go on making appropriations until the officers engaged in this coast-survey business tell us they have enough, I ask when the time will come when the appropriations shall cease? We are told by the Senator from Maryland that twelve years will be sufficient to finish it. Why, sir, there will be other points they can find to survey after twelve years; there will be other localities that they can examine, or they will go and examine the old ones over again. Even the Senator from Maine will want his coast examined again, I apprehend, by the time the dozen years have run out, to see if, by the shifting currents of the ocean, sand has not been deposited in some new place; and thus the thing will go on perpetually. It seems to be admitted now that a dozen years are to be required. Well, sir, I believe we had better begin to curtail this expense, and that this is a very good place to begin. I think that this appropriation of $250,000 for the survey of the Atlantic sea-board should be reduced to at least $100,000; and I hope that the other appropriations in the bill will be reduced proportionately.

Mr. SEWARD. It is impossible for commerce, either domestic or foreign commerce, to be carried on in this country unless there be an accurate survey and chart of the Atlantic coast and of its bays and tributaries, and of every point and part of it from Maine to the Rio Grande. This is equally true in regard to commerce on the Pacific. This survey must be accurate, it must be minute—so minute that the depth of the water off the coast for the distance of a mile, and often for many miles, at every point, must be known, and every variation in the depth of the water. Moreover, every object on the coast, of any magnitude, which may serve for a beacon by which to direct the course of the mariner, should be delineated with certainty and specified in its exact position, so that the mariner may know exactly how to enter every port, and to avoid every reef and shoal, and how to manage his craft if overtaken either by a calm or by adverse winds or by storms wheresoever he may be. To make such surveys and to reduce them to charts is a work of immense magnitude. It has to be done by somebody, because the world is interested in our commerce, and we are reciprocally interested in the commerce of the world.

The honorable Senator from Illinois tells us that private enterprise will do it. Private enterprise never did it in any country, and never will; yet it has been done heretofore with much success along parts of our coasts, as it has been done to some extent on every other important coast throughout the world. The States cannot do it, and will not do it, because deprived of the revenues derived from commerce. Some Government must do it, and therefore it must be the Government of this country or some other Government. Now, the British Government has heretofore done this work for all the Pacific ocean, and we sail by their charts throughout all the Pacific seas. The British Government has explored, and mapped, and charted every one of its colonial possessions with the minuteness which I have described. I myself, in going down the St. Lawrence river through the British territory, was able, with a chart in my hand, to describe and define every object visible from the deck of the ship, and myself alone, though no sailor or mariner, was able so to direct my course as to avoid a reef and find shelter in case of storm.

As I said, somebody will do this. If we do not do it the British Government, which is the greatest commercial nation besides ours, will do it, and we must prepare to lay open our coasts, with their bays, and our rivers, to the British surveyors to map and chart the way for themselves and for us. That is just what we have done ourselves in South America. What have we done this very session? We have authorized the President to make quasi war against the Government of Paraguay, because the President of that Republic interfered with a surveyor we sent there to explore the course of a river which the Government of that country neglected to explore. I want no such relations with Great Britain—no such dependence on her.

With regard to the manner in which this great work is done, it has indeed taken time. The only reason that it has taken time is that it was not finished, and the reason why it was always unfinished was because the Republic itself has not at any time been finished. If the country is finished now, and if it will stand fast just as it is for twelve years, then this work will be finished in twelve years; but if the country remains unfinished, and if we are to yet include the Gulf of California, or if we are to take in the islands on the shores of the Caribbean sea, then it will take still twelve years more to finish the coast survey. With regard to the manner in which this work has been done, I believe it may be said of this department that it is one—I do not say it is the only one—but it is certainly one in which there is not a sinecure, there is not a supernumerary, there is not an idle man, there is not an idle vessel, and there is not, so far as it is possible to practice economy in the affairs of Government, a dollar of waste.

Mr. HAYNE. I rise, sir, to contribute my mite in behalf of the coast survey. I regret to be compelled to do so, nor should I do so, if I should occupy the time of the Senate more than five minutes. It is a question which I think we can reach in less than five minutes. I can tell Senators, and I think with great truth, that where the Treasury of the United States will expend one dollar for this great work, it will have returned our money—ay, thousands for one. Is there a nation on the whole earth that possesses such a magnificent sea-coast, from Passamaquoddy to the Rio Grande? It is unparalleled. We have duties to perform, as God has given us this great and extensive sea-shore. I hope the Senate will not hesitate to agree to the appropriation of the exact amount which has been requested of them. If there can be a national work, one above all others that contributes to every man's pocket, if not directly, indirectly, if not immediately, mediately, that work is the coast survey. Some of my friends here from the distant West do not reflect that they could not prosper without the prosperity of their friends on the Atlantic, particularly my talented and excellent friend from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL.] He happens to live in a different section of the country from that in which I do, but I tell him emphatically he will derive as great advantage in Illinois, from this appropriation, as we will on the Atlantic border.

Under these circumstances, sir, how can we hesitate? It is a glorious work; it is a noble work; it is a work which attracts the attention of all Europe, and it gives us a moral power besides our deeds in arms which should not be forgotten. I pray the Senators not to hesitate at a few dollars. The appropriation has been reduced in accordance with the crisis, some ninety thousand dollars. It has been reduced to the smallest point.

I must say one word more. If there could be selected on earth a purer, a wiser, or a more honorable man than he who is at the head of this great work, I know not who he should be. I think that in Professor Bache we have the exact man for the place. He is the pattern of Franklin over and over. I hope Senators will think of these things, and not vote to destroy this noble work. I will not detain you, sir, a moment longer. I shall vote for the appropriation.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri, who introduced this amendment, to explain it. I have not heard a single reason given yet for the amendment, and the Senator from Missouri has not had an opportunity of explaining it.

Mr. POLK. It is simply to strike out $250,000 and insert $100,000. I would like very much to be informed by some gentleman who knows, for instance the chairman of the Committee on Finance, what was the appropriation for last year for this specific object, for carrying on the survey on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. PEARCE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that it has not been increased during the present year.

Mr. POLK. Has it been diminished?

Mr. PEARCE. The appropriations have been diminished.

Mr. HAYNE. Diminished upwards of ninety thousand dollars.

Mr. PEARCE. Seventy thousand or ninety thousand dollars, I do not recollect which; but I know it has been reduced.

Mr. POLK. It struck me that the appropriation was an exceedingly large one. All the reports made by the committees of the Senate with regard to the expenditure of public money have been based on the idea that no money was to be expended, except for the purpose of protection mainly, and in some cases for repairs. Here is an appropriation of $250,000; and, without professing to know the details of this subject, it seems to me a case in which reduction might well be made, and it ought to be made in the condition in which the Treasury now is. Among my earliest recollections is this coast survey. I was struck with the fact stated by one of the Senators—I do not recollect which one, perhaps the Senator from Georgia—in some remarks upon the floor of the Senate a few days ago, that this coast survey did not complete a given locality, but that it had to be done over again when it may be supposed that the tide and the currents may have produced a change in the channel. If that is so, this thing will not stop in twelve years, and might not in one hundred. It has been going on now for half a century. It commenced, I believe, in 1790, or the first appropriation was then made for it then, if I do not mistake.

Mr. PEARCE. Oh, no. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. POLK. I looked at it a few days ago. I am not certain about that. I know there was legislation on the subject authorizing the sending to Europe for the purpose of getting competent men to make the surveys as early as 1807.

Mr. DUNTER. The appropriation last year was $250,000.

Mr. POLK. That is the exact sum that is to be appropriated this year. I ask if this work cannot be suspended for a year? or if this is the only thing in which there can be no reduction?

Mr. PEARCE. It has been reduced.

Mr. POLK. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was the appropriation last year, according to the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance. I mention his name because I suppose he is good authority on such a question. It is the same amount now. Everything else is reduced except this.

Mr. PEARCE. Will the Senator allow me to explain?

Mr. POLK. Certainly.

Mr. PEARCE. The sum of $250,000, which was appropriated last year, was recommended this year; but, nevertheless, there has been a reduction: that is to say, items specifically mentioned which have been dropped and left out of the appropriation for the present year. One item I recollect of $15,000 has been left out. It is true the general sum—

Mr. POLK. Still the aggregate seems to be the same.

Mr. PEARCE. The aggregate is not the same. The Senator is under a mistake. I am perfectly cognizant of the fact. The Secretary of the Treasury sent around to the different Departments of the Government when about to make the different estimates, to know in what way it would be possible to retrench, and he retrenched on this subject as well as on others.

The Senator will allow me to say one word more while I am up. He made some remarks on the necessity of resurvey. I beg leave to say it is not necessary to do all that work over again, as seems to be supposed, after a few years. It may be necessary at particular points where the currents make deposits of mud to have a resurvey. The resurvey, however, is a small affair. It does not cost more than one tenth the original survey, and can never be applied to but few parts of the coast or harbors. In the general line of the coast, all of which is delineated exactly in the coast survey, the only resurvey was that of the harbor of New York, induced, I believe, by the action of the New York authorities. That survey, which was complete, cost just one tenth of the original survey; so that, although we may be compelled to resurvey particular portions of the coast, it will only be the harbors, the mouths, and the entrances of rivers, and cases of that sort; and then the resurvey will cost only about one tenth of the original survey.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I understood the Senator from Virginia said there had not been a reduction.

Mr. POLK. The answer was that the amount appropriated last year was $250,000—the same amount which is appropriated this year.

Mr. GWIN. In answer to the Senator, I will state that there has been a reduction of $90,000—$30,000 for the Florida reefs, and $60,000 in other items in the bill.

Mr. POLK. The Senator will observe that the amendment does not relate to the Florida reefs and keys; but there is a separate appropriation for that object. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance if there is any reduction in this item?

Mr. GWIN. It has been reduced there. I thought the Senator alluded to the aggregate.

Mr. POLK. I apprehend the Senator from Maryland is under a mistake. The $250,000 is for the survey of the Atlantic coast alone. The whole of the appropriations if I have added them up correctly amount to $452,000. The reduction to which the Senator from Maryland refers, and which is also mentioned in round numbers by the Senator from South Carolina, may have been in other items, that go to make up the $452,000, than the first item.

Mr. PEARCE. Yes, sir; I will tell the Senator two of the items. I do not recollect them all—but there were several items which were reduced.

Mr. POLK. Is there any reduction in the expenditure to which the appropriation covered by this amendment is applicable?

Mr. PEARCE. I will observe, if the Senator will allow me, that there are several items which go to make up the mass of all that is appropriated. One of them is this one of $250,000 for the Atlantic coast. One of those items was an appropriation for the repairs of vessels employed in the coast survey. That has been omitted during the present year. That is a portion of the sum left out. There was a sum, I think, of $15,000 also for the publication of certain charts. That has been dropped for the present.

Mr. POLK. Is there not an appropriation here of $10,000 for repairs of vessels?

Mr. PEARCE. I said they were reduced by a considerable sum—I do not know what—but in the whole $30,000 on all the different items.

Mr. POLK. The question still recurs whether there was any reduction in this particular item of $250,000, to which this amendment is offered. I must say it is not demonstrated to my satisfaction that there may not be a curtailment in this particular item, to which $250,000 are to be appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that there has been a reduction in fact, of $90,000 from last year.

Mr. POLK. Yes, sir; but that, I apprehend, will be found to be made up by a general reduction of the items.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No. Last year there was an appropriation of $30,000 for the Florida keys.

Mr. POLK. And this year there is an appropriation of $40,000 for the Florida keys.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But I understand that the whole appropriation is $90,000 less.

Mr. POLK. That is just what I am answering. I suppose on the whole appropriation that there has been a reduction, as gentlemen say, but still it is not known whether there has been any reduction on this appropriation. The Senator who is at the head of the Committee on Finance, as I understand him, said that last year there was an appropriation of $250,000 for this item. Now, when you look at the condition of the Treasury, and when you look at the fact that we are compelled to borrow, in order to get along with those things that are indispensable for carrying on the Government, it does seem to me that we might well reduce the appropriation of $250,000 to the amount that my amendment proposes. We can do that, I think, without doing very serious damage to the coast survey. Suppose this work is compelled to stop for a year, or during this commercial crisis, or until the trade of the country should fill the coffers of the country, as they were filled before this revulsion came on, what would be the dilapidation? It is said these works do not change, that they do not have to be resurveyed. If not, I can see no damage to be produced except such as may grow out of the dilapidation of the vessels used in the work. The materials are not dilapidated, and will not grow worse. The bill proposes $10,000 for the repair of the vessels. The $10,000, I take it, ought to preserve them. It seems to me the worst dilapidation would be the dilapidation of the salaries of those employed, and I submit that this is an item in which retrenchment in that respect might be applied.

Mr. MALLORY. I will answer some of these objections, and the last one first. The honorable Senator from Missouri, I presume, has not given that attention to the coast survey that he has to the general business of the Senate. He asks why we cannot reduce now, and speaks of dilapidation, and says the dilapidation would be in the salaries of those who are employed. Well, sir, perhaps the Senator from Missouri never thought of the fact, that to constitute a corps of men for the coast survey, you have got to select one man in a hundred thousand—just about. In the first place, it takes an education peculiar for the service, and great practical experience. The objection I have to his last argument is, that if you constrain the chief of the Coast Survey, who has now made his arrangements commensurate with the sum estimated to have them in the field, to discard these employes, he will not gather them together again in time to commence the work without a very great expenditure, such as would be a very bad economy here.

It has been intimated, Mr. President, that this measure is opposed by gentlemen who concede its propriety, its constitutionality, and nationality, because others will not go into their schemes, and appropriate money for the rivers and harbors of the West. I should regret if that is so; I should exceedingly regret that the Senate of the United States should, at any time, come to such a conclusion as this. It would argue a very great decay of public virtue. Why, sir, the State of Illinois is immediately interested with the coast survey. Every bag of wheat she produces is enhanced or lessened in value by all the expenses which grow immediately or are decreased by the coast survey. They are enhanced by all the expenditures of shipment, by pilotage, by insurance, and by many other expenditures which the coast survey is intended immediately to decrease.

We have a duty to perform with reference to harbor defenses, with reference to naval and military defenses, and to establish which we must have the coast survey. Now, let me state here, that the British, who, as has been well remarked by the Senator from New York, survey their own rivers and harbors and all others, were engaged here under the guns of Fort Delaware in making a survey of our own harbors as late as 1842 and 1843. In 1846, they were engaged in making a survey of Cat island upon our own coast. They survey all the world, and in many parts of our southern coast now Gall's chart for a portion of the West Indies and Florida is the standard chart by which vessels navigate the ocean. We owe something to foreign nations with reference to the coast survey as a civilized community. We owe it to civilized communities to furnish them with charts. Our self-respect will not permit us to remain idle, and let the dangers of our coast be unknown to navigators who approach them.

If there were no other work during the last year to demonstrate the efficiency and the value of this corps, I could point to the harbor of Charleston alone. It has been alluded to by the honorable Senator from South Carolina. The channel which has been there lately discovered was known to have existed a hundred years ago. It has only lately been rediscovered. Almost every month has deepened that channel; and it bids fair speedily to become the principal channel for commercial purposes to Charleston. Within the last two months, a large channel, of twenty-two or twenty-four feet of water, has been discovered, by the coast survey, leading into the sound of St. George, and making the bar of Appalachicola—near which no large ships have hitherto approached—one of the deepest harbors south of the Chesapeake. Now, if nothing else than this had been discovered by the coast survey this year, it would demonstrate its value. We cannot decrease the amount of money estimated for the reason I assigned without entailing a larger expenditure. Many of the men employed on the coast survey would be cast adrift; they would go abroad, and we could not reclaim them again.

Mr. POLK. I will state that I have the act of the last session before me, and I find that in this first item of the present bill there is no reduction; there is no reduction in the survey of the Pacific coast; there is no reduction in the appropriation for the Florida keys. The first reduction we come to is in the clause, "for running a line to connect the triangulation of the Atlantic coast with that of the Gulf of Mexico, across the Florida peninsula, $15,000." There is a reduction there of $5,000. Then, there was last year appropriated for "publishing the observations made in the progress of the survey of the coast of the United States, $15,000." That is stricken out. The appropriation for the repairs of vessels connected with the survey is $5,000 less than it was last year. That is all the reduction there is in this bill. With those exceptions, the same amount is appropriated. When the Treasury was plethoric and overflowing, it might have been very well to have appropriated those amounts; but now, when the Treasury is so lean that we have to replenish it by loans of $20,000,000 and $15,000,000, there is no reduction to be made in this matter. It seems to me very certain that it is a work to which the knife might very well be applied.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Green, Harlan, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Stuart, and Trumbull—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bledsoe, Bright, Brodbeck, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Gwin, Hale, Hamilton, Hays, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yates—36.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to carry out a clause in an act passed two years ago. It is to insert, as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the twenty-fourth section of the civil and diplomatic act of March 3, 1855, by paying the claims on the order to be assessed by Messrs. Upton and Summey, and Washington and Ma-on, commissioners under the Cherokee treaty of 1835, § 30,900.

To show that the amendment is in order, I hope the Senate will indulge me in reading the twenty-fourth section of the civil and diplomatic act of March 3, 1855. It is:

"Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That the tenth section of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, approved July 31, 1854, be carried into effect by paying the valuations ascertained and reported by Messrs. Upton and Summey, and other official assessors, as ordered by the commissioners under the Cherokee treaty of 1835 and 1836, with interest on said valuations, respectively, from the date of the said commissioners' orders for assessment; and that the Secretary of the Interior be further directed to fill the blanks in such awards as are on his files with such amounts, respectively, as may be established by proof of value satisfactory to him, and pay the same."

This makes a reference to a clause in the Indian bill of the previous session, the session of 1854. I will read that also. It refers to the tenth section:

"Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to settle and pay the award of commissioners on file for reservations, preemptions, and for rents and improvements under the twelfth, thirteenth, and sixteenth articles of the Cherokee treaty of 29th December, 1825, in pursuance of the stipulations of the third article of the treaty of August 8, 1816, the sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated."

That was the act passed in 1854. These payments were not made, and in 1855 the clause directing them to be paid was passed. They have not been paid yet, however, and on inquiry of the Secretary of the Interior, I learn that there is no money on hand. This is simply an appropriation to enable him to make the payments referred to in the act of 1855.

Mr. HUNTER. Do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that the debt was assumed by law, but no appropriation made to carry it out? Is that the reason?

Mr. CLINGMAN. There was in the Indian bill of 1854, an appropriation of the fund in these terms:

"The sum heretofore appropriated for those purposes, and carried to the surplus fund, is hereby reappropriated."

That is the act of 1854. Then this is the act of 1855:

"That the tenth section of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, approved July 31, 1854"— referring to the preceding one—

"be carried into effect by paying the valuations ascertained and reported by Messrs. Upton and Summey, and other official assessors, as ordered by the commissioners under the Cherokee treaty of 1835 and 1836, with interest on said valuations, respectively, from the date of the said commissioners' orders for assessment; and that the Secretary of the Interior be further directed to fill the blanks in such awards as are on his files with such amounts, respectively, as may be established by proof of value satisfactory to him, and pay the same."

That is the appropriation directing him to pay it, or rather that is the law; but there was no appropriation contained in it, and I learn that there is no money on hand by which he can comply with that act.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. HUNTER. This is to carry out an existing law, and I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question; and declared that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator can put it on the Indian bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. CLINGMAN. No, sir.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. It will be remembered, Mr. President, that I submitted an amendment to cut off disbursing agents, and to put that duty on the superintendent. It was suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLAY] that he would prepare an amendment which would incorporate that idea. I now offer that amendment, which was drafted by him, in consultation with several Senators, as an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the collectors of customs in the several collection districts be, and they are hereby and hereafter, required to act as disbursing agents for the payment of all moneys that are, or may hereafter, be appropriated for the construction of custom houses, court houses, post offices, marine hospitals, and other public works, at a compensation not exceeding two and a half per centum: Provided, Such percentage, in addition to the percentage received for light-houses, and all disbursements, shall not exceed $400 per annum: And provided further, That where there is no collector at the place of location of any public work, the superintendent of such public work shall act as disbursing agent without any additional compensation therefor; and all laws, and parts of laws, inconsistent with this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HUNTER. I am a little afraid that we are making it worse than it was before. What is the meaning of the two and a half per centum? I should like to hear that.

Mr. WILSON. I will explain it to the Senator. There are, I think, some forty-four persons now who receive $400 a year as disbursing agents. This amendment provides that they shall in no case receive more than $400, but shall have two and a half per centum on what they disburse, if it does not exceed $400.

Mr. HUNTER. That is right.

Mr. WILSON. It will save about thirty-five thousand dollars a year, according to my calculation.

Mr. POLK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Do I understand him that at every place where the Government expends money, there shall be a disbursing agent at a compensation of $400 a year?

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will look into the Treasury report, he will find that there are now about fifty disbursing agents; forty-four, or nearly all of them, are collectors, and receive $400 a year. There are some seven or eight persons engaged, one at sixteen dollars a day, some at eight dollars, some at five dollars, some at six dollars, some at two dollars and a half, and some at three dollars, amounting to $25,000. This amendment puts them all on this footing. They will receive $400 a year, if they distribute money enough at two and a half per cent. to amount to that, but only receive two and a half per cent. It will save $25,000 by cutting off persons who work by the day, and I think it will reduce the $17,000 paid to others nearly one half, making from thirty to thirty-five thousand dollars annually saved to the Treasury.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Is not the effect of this amendment that a collector whose salary is now $400 a year, shall distribute this money for nothing?

Mr. WILSON. He will receive $400.

Mr. MALLORY. In addition to what he receives now?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir, to distribute it.

Mr. MALLORY. If a collector of the customs now receives $400 a year, I will ask the Senator whether he will receive more under this amendment?

Mr. PUGH. The Senator does not understand. It is an addition to the salary. The only thing it does is to cut off extras.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will explain this matter. The collectors in the different ports in the United States receive salaries which are based upon their commissions; not, however, to exceed in any case the sum of $6,000 a year. In addition to that they are allowed to receive two and a half per cent. on all disbursements, not exceeding $400 a year. The effect of this is, that in the principal ports of the country, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, perhaps, and New Orleans, they are to receive $6,400 a year. The inspectors and surveyors, the duties of which offices are much less onerous, and infinitely less responsible, and do not require so high an order of intelligence and experience, receive a maximum compensation of $5,000 a year.

I should probably not detain the Senate at all, had it not been for the form in which this matter was originally introduced. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts struck at the disbursing officers at New Orleans, and New Orleans alone, for what he asserted to be a great abuse on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. I then said, and I now repeat, having more of the particulars at hand, that the system of compensation that was provided at New Orleans was by no means an exceptional case; that it existed in almost every other part of the country where the Government had buildings going on, and heavy disbursements consequent upon those buildings; that this was not at all an exceptional affair; but a system which had grown up with the very commencement of the system, which, I confess, has perhaps been carried to an extravagant extent, of erecting buildings in various parts of the country. I think it would be better to pursue the old system of hiring buildings. Be that as it may, I wish to defend not only the present Secretary of the Treasury, but the Secretary under the previous Administration, from any charge of abuse, or of favoritism in this matter.

The building in New Orleans, as I before stated, is by far the largest in extent in the country. It is not only intended for a custom-house, but it is intended to accommodate the courts, the post office, the land officers, the district attorneys, and in fact all the officers of the Government in New Orleans, with the exception of the officers of the mint. That is a separate establishment. There were two disbursing agents; one disbursing agent for the mint and the marine hospital combined, involving an expenditure last year of some three or four hundred thousand dollars for those two services, for which separate bonds were exacted; and for the disbursement of the mint, the duty was imposed upon the gentleman who was commissioner for the other building, and he has performed that additional duty without any extra compensation. As I said before, the disbursing officer of the custom-house at New Orleans is, for the time, commissioner for the building. I thought then, I think now, that although perhaps the services of one of those gentlemen might be dispensed with, yet there was no great abuse in employing two in consideration of the extreme importance of the work, and the degree of labor and responsibility attending it.

Now, sir, to show that this is an abuse not at all of a recent date, but commenced with the very beginning of this system of public buildings, I will call the attention of the Senate to a memorandum which I hold in my hand. W. W. Reed and Thomas D. Robinson were appointed commissioners for the erection of a custom-house at Bath, Maine, on the 15th July, 1852; and, if I mistake not, the Senator from Maine, who was somewhat eloquent on the subject of these abuses, or who made some remarks in relation to this particular abuse—if he did not, I beg his pardon; I think he did, and I should like to know—

Mr. HAMLIN. I assure the Senator I never attempted to be eloquent in all my life. I did call the attention of the Senate to what I thought were some abuses. At the same time, the Senator will do me the credit, I know, to state that I spoke in decided terms of commendation of the two persons at New Orleans, whom I knew personally.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will read from this memorandum:

"W. W. Reed and Thomas D. Robinson were appointed commissioners for the erection of a custom-house at Bath, Maine, on the 15th of July, 1852. It does not appear of record that they were to have any compensation, but they now claim pay at the rate of $400 per year each, and their claim is supported by the honorable Mr. HAMLIN, who says he was personally cognizant that this pay was promised them."

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, I do say so.

Mr. SLIDELL. Again:

"E. L. Hamlin, M. L. Appleton, and William C. Ham-math, were appointed commissioners to superintend the construction of a custom-house at Bangor, Maine. These gentlemen were each paid $774 66 for their service, ($2,323 98 in all), on the 19th of February, 1855."

The Senator from Maine is probably familiar with the cost of this building, to superintend the erection of which three persons were appointed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator state how long they served?

Mr. SLIDELL. They were paid on the 19th of February, 1855.

Mr. HAMLIN. When appointed?

Mr. SLIDELL. I do not know. Again:

"Robert G. Shaw and Hall J. How, in connection with the collector of the port, were appointed commissioners for the construction of a new custom-house at Boston, Massachusetts, and the compensation of each was fixed at one third of two and a half per centum on the annual amount disbursed. The gross amount of disbursements for the work was $1,001,658."

The two and a half per cent. on that, I think, is $25,000. So it appears that the commissioners of the customs at Boston, in the State of the Senator who made this charge, received $25,000 for their services.

"Walter Brown and Elisha Tibbetts were appointed commissioners for the New York custom-house. The date of their appointment does not appear. Secretary Woodbury, on coming into office, could find no record of the facts, but fixed the compensation of each at eight dollars per day for the period of actual service, and gave them a clerk and an office, and also an assistant at five dollars per day. The collector, Mr. Swartwout, was also, in connection with them, appointed commissioner, but his rate of compensation was left for Congress to determine."

"Messrs. Ringbolt and Jackson were subsequently (by Mr. Woodbury) appointed consulting commissioners, in addition to the other appointments, but without any compensation."

Now, I do not state these facts with any view at all of impeding the passage of this amendment. On the contrary, I am prepared to go as far as the Senator from Massachusetts, or any other Senator on this floor, in the correction of abuses, and shall vote for his amendment; but I will propose an amendment to it which I am sure will recommend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate. The collector at New Orleans, as I said before, receives a maximum compensation of $6,400 a year, for which he has given bond. The surveyor and naval officer receive, for very inferior service—I do not mean that they are gentlemen in point of respectability and character and talent at all inferior to the collector, for I think we have a very good set of custom-house officers at New Orleans—$5,000, and their labor is much less than, and their responsibility is not at all to be compared to, that of the collector. Now, I ask if it is right, after a gentleman who has accepted an office of high responsibility from the Government, with certain duties imposed upon him which are sufficiently onerous to occupy the time of any man, that he should not, when other and very responsible duties are imposed upon him, receive some compensation for them? I do not wish that compensation to be extravagant. I wish it to be commensurate with the degree of labor and responsibility devolved on him. The collector of New Orleans (and I merely state his case as an exemplification of all the others) will probably have to disburse, during the next year, the sum of five or six hundred thousand dollars—$350,000 for the custom-house, and $250,000, perhaps three or four hundred thousand dollars, for the marine hospital.

I ask, is it fair, is it right and equitable, to impose upon him this additional responsibility, and compel him, as I believe he is compelled by the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts—he having adopted that of the Senator from Alabama—to give additional bonds to a large amount, and then to say that he shall discharge all these duties without any additional compensation? I had drawn up an amendment—I cannot put my hand on it at present, but can replace it in a moment. I will state the substance of it. It is, that in imposing these duties, a commission not exceeding one fourth of one per cent., under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, should be allowed to these disbursing officers for the additional responsibility and labor imposed upon them. In the case of the collector at New Orleans, it would probably give him for the next year twelve hundred and fifty dollars; the year after it would give him less. Perhaps I underestimate the amount of duty imposed upon him, because he is also the disbursing officer of the mint. At the same time I wish to say that two more honorable and respectable gentlemen, worthy in every respect, do not exist in any part of the United States than Messrs. Penn and La Sere; and on the part of Mr. La Sere, who happens now to be accidentally in Washington, I am authorized by him to say that he has not the slightest objection to the passage of this amendment; that, if he had the honor of holding a seat on the floor of the Senate, he would very probably vote for it, as I do. I will assure those gentlemen on the other side, that, wherever they can point out an abuse, or suggest any mode by which the expenses of this Government can be reduced, they will find no more hearty coöperator than they will in me. I shall move that amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I hope he will accept it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not know why the Senator from Louisiana should have drawn me into the remarks which he has seen fit to submit upon the present occasion. He has read or quoted twice from minutes which he has in his possession in relation to officers who were appointed at Bath and Bangor, in the State of Maine. Now, I have not seen what the reporters said of me the other day; but if the Senator from Louisiana will have the interest to look there, he will see that I stated distinctly, on the occasion to which he referred, that I thought this was an abuse that had insensibly grown upon us, and I did not attribute it in any degree to this Administration.

Mr. SLIDELL. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, sir, I want to allude to those particular cases with which he has connected my name. One is Bath, where there were two commissioners appointed at $400 a year each, making $800 in the aggregate. They alternated, and received about two dollars and a half a day each for their services; or, doing duty all the time, about a dollar and a quarter a day. I am free to confess that I recommended the appointment of those two officers at that compensation, and if there is any abuse in that, I am perfectly willing to share it.

Then, sir, in the case of Bangor, I recommended, I think, at that day, the appointment of three persons who served as commissioners there, and who received about $2,000 in all. My recollection is, they served about three years, or in other words got about seven hundred dollars each, they alternating, for three years' service. If there is any abuse in that, I am willing to share the responsibility of it. I ought to state that the commissioners appointed at Bath were never paid one dollar, never one farthing, never one mill; though

I have no doubt, from an examination of the case as it is now being examined by the Department, that when they fully understand it they will pay them the $400, which sum pays the commissioners, men of high intelligence, men of high integrity, about a dollar and a quarter a day for the services which they gave on that occasion. I do not think that is a very extraordinary case, or one which would justify the logging of my name into this debate.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana, that in bringing this subject before the Senate, I had no desire to cast any reflection upon the gentlemen who fill these positions, for I have not the honor of their personal acquaintance. I saw, Mr. President, that in the House of Representatives there was a very earnest debate upon a proposition to appropriate $350,000 for the custom-house at New Orleans. In looking into the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, I saw the return made that one of those gentlemen who acted as disbursing agent received thirty-two dollars a day, the other sixteen dollars. I made that statement. The Senator from Louisiana corrected me. I find that the Senator from Louisiana was right, as I had no doubt he was when he did correct me. I was led into error by the statement of the Secretary himself. Here it is plainly stated.

Now, sir, I wish to say in regard to this amendment, that I have moved it without any personal feeling. If it had been in any other portion of the country I should have made it. I think it unnecessary, for the money that we distribute in that quarter, that we should pay $9,000 annually to two disbursing agents. I think the collector can perform that duty without any difficulty; and as he receives a large compensation, I think he may do it without any addition. I will say to the Senator that I cannot accept his amendment. I do not know that it is not in itself fair, and I will make no opposition to it in this special case. I find, however, that at Charleston, South Carolina, where we propose to appropriate $300,000 by this bill, the collector of that port has a smaller salary, I think, than the collector at New Orleans, and is disbursing agent, and receives only $400 for it.

However, the Senator says he is in favor of the amendment, and is ready to go as far as I will go, or any of us on this side of the Chamber, for economy. I am glad to hear it. I am free to say I intend to point out all the cases I can that I think will save money, and to vote for all that are pointed out, come from what source they may. It so happens that I have no abuses to advocate, having never in modern times belonged to a "healthy political organization." I have no abuses of any of the parties for the last dozen years to defend here; for I happen to belong to a party that never had the privilege of bestowing any of the patronage of the Federal Government.

Mr. GREEN. And I hope never may.

Mr. SLIDELL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow this matter to pass over for a moment, so that I can put my hand on the amendment I intend to offer?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. SLIDELL. I take this occasion to say that I am happy to be informed I misapprehended the tenor of the remarks made by the Senator from Maine some days ago. I thought that he had joined the Senator from Massachusetts in his denunciation of what he was pleased to call abuses of the Government. I merely wish to say that he tells me I mistook him, and of course I withdraw what I said on that subject.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to move the reconsideration of a vote taken two days ago, which, unless it is entered now, cannot be considered. It was a vote that was taken here on an amendment to confine the Post Office advertising to one paper in the city of Washington. I desire to move a reconsideration of the amendment. I voted for it.

Mr. HALE. I think we should cut them all off.

Mr. CAMERON. I think not. I make my motion, that it may be entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator refer to an amendment to this bill?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am directed by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office to propose an amendment with a view to keep up the present clerical force in the Patent Office unless there should be a general act passed upon that subject during the present session. I am informed that the falling off of business has so crippled the resources of that establishment, that they have been compelled to reduce the clerical force, and have done so as far as they could, and it is necessary to make a small appropriation to supply the deficiency that they may keep the regular order of business going on. I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment. I consulted with the Secretary of the Interior, and he said the amount proposed in it would be ample. If we should pass a general law this session on the subject, it is provided that it shall not take effect at all. I hope we shall do it before we get through. The amendment is to add, at the end of the first section:

For payment of expenses in administering the patent laws, or so much thereof as may be necessary to provide for maintaining the same clerical force which is now employed in the Patent Office, $20,000: Provided, That this provision shall not take effect if a general law upon the subject of patents and the Patent Office shall be passed at the present session of Congress.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. YULEE] moved an amendment which, as it was in the nature of legislation, it seems was voted down, to raise the fees so as to enable the Patent Office to support itself. Now, sir, I should prefer the amendment of the Senator from Florida to this one. This is designed to put this office upon the Treasury, and to begin with an appropriation of $20,000 to support the clerks. I shall vote against this amendment, and if the Senator from Florida should renew the one he before offered, I will vote for it. He can renew it in the Senate. I think it much safer and better to raise the fees and make it self-sustaining than to begin by quartering it on the Treasury.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to debate this matter, but it is reported from that Department that there is a great falling off in the receipts of the Patent Office. Every one knows that there is a general prostration of the mechanical business of the country, and because there is such a prostration of business the Senator from Virginia proposes to tax these mechanics, who invent something extraordinary, in order to make up for the losses the Department sustain this year. This is a mere temporary appropriation for a single year. If we pass the general bill giving patentees an opportunity to have greater facilities for the transaction of business, I should consent to raise the fees. The committee have reported a bill for that purpose; but the Senator from Virginia wants us to raise the fees without giving any of the facilities that the bill provided for transacting the business and keep up their expenses the same as if they had not raised the fees. I do not think it is always best to tax the laborers for everything, for their misfortunes as well as their inventions.

Mr. YULEE. As I stated the other day, one or the other of these amendments is indispensable. We must either make an appropriation to enable the office to maintain its organization, or we must increase the fees to enable it to furnish the means. I will state, upon the authority of the Commissioner of Patents, that there are now vacant the places of several examiners, assistant examiners, and clerks. These vacancies have been made and continued in consequence of the deficiency of means to pay salaries. The effect of that, as he states in a note to me, is that the business of the office cannot be executed with the dispatch necessary to the interests of applicants for patents. A further discharge of clerks will be necessary unless some relief shall be afforded by the legislation of this session, either by an appropriation or an increase of fees that will enable them to support themselves. I had despaired of the possibility of passing, at this session, or, if it passed through this House, of its passage through the other, of the general bill to which the Senator alludes. I have no hope of it at all now. A few days only remain of the session; and very few of the appropriation bills have been acted upon. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will either adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, or permit me now to substitute for it the amendment I proposed the other day, and which I offered at the instance of the committee. Is it practicable to do so?

Mr. HALE. If I mistake not, when the Senator from Florida was speaking the other day as chairman of the Committee on Patents, he stated the deficiency then to be something like three or four thousand dollars.

Mr. SIMMONS. It turns out to be more.

Mr. HALE. And the Senator from Rhode Island objected to the amendment that he offered, inasmuch as it proposed to raise over thirty thousand dollars to supply a deficiency of $3,000.

Mr. YULEE. The Senator will allow me to say to him that that $3,000 deficiency was for a part of the year reported by the Secretary of the Interior, and was derived from his report. Since then I learn the deficiency has increased to $15,000, and will go on increasing, unless some change is made in the character of the fees.

Mr. HALE. I am inclined to think there is something rotten in the management there. I remember that, when the subject was up the other day, something was said about amending the tariff; it was said—I thought very justly—that it would not do to regulate our duties—it was the Senator from Virginia who said it—on imports by the experience of the past year, which was a year of great revulsion, and that we ought to leave them to themselves until next year; that it would be an unsafe system to undertake to raise the revenue upon the business of the last year. I suppose the same philosophy will apply to the Patent Office that will apply to custom-houses; and I think the best way is to leave the Patent Office as it is. I think that one reason why—no, I will not say I think so—but I have had my doubts whether one great reason of business falling off is not that political considerations have influenced the appointment and the turning out of Commissioners there, and the appointment of examiners confessedly without the qualifications necessary for the office. I may be mistaken about it; and, if I am, I will take it all back when satisfied of it; but I understand that the last Commissioner, who was a most faithful, intelligent, and efficient officer, had to give way because he wanted to administer it as a Patent, instead of a political office. He would not consent to be made a tool of, and turn out the best examiners, and put in politicians who knew nothing but politics in their place; and, because he would not do that, he had to walk the plank. The result is found in the present condition of the Patent Office. These are my opinions and I am unwilling to give them another dollar.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to waste my strength in defending the Patent Office. I have never heard of any complaints of the character of which the Senator from New Hampshire speaks. I do not suppose I hear these political complaints as much as he does. I was told by the Secretary of the Interior, and by the Commissioner of Patents, that there was a deficiency in that office. I objected the other day to a partial revision of the patent laws, by increasing the fees, and refusing a return of a portion of the money, which now takes place, under a severe pressure of business in moneyed affairs. I found that my views were agreed to by the Senate, and that amendment was rejected. I was perfectly willing, if gentlemen pass the bill which will make it a self-sustaining establishment, to make a temporary appropriation that should keep up the present force, and that is all that can be done. If $20,000 is not required, it cannot be spent under the provisions of this amendment; and if we should succeed in passing the general bill, none of the money will be expended. If the Senate wants to embarrass the Patent Office, it can do so.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have now got the amendment that I referred to a few moments ago in relation to disbursing officers. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, by striking out from the words "public works" to the words "and provided further," and insert

Such compensation, not exceeding one fourth of one per cent, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem equitable and just.

So that the amendment will read:

And be it further enacted, That the collectors of customs in the several collection districts, be, and they are hereby, and hereafter, required to act as disbursing agents for the payment of all moneys that are, or may hereafter, be appropriated for the construction of custom houses, court-houses, post offices, marine hospitals, and other public works, such compensation, not exceeding one fourth of one per cent., as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem equitable and just: And provided further, That where there is no collector at the place of location of any public work, the superintendent of such public work shall act as disbursing agent without any additional compensation therefor; and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Will it be in order for me to move to strike out from line two hundred and thirty-one to line two hundred and forty, being the appropriation for the completion of the Washington aqueduct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition of the Senator would be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. There is a great deal of talk here about economy, and curtailing public expenditures, and the necessity of appropriations merely for the continuance of works; to prevent the dilapidation of works already commenced, and all that. If you will examine this bill, you will find that from line two hundred and thirty-one to line two hundred and forty, there is an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the completion of the aqueduct, to bring water to Washington city. I do not intend to make a speech; but the engineer—Mr. Meigs, I believe he is commonly called—told me the other day, before our committee, that of the whole amount of water to be brought into this city by the construction of the aqueduct, the Government would not require more than one fifth or one tenth of it for its purposes. Its cost will amount to some four or six millions by the time it is completed. I want to know where is the great necessity for the construction of this work at this particular period? The Treasury is bankrupt; we are borrowing money in order to meet the necessary expenses of the Government; and yet here is a simple proposition to appropriate $1,000,000 to bring water to Washington city. The Government does not need one tenth of the water intended to be brought by the aqueduct, and if it should not be brought at all, we should still have plenty of water here to supply all the wants of the Government.

In addition to that, in the construction of our buildings here, we appropriate large sums and pay extravagant prices to make them all fire-proof; and after we have constructed them and made them fire-proof, it seems we must expend six or eight or ten million dollars to bring water into the city to preserve them from destruction by fire! So far as the consumption of water is concerned, for ordinary purposes, there is plenty of it here. As this is a time to retrench, as the Treasury is bankrupt and we are borrowing money and paying six per cent. on it, it seems to me that this expenditure might be gotten clear of. I therefore move to strike it out of the bill. I have no idea that the motion will be agreed to—none in the world; but I want to make a record on it; and I am in hopes that those gentlemen who are for it, and who intend to continue it, will have the moral courage to give us the yeas and nays upon my motion, if they intend to sustain it in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to strike out the following clause:

"For the completion of the Washington aqueduct, $800,000; and in addition thereto, so much of the appropriation of $250,000 for paying existing liabilities for the Washington aqueduct, and preserving the work already done from injury," contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1857," approved 18th August, 1856, as may not be required for said purposes."

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think there is a more abused word in the English language than "economy." I can scarcely imagine a greater abuse of the word than that which is now applied. Whether Congress should have undertaken to make an aqueduct or not, is a question which might have led to long argument. That question, however, is closed. They have progressed so far in the completion of the aqueduct, that to stop where they are would certainly be the worst economy in the world. They had better complete it, if they were going to sell the work, than stop where they are. They have progressed by sections, which are useless as they stand, but will be very useful if completed. The water will certainly be in excess over what is wanted for public buildings. After the water is introduced, if the Government choose to make a speculation out of it, I suppose they can sell it to the uses of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and that it will be a very good speculation in that form.

Nor do I think that the only purpose for which water may be introduced is the extinguishment of fire and the supply of the public buildings. The health and comfort of members of Congress, and of other employees of the Government, is to be considered. The health of this city, as it is now built up, requires a large amount of water, and underground drainage, and sewers, in order that we may not be subjected to such diseases as visited one of the hotels last year. It is useless, however, to argue the policy or the propriety of stopping the work on the aqueduct now. It is a thing which the Government undertook to do, and with which the Senator from Tennessee, like myself, had no connection. The question is now whether we shall complete the work which has progressed too far for us to stop.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Sometimes the construction of terms is brought about by very different considerations. If the term "economy" is abused in the sense in which I use it, I might be censured for the use of that term. I think it would be economy here to-night for the Government to abandon this work, and throw away every dollar it has expended upon it. After it has expended this $1,000,000 in the completion of the work, there will still be a continued expense in keeping it up, and keeping this city supplied with water. The idea of the Federal Government dealing out water to those who may want it, with a view of making a profit on it, is rather utopian to my mind. It seems to me there is no economy in that construction of the term. The idea of the Government erecting water-works and selling water out to the different cities, with a view of making money! Did this Government ever commence a speculation of that kind but what resulted in total loss of the expenditure? Can there be a single instance found? The idea of the Government speculating in water-works and making a profitable investment, seems to me to be a very strange notion of economy. My own honest conviction here to-night is, that it would be better for the Government to abandon this whole concern. It will take a long time before the pipes rot; they would not decay much while the Treasury is exhausted and we are talking about the revenues; the aqueduct is constructed of brick and substantial material that will not rot. We might suspend the work upon it for a short time, until we see what the receipts into the Treasury amount to; and whether it will be necessary to increase the taxes on the people to carry on the Government. I do not think, if we were to suspend it until that could be ascertained, that it would cause any great delay or any great expenditure. I believe it would be profitable, and the safest investment for the Government, to appropriate a certain amount of money to get clear of the whole work, and authorize it to be sold. If we had been so disposed, it would have been very easy for us to have constructed machinery somewhere on the Potomac, of sufficient capability to supply all the water the Government might want. Such a work could have been constructed and kept up for one tenth or one twentieth, or perhaps one thirtieth, the amount the present plan will cost.

Sir, this appropriation is not based on the interests of the Government, but on the convenience and wants of the people of Georgetown and Washington. We might as well talk about the thing seriously. What amount of water do we need here? Is it necessary to construct water works, to cost some six or eight or ten million dollars before they are finished, to supply the Government with what water it wants about the public buildings in Washington city? Can anybody think so? While we are talking about economy, while the Government is in great straits, while we are talking about half a dozen wars with all the southern Republics, and Great Britain thrown in, (which, by the by, has heretofore been considered a nation of some importance,) while we are borrowing $35,000,000, while the receipts are falling off, the people complaining, the expenditures of the Government, still increasing—yet, when it is proposed to cut off a simple item of a million dollars for water-works, the stoppage of which can injure nobody, and especially the Government, it is said, "oh, this is not the place; that is a bad notion of economy." I refer to this, not with any feelings of personal unkindness; and the Senator from Mississippi knows it. It is a mere difference in construction. He thinks that to strike out this item would be an abuse of the term "economy." Now, it seems to me that we could get clear of that single clause of a million dollars. That is something. If we should cut down a million dollars here, and five hundred thousand dollars somewhere else, and two hundred and fifty thousand dollars somewhere else, and if we should go on at that rate, in a short time we can bring down the expenditures of this Government within the receipts under the operation of the present tariff.

While I am up, I will call attention to another item which has been reported by the Committee on Finance:

"For continuing the grading and planting with trees the unimproved portions of the Mall, $10,000."

That is a very great work of necessity, is it not? I want to know whether the Senate referred that subject to the Committee on Finance? The question was considered here to-day whether a committee had any authority to report anything to the Senate, unless the subject-matter was first referred by the Senate to the committee. When did the Senate refer the question of the improvement of the Mall to the Committee on Finance? Here are $10,000 appropriated for continuing the grading and planting of trees on the Mall. How long has the Mall been in its present condition? Very nearly since God Almighty created the globe. It has, at least, been in that condition very nearly since this Government commenced; and now, all at once, we have got into a great strait for grading and planting trees, and continuing the improvement of the Mall. This is the way we are going along with economy and retrenchment!

Well, sir, here is another little item. I know the Senator from Mississippi and myself will not agree upon that, for he offered an amendment, the other day, to make it $1,100,000 instead of $750,000:

"For the United States Capitol extension, $750,000."

That is a work of great necessity, is it not? With three wars in prospect, Great Britain to come along in the lead, the Treasury exhausted, your tariff too low, here are $750,000 appropriated for the extension of the Capitol. We have expended a large sum already upon that extension. In this connection, I will say that I would vote more cheerfully this night for an appropriation of money to pull down these extensions and haul them away, than I would vote for a single dollar to continue them. Look at that old Hall of the Representatives, which comports with our ancient notions of republican simplicity, plainness, and grandeur; compare it with that new Hall which you have constructed, and how does it compare? I expect, for convenience of the times, that we shall have to convert that old Hall—a representation of the fathers of the country—into a grocery, or make a saloon of it, or something of the kind. There is that Hall lying waste which would have answered the purposes of this Government, and which corresponded, too, with our notions of republican simplicity, for the next one hundred years. By a little remodeling and taking out some of these partition walls, this Senate Chamber could have been made capacious enough to have contained everybody that desired to witness and hear what was transpiring in the Senate Chamber. But there are a set of cormorants, contractors, stock-jobbers—I will not stop there—plunderers of the Federal Treasury, that hang around, and can make programmes, and draughts, and drawings, and all that description of things, and who appeal to members—Senators and Representatives—to do this and do that by way of maintaining the national dignity and character. You must do something in the way of sculpture, something in the way of architecture, something in the way of magnificent buildings, to keep up our importance and maintain our character abroad, so that they can obtain jobs, contracts, speculations, and make employment out of the Government, and swindle it of thousands, from which no real good can result.

Look at that new Hall of the House of Representatives, and then recall the description given of it by my distinguished friend on my left, [Mr. Houston,] in his remarks on the subject the other day. He was speaking about the god-ness of Liberty. I did not know he was such a critic before. I do not make any pretensions of that sort, but it struck me with some force that he was a critic. He was speaking about the unnatural attitude and the position of the figure intended to represent the goddess of Liberty. He disclaimed, however, very gallantly, taking any undue liberties with the goddess; but his criticism, I thought, was merited upon all the gorgeous gilt thrown about the new Chambers, that it does not comport with our character and dignity as a free people. We talk about republican simplicity. Our public buildings should be erected upon a plan that should combine utility, while, at the same time, consulting appearance, to some extent.

Here are three appropriations, of $1,000,000 for water-works; $10,000 for the Mall—a work of great necessity—and $750,000 for the extension of the Capitol. Let me ask every Senator here, and every one that hears me, does the Government need the expenditure of this money now? Would it not be better, coming up to the strict meaning of the term "economy," so far as that is concerned, to dispense with these extensions, to omit this improvement of the Mall, and let the water-works go where they may, or pay something to get clear of them, than continue them, and make these appropriations at the present time? But even if we are disposed to continue these works, would it not be prudent and judicious to suspend them for the present, until we can see what receipts will be in the Treasury under the operation of the reduced tariff? If we go on making these heavy appropriations, the argument will come in upon us, with tenfold force, to increase the tariff, and make the duties higher. We know this will be so.

We now see that the expenditures of the Government have run up to $75,000,000. Let me say to Democrats, Know Nothings, and Black Republicans, in the Senate Chamber of the United States, to-night, if the expenditures of this Government are not arrested, in 1860 the party that stands by and maintains them will be run over by the same irresistible avalanche that swept over the country in 1840. I am no prophet, nor the son of a prophet; but if these things are not arrested, like causes will produce like effects; and I tell you, when agitation ceases in the country, in reference to Kansas and negroes South and negroes North, and the public mind can be brought to consider these vast expenditures of the Federal Government, the party that stands by them and maintains them will be run over with an irresistible current, in 1860. I intend, so far as I am concerned, that my skirts shall be clear of these unnecessary, extravagant, and profligate appropriations of the people's money by the Federal Government. I believe them to be so. I do not intend to be personal to anybody; but I believe them to be so; I know them to be so. Here, then, are three little items, by the striking out of which, we can bring down the expenditures of this Government over a million and three quarters of dollars. When it is proposed to do so, however, we are told this is not the place for retrenchment; these works should go on; we are committed to them. You may even go into the States and find works for which the Government have commenced unnecessary appropriations; but if there is an attempt made to discontinue them, you are told the work has been commenced, and you must not stop it, or you will lose all that which has been done. Nine times out of ten, it would be better to lose it and go no further with the thing. Here we have commenced the erection of water-works. Do not stop that. Oh, no; that must go on. Then we come to the Mall, and propose to strike out that item, and it will not do to stop that. You come to the appropriation for the extension of the Capitol, and it will not do to apply retrenchment there.

If you propose to reduce or strike out any of the appropriations for these improvements, you will have to meet the argument—I have been expecting it for some time—here are a great many men employed, and they will be turned out of employment if the proposition should be agreed to. The mere statement of the argument shows you where we are driving and tending, that the Government must make improvements in the shape of extensions of the Capitol, or the adornment of the Mall, or the erection of water-works, or the construction of a harbor, or something else—and for what? To give employment to the people—the most dangerous doctrine that ever was sustained in any government: that the Government must be the undertaker, that the Government must be the giver out of jobs for the sake of giving employment to the great mass of the people! The theory is wrong. Why do I say so? You are making the people look to the Government for employment; and just in proportion as you make the people dependent on the Government, the Government controls the people, instead of the people controlling the Government. Let the Government be dependent on the people, and let the people fall back on their own resources, on their own avocations, and not look to the Government of the United States, or even to the State governments, for employment; for just in proportion as the people look here for employment, and become dependent on the Government, State or Federal, for employment, in the very same proportion they cease to be freemen; the Government becomes paramount and the people inferior.

But we will be met here, as we are met in every attempt of this kind to reduce our expenditures, by the plea that this is not the place. Oh, no; do not touch that appropriation. When we come along to another item, and propose to reduce that, that is not the place; do not touch that. You come along to another appropriation, and propose to reduce that, and you are told, do not touch that; it is not the place to reform. Mr. President, where is the place? Has anybody ever yet found out the right place? If you happen to find the right place, the next argument you are met with is, that this is not the time to retrench. The term is unmeaning. We go along in time of peace, but that is not the time, that is not the place, and that is not the occasion. When war breaks out, and we talk about retrenchment, it is said it is no time to talk about retrenchment in time of war. Well, when will it come? It is not the time of peace, it is not the proper time in war. I wish we could get an interval between peace and war, to see if that would be the time. I do not think the time will ever come. It never will come until the voice of the people comes in upon the Congress of the United States, and speaks to them in unmistakable language what their feelings and their sentiments are on this subject. I move that from line two hundred and thirty-one down to two hundred and forty be stricken out, and then I shall move that these two other propositions be stricken out; or I would prefer that the vote should be taken on all together, if it would suit, to save time.

Mr. DAVIS. I feel somewhat gratified that the Senator has announced to us that he is not a prophet, and I hope his prophecy, so far as he has made it, will not be verified; that the fate of the Democracy does not hang on the reduction of annual expenses. I rely on the good sense of the people when they examine the gross amount expended, and inquire, also, for what purpose it was done. I hold an Administration responsible that wastes a dollar: I applaud the Administration that judiciously expends $100,000,000—the more the better, if the country is made richer by the expenditures.

The Senator also announces that his skirts will be clear when the sad reckoning which he expects in 1860 arrives. I hope better for the Democracy yet, than that we have reached the condition he speaks of. I have no fear of that crushing out. I have no fear, if the Administration disburse the appropriations honestly, and show returns for every disbursement worthy of the amount, that the people have not judgment enough to discriminate between that and the simple cry of so many dollars.

I concur heartily with the Senator in his remarks against making the Government of the United States the great almoner of the people. I concur with him entirely, that we should not undertake works and make appropriations to give employment to the people; that the Government is but the agent of the people, not to give, but to receive. It struck me somewhat curiously, in connection with an argument which the Senator made recently, that whilst he was striking so fiercely at the very idea (though I do not know that anybody ever announced it) that the Government should give work to the people, he had himself, for many hours together, harangued the Senate to show that the Government ought to give land to the people. What is the difference in principle?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Neither the Senator, nor anybody else, ever heard me harangue the Senate for hours, to give land to the people. I have harangued the Senate and the country to permit the people to take that which is theirs.

Mr. DAVIS. That is a very nice distinction. I thought the Government was the trustee for the disposition of the public land, and that it was a part of that revenue which supplied the wants of the Government. I suppose he might as well say the Treasury belonged to the people, and that money should be distributed from the Treasury. What is the difference? The Treasury does belong to the people as much as the land; and if the Government were to give employment to do work, and should have something left, it would be just that much better than dividing the Treasury—just that much better than giving away land.

There is one thing, however, Mr. President, I am in favor of giving away; and that is water, and advising the people to drink it pure, to take it simple. I am in favor of washing the streets of the metropolis of the nation; and though I would do nothing simply on that point of national pride that should elevate us to a fair comparison with any other country, I am not without the sentiment. I do glory in seeing my country advance in everything beyond all others. I do glory in seeing her capital surrounded by monuments of art that show how far our generation has progressed.

But this seems to be a point at which the Senator is startled in connection with that which he speaks of as the extension of the Capitol. Now, I do not know that anybody proposes to extend the Capitol any further than the present wings. It is the completion of the buildings which are commenced. One wing already has received the House of Representatives; the other is not prepared to receive the Senate. This money is to complete those wings to receive the committees; to receive the Senate, and give those accommodations which experience has shown the House and the Senate both require. He puts the Senator from Texas in a wrong position. His criticism—though I do not think it at all just—was not in relation to the painting of the House of Representatives. He never mistook the gilding for the goddess of Liberty. The Senator is too good a critic for that. He did find a female statue. It was that which he was describing, and not the gilding of the House of Representatives.

But the Senator from Tennessee is struck with the architectural and artistic display in the House of Representatives, and he refers to the old Hall. That old Hall is in a much higher style of architecture than the new. It was the embellishment of that old Hall, in its columns, breaking the sound, that gave back echoes, which rendered it useless for legislative purposes. The old Hall was made for beauty, the new Hall for use. That is the difference. The old Hall was made so beautiful, filled with dead points, or foci, that it was impossible to hear, all over the Hall, any speaker in any position he could occupy. These facts are familiar to the Senator, for he served in that Hall. It interfered with the deliberations; it affected legislation; it was injurious to the whole country; it was felt by every member of the House. The constant solicitation was for some change of the Hall that would fit it for hearing and speaking; and despairing of that, they used the only remedy that was possible—the construction of a new one. It is true, you may suspend the work. Both wings are covered in. They would not be injured by suspension so far. The vast material that is collected around here, and which is intended, however, to complete these wings, would suffer, and it would be liable to injury, and at last you would have the amount to spend increased by having interrupted the progress of the work. Now, I do not see the economy of that. But to take the other branch of the Senator's proposition, to tear down the wings and haul them away—would that be economy? That would involve expense. I see no view in which it strikes my mind. The Senator aptly says, however, that we view the same thing in different lights. There is no view, however, that I am able to take of the subject, which brings either of his propositions within the just meaning of economy, unless it be to stop planting those few trees on the Mall.

Mr. IVERSON. I do not rise to make a speech, but simply to state a fact of which the Senate may not be apprised, and which may have some influence upon the decision of this question. Two years ago, the House of Representatives refused to appropriate money for the prosecution of the work upon the aqueduct. After a contest between the two Houses, $250,000 was appropriated simply to preserve the work already done. The consequence was, that the contracts which had been entered into by the superintendent had to be abrogated or suspended; and at this session of Congress, claims have been presented by those contractors demanding very large damages from the Government for the injury which they sustained on account of the suspension of their contracts. Those cases have been referred to the Committee on Claims, of which I am a member, and they are now under consideration. We have not yet sufficiently looked into them to know whether they are founded in law or in equity; but at any rate, they are presented, and probably they are only a beginning of a large number that may be presented hereafter. Now, if you refuse this appropriation, what will be the result? I understand contracts have been entered into by the superintendent to complete the whole of his work, from one end of the line to the other, in anticipation, probably, of an appropriation being made. If, therefore, this proposition of the Senator from Tennessee prevail, and this appropriation be not made, we must look, of course, for applications for damages, amounting, perhaps, to quite as much as the appropriation itself.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I think the Senator from Mississippi misunderstood what I said in reference to the Senator from Texas. I understood the remarks of the Senator from Texas to be made in reference to the new Senate Hall, and I thought I so stated. It was not my intention to locate his criticism, but as I understood it I rather approved it. I pretend not to understand anything about sculpture or paintings, or the construction of halls; I do not pretend to have any taste for matters of that kind. If I come into a splendid hall, and look at it, I can tell whether it strikes me as of proper dimensions, and as being properly constructed, taken as a whole. There is something in it that pleases or displeases me. I confess that, when I went into the new Hall of the House of Representatives, it did not strike me as being so imposing, and of a style of architecture so well adapted to the American character, as the old Hall of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS. It is not as beautiful as the old Hall.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The old Hall is not gaudy; there are about it no unnecessary flourishes in gilding and painting; but there is a grandeur, a dignity, a republican simplicity about it, with which the new structure cannot at all compare. I do not care whether you call it beauty or not. I think it is much better adapted to our character. I know an objection was made that it was difficult to hear the Speaker when he was putting a question in the old Hall, and that it was difficult to hear members who were addressing the House; but it seems to me that the same means which have been resorted to in the new Hall to prevent that could have been applied as a remedy in the old Hall. The structure of the ceiling might have been altered, and in that way a remedy applied. Be that as it may, however, I do not think the reply of the Senator from Mississippi, on that point, has much to do with the remarks I made as to what had been said by the Senator from Texas.

The Senator from Mississippi seems to admit that there is one item of the bill to which I object that might be stricken out—the $10,000 for the improvement of the Mall. I infer from his remarks, though he did not say so expressly, that he thinks that is not necessary. He is, however, in favor of giving the citizens of Washington, and those persons who visit Washington, plenty of water—good, pure water, unadulterated, unmixed. Well, sir, if he were to pass a law of that character, and appropriate ten times the cost of the water-works to complete them, with a distinct understanding that the water is not to be adulterated, this city, and the comers to it, would vote down such a proposition at once, for pure water is the last thing they want. [Laughter.] That is not the article they desire. If that was to be the result of the completion of these water-works, the people of Washington would come en masse, at least two thirds or three fourths of them, and three fourths of all the visitors here, and protest most zealously, earnestly, and emphatically, against the passage of any such law that would give them water without dilution. So, I do not think there is much in that portion of the argument.

But, in reply to what I said as to the Government giving employment to the people, the honorable Senator from Mississippi wants to know if the Government might not as well give employment to its citizens as give them land. Let me ask him how much the expenditure of $10,000 for the Mall, $750,000 for the Capitol extension, and $1,000,000 for the Washington aqueduct, will add to the productive capacity, or to the revenue, of the country? Do they bring one cent into the Treasury of the United States? Do they add anything to the productive capacity of the country? You may give a man employment on the work; you may pay him for days and months and years, while he labors on it; but he appropriates what he gets from the Government to his own support, and does not add anything to the production of the country. So far as he is concerned, I have no objection to the benefit done to him; my objection is on other grounds.

But, here is an indirect attack upon the homestead policy. The Senator speaks of it as giving away land. I do not admit that proposition. You have a large amount of public domain—fifteen hundred million acres—that has been acquired by the blood and treasure of the nation. To whom does it belong? The Federal Government, it is true, holds it in trust for the great mass of the people; and the proposition of the homestead bill is not to give land away, but to permit the head of a family to settle upon and take a part of that which is his, and for which he or his ancestors, or some connected with him, shed their blood and expended their money. Yes, sir; and many of them were with my honored friend on the field of battle. I prize him much higher when I call him Colonel DAVIS than Senator DAVIS, for the brightest and most imperishable laurels that encircle his brow were won under the appellation of Colonel. Many of those gallant men who, in Mexico, fought the battles of their country by his side, now sleep in a foreign grave. The result of that war was a large acquisition of territory. That domain was acquired by the United States as a consequence of their bravery, their patriotism, and their valor, in the battle-field with him. When I propose that the descendants of those men may go upon, settle, and occupy, a part of that which was won by the blood and the valor of their fathers, live upon it, and cultivate it, so as to make a support for their wives and their children, I am told that I propose to give away the public property; that these men are here asking charities in land. No, sir; they do not ask you to give them anything; but I demand, in the name of their valor, their blood, their patriotism, and their suffering widows and children, that you let them go and take that which belongs to them, which is the price of their blood and treasure.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. If the public lands belong to the people, why do not the people take them without any authority of law? I understand the Senator to say that he has not asked that the land should be given to the people—lands to the landless, and homes to the homeless; but that he asks that the people shall be allowed to take what belongs to them. Now, if the lands belong to the people, why should they require a law to allow them to use them?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The Senator is a lawyer, and I will put a case to him. Suppose there was a trustee to hold an estate in his hands for the benefit of heirs; there are certain legal processes required to be gone through with before they can obtain possession of the estate, and use it. The Federal Government is the trustee of the public domain; but is it the owner of the soil? Is not the equity in the people? The Government being the trustee, we propose a mode according to the forms of law, of permitting the people to take that which belongs to them. Does not this Government belong to the people? Does not all the public domain belong to the people? The Government holds it in trust for the whole; and all we ask is, that you prescribe a mode by which each individual may possess himself of that which is his. Is there anything wrong in that? You have nearly seven million quarter sections of public lands; there are three million heads of families in the United States; and if you permit every head of a family to take a quarter of a section, you would still have half the domain left in the hands of the trustee to be disposed of. Is that giving? No; it is simply permitting each individual to go and possess himself of a part of that which is his, and not what belongs to anybody else. Who does he take it away from? Who is deprived of anything by permitting a man to go forward, and take a portion of that domain which is actually his? Who is deprived of any right, who is deprived of any soil by it? Nobody. But what is the effect? Leave the land as it is, and it is wholly unproductive; allow it to be occupied, and you increase its production, and of course increase the capacity of the settler upon it for consumption, and thereby increase the Federal revenue. While you do this for the Treasury, what do you do for the man himself? You give him an interest in the country; you make him a better man and a better voter; he goes to the ballot-box, and votes his own will, not that of his landlord or his master. So much for the land; so much for the pure water. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. PEARCE. I think there are about twenty-four Senators in their seats, and I do not see that we are making much progress in business. I think we had better adjourn, and I make that motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN and others. Oh, no; let us get the bill out of committee.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the debate is through, and we can take the question. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not press his motion, but will let us get the bill out of Committee of the Whole, and order it to its third reading.

Mr. PUGH. You cannot get the bill through without a great deal of debate.

Mr. PEARCE. I shall withdraw the motion if the understanding is, that we shall proceed to vote; ["Yes."] but I do not want to sit here to hear any more speeches.

Mr. PUGH. I renew the motion to adjourn. The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. PUGH. I wanted the Senate to adjourn; but if the Senate is not disposed to adjourn, I wish to say a word or two on this proposition. Before the Senator from Tennessee insists on striking out the whole clause, I hope he will permit me to perfect it under the rules of the Senate, by moving to strike out "eight," and insert "four," so as to reduce the appropriation from $800,000 to $400,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion will be first in order.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I wish to understand whether the little breeze of economy with which we have been favored, is really intended to apply to the magnificent and extravagant works of the Government in this neighborhood, or whether it is only meant to frighten those who happen to live remote from the city of Washington. The Administration began the fiscal year with $17,000,000 of surplus, and in twelve months finds a deficiency of $35,000,000. I want to know whether there is to be a reduction of a cent on these works, which are not works of necessity, which can be postponed to next year or the year after just as well, when we are told that the Government is too poor to take care of anybody else. Sir, I am utterly amazed at the presumption of the Senator from Tennessee. He is not only, it seems, ignorant of architecture, but he is ignorant of the science of geography. I had scarcely recovered my amazement at the presumption of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Illinois, who imagined that those two great empires, the States of Missouri and Illinois, had any interest in this Government comparable to the importance of rediscovering the entrance into Charleston harbor! Why, sir, the Senators do not understand geography. They forget that their States are west of the Alleghany mountains, and that the only interest they have in this Government is to be taxed. Yes, sir, under the miscellaneous appropriation bill now pending, it has gone forth as the decree did in the days of Cæsar Augustus, that the world shall be taxed, and taxed for what? Why, sir, we are watered both ways under this bill. We have not salt water in our country and we are held up to contempt for that; and then we are compelled to furnish fresh water to the people that live in the neighborhood of the salt water.

I ask if this is the rigid economy that is preached in the Cincinnati platform, or has the Cincinnati platform become a myth? Is this what your $15,000,000 of loan were for? Is this what your $20,000,000 of Treasury notes were for? You appropriate $1,000,000 a year to furnish water works in the city of Washington. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] suggests that if I will give way, he will move an adjournment. I have not quite got through my speech; but I will make the motion to adjourn myself.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 17, noes 18.

Mr. PUGH. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] is very anxious to have me quit; he wants to pass this bill; I do not want it to pass; and, therefore, I am not at all to be appeased. I want the bill defeated; I think it ought to be defeated. If you stand on the ground of economy, and say that it is necessary to bring the expenses of this Government within its revenue, there is not a single appropriation in the bill that ought to pass. It is not to carry on the Government. We have passed that bill to our hearts' content, and to the sore discontent of the pockets of our constituents. This is the miscellaneous bill; this is to put in all the odds and ends; every loose dollar that is lying in the Treasury, or can be gathered from the pockets of the people, to carry certain favorite appropriations. As I said before, I am lost in amazement at the presumption of the Senators from Missouri, and Illinois, and Tennessee, to imagine that any attempt they could make, or any of the rest of us could make who live west of the Alleghany mountains, can arrest the extravagance, the lavishness, with which the Federal Government pours out its revenues on the Atlantic coast. I know the Senator from Delaware read me a lecture for saying that; that was sectional; that was very sectional! Well, sir, I have supposed, strangely enough, that the Constitution of the United States was designed to have the same operation throughout the whole Union; but, as it is now administered, I see no benefit that is produced to the vast agricultural States west of the Alleghany mountains. As I said to-night before, they are conquered provinces under the system of abuse with which the Federal Government levies tribute from them to contribute to the aggrandizement of the Atlantic States.

Now, sir, what is this appropriation for? What is the necessity of it? Why do we want millions on millions to bring water into the city of Washington? If you had plenty of money, I should not make much objection. Although I voted against it, I said nothing while your Treasury was overflowing; but now when the time for retrenchment has come—

Mr. SEWARD. Will the honorable Senator allow me to make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. PUGH. Yes, sir, I will make the motion myself.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Crittenden, Green, Harlan, Houston, Iverson, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Pugh, Sebastian, Seward, Wade, and Yulee—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Clingman, Collamer, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Polk, Reid, Rice, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wilson, and Wright—22.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. PUGH. Well, Mr. President, I shall waive the rest of my speech until the bill comes up on its final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to reduce the appropriation for the Washington aqueduct from $800,000 to $400,000.

Mr. PUGH called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. POLK. I was requested to state that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BIGLER] have paired off.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 10, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron, Chandler, Fitch, Hamlin, Harlan, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Polk, Pugh, and Wade—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Broderick, Brown, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hale, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Kennedy, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to strike out the clause making an appropriation for the Washington aqueduct, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron, Harlan, Johnson of Tennessee, Polk, Pugh, and Wade—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Brown, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Fessenden, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Kennedy, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—35.

So the Senate refused to strike out the clause.

On motion of Mr. SEWARD (at half past ten o'clock, p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 1, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. T. M. CARSON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ART.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed Messrs. MARSHALL of Kentucky, KEITT, TAYLOR of New York, MORRIS of Pennsylvania, and PENDLETON, the select committee, to whom was referred the memorial of artists, presented by Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky.

CHICKASAW BONDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report upon the bonds held in trust for the Chickasaw Indians; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

EXPLORATIONS OF THE AMOOR.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Resolved, That there be printed ten thousand extra copies of Executive Document No. 98, being Dallas's report on the Amoor river.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. KELSEY asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Whereas, the recent acts of British armed vessels in the Gulf of Mexico and on the coast of Cuba have placed the relations of this country and Great Britain in a critical and delicate position, which may require early action on the part of Congress to uphold the rights of our citizens and the honor of our flag; and whereas, this Government is compelled to issue Treasury notes, and to borrow money to defray its current expenses, while the revenue under its present laws is wholly inadequate to pay those expenses, without making any provision whatever for paying the indebtedness already created; and whereas, the House has devoted only three days during the present session to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar to which objection has been made, thus failing to give this class of claimants a hearing upon their claims, though the entire time of members of this House is now paid for by the Government: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That it is inexpedient for Congress to adjourn without making provision for protecting the rights of our citizens and the honor of our flag on the ocean, and without making provision for repaying the money we are compelled to borrow, and without hearing that class of private claimants whose bills remain upon the Calendar, because a single objection has been made against them.

And be it further resolved, That the joint resolution requiring the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to adjourn their respective Houses die at twelve o'clock, at noon, on the 7th day of June, instant, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to suspend the rules. The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order.

Mr. COBB. I give notice that if the gentleman's resolution is received, I will offer an amendment which I have had ready to offer for several days—a simple one, without a stump speech in it—to repeal the resolution proposing to adjourn on Monday next. It reads as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution requiring the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to adjourn their respective Houses sine die on the first Monday of June next, at twelve o'clock, m., be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled, the following act and joint resolutions, when the Speaker signed the same:

Resolution for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay;

Resolution to correct an error in a certain act approved May 11, 1858; and

An act for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr.

DEFICIENCIES IN INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER stated that the business first in order was the motion to recommit the bill (H. R. No. 555) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1858.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I withdraw that motion, and move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The several amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were agreed to, with the exception of the third amendment, which was to strike out "$25,000" in the following clause, and insert "$24,900;" which was rejected:

For contingencies of the Indian department, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending June 30, 1858, $25,000.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

VOLUNTEERS' APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER stated that the business next in order was the motion to recommit the bill (H. R. No. 561) making appropriations for the support of three regiments of volunteers authorized by the act of Congress approved 7th April, 1858.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I withdraw the motion to recommit; and move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered.

The several amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered.

Mr. MORGAN demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 101, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Billingshurst, Bishop, Bocock, Bonham, Boyce, Branch, Bryan, Burnett, Caruthers, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, John Cochran, Corning, James Craig, Burton Craig, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dowdell, Edie, Edmundson, Eustis, Foley, Gartrell, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hill, Houston, Hughes, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Landy, Lawrence, Leidy, Letcher, Macfar, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Milson, Edward Joy Morris, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quimman, Ready, Reilly, Ruffin, Sandidge, Savage, Scales, Searing, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Robert Smith, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Underwood, White, Wilson, Winslow, Woodson, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, and Zollcoffer—101.

YAY-S.—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Bingham, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Cragin, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dodd, Dutrie, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Goeb, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, Hoard, Horton, Kellogg, Kilgore, Knapp, Lovejoy, Matteson, Morgan, Morrill, Oliver A. Morse, Morrill, Murray, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Portie, Purviance, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, and Israel Washburn—66.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, stated, during the call of the roll, that Mr. Watkins was detained at his room by indisposition.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEETING OF CONGRESS.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill fixing the time for the next meeting of Congress.

The bill provides that, after the adjournment of the present session of Congress, the next meeting of Congress shall be on the second Monday in November next.

Several Members objected.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I shall endeavor to introduce the bill hereafter.

Mr. MILLSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. KELSEY,] who offered a resolution a while ago, that if he were to offer a simple resolution to rescind the order for adjournment on the 7th of June, perhaps there would not be any objection.

REPORT OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I desire to present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859. Before the report is read, I wish to make a brief statement of the amendments about which the two Houses disagreed. The Senate amendments were thirty in number. The House agreed to several of them, reducing the number to twelve. The committee of conference have had three meetings. They recommend that the Senate recede from six of the amendments, that the House recede from three, that the House recede from two with amendments, and they were unable to agree about the other. I now ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on but of the House (No. 24) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1859, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate do recede from its first, sixth, eleventh, twelfth, twenty-first, and twenty-seventh amendments to the bill.

That the House of Representatives do recede from its disagreement to, and concur in, the fourth, twenty-third, and twenty-fifth.

That the House of Representatives agree to the twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate, with an amendment as follows:

At the end of said amendment add the following words: And that said clerks shall not be employed under the authority of this act after the 31 day of March, 1859.

That the House of Representatives agree to the fifth amendment of the Senate as follows:

To the clause add the following words: For Senate; and for stationery for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1859, $5,000 for the House of Representatives.

And upon the thirtieth amendment the committee has not been able to agree.

JAMES A. PEARCE,
BENJAMIN FLIZPATRICK,
LYMAN TRUMBULL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. GLANCY JONES,
JAMES JACKSON,
V. B. HORTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The first amendment of the Senate, on which there was a disagreement, was as follows:

And a sufficient sum, in addition thereto, to pay the mileage of the newly-elected members of the Senate in attendance at the called executive session, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1857; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to allow constructive mileage.

From that amendment the Senate recedes.

The fourth amendment—and the second in order of the disagreeing votes—was as follows:

For the additional compensation allowed by the resolution of the Senate of the 11th of May, 1858, to a messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Senate for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1858, $330.

That being a provision of the Senate, for one of its own officers, the House receded from it.

The fifth amendment was as follows:

For stationery for fiscal year ending 30th June, 1858, $5,000.

The House recedes from that amendment, with an amendment to add the words:

For Senate; and for stationery for fiscal year ending 30th June, 1858, $5,000 for the House of Representatives.

The $5,000 in the Senate amendment was to provide for a deficiency for stationery for the use of Senators.

The House amended by adding $5,000 for the use of the House. The House is familiar with the fact that there is a standing law providing forty-five dollars for stationery for each member for long sessions, and twenty-five dollars for each short session. I understand that the fund set apart for that purpose, for the present session, has been exhausted.

The sixth amendment is:

For miscellaneous items for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1858, $34,000.

From this amendment the Senate receded.

The eleventh amendment of the Senate was, to strike out a provision inserted by the House in the original bill, as follows:

For the compensation of the draughtsman and clerks employed upon the land maps; and reducing the appropriation from $17,000 to $8,000. The Senate receded from this amendment.

The twenty-first amendment is:

For clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and lights, at the several district land offices of the land States and Territories, to be appropriated in such manner as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest may require, $65,000.

From that amendment the Senate receded.

The twenty-third amendment, to which the House made an amendment, was as follows: the Senate added to the clause of the bill for the general purposes of the building at the corner of F and 17th streets, as follows:

And the compensation of superintendent may be allowed to the clerk who has performed, or may hereafter perform, the duties of that officer; the allowance to be made to such superintendent, with his salary as clerk, not to exceed $25.00.

The House amended by striking out the words "has performed or," making the operation of the amendment prospective only. The committee recommend that the House recede from its amendment.

The twenty-fifth amendment was as follows:

For services of special counsel, and other extraordinary expenses, in defending the title of the United States public property in California, $40,000.

From this amendment the House receded. When I say the House receded, of course I refer to the House managers of the committee of conference.

The twenty-sixth amendment was:

For the employment of such number of clerks, not exceeding three, by the district attorney of the northern district of California, as may be necessary to transcribe the record of the district court, in land cases, upon which appeals have been or may be taken to the Supreme Court, such sum as may be necessary is hereby appropriated, provided the compensation shall not exceed $150 a month for each.

The House amended this amendment by adding a provision that it should not take effect before the 31 of March, 1859.

The Senate agreed to the amendment of the House.

The twenty-seventh amendment of the Senate was as follows:

For the reasonable expenses of the late and present district attorneys for the northern district of California, for assistance in their office, such sum as is to be paid out of the judicial fund, if such expenses shall be approved by the Attorney General: Provided, That those expenses shall not exceed $300 per month: And provided further, That this appropriation shall be applicable only to the present fiscal year and the next succeeding fiscal year, which will terminate on the 30th day of June, 1859.

The Senate receded from this amendment.

This brings me to the last amendment, upon which the committee could not agree: The House appended to the bill, in the form of a second section, the following clause:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no part of the amount appropriated by any act of Congress for the service of any one fiscal year, shall be used for or applied to the service of any other year, nor be transferred to or used for any branch of expenditure than that for which it may be specifically appropriated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to appropriations for the present or next fiscal year.

The Senate amended by striking out the words inserted by the House, and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following:

Hereafter, the estimates for the various Executive Departments shall designate, not only the amount required to be appropriated for the next fiscal year, but also the amount of the outstanding appropriation, if there be any, which will probably be required to be used for each particular item of expenditure.

The committee of conference upon the part of the House could not agree with the committee on the part of the Senate in this amendment after three several meetings.

As a member of that committee upon the part of the House, I concurred, in my own private judgment, with that of the Senate upon this amendment; but as a member of this House, feeling it to be my duty, acting as I did in my representative character, in consequence of the very decisive vote of the House I did not feel at liberty to recede. The Senate committee would not recede. The committee, therefore, agreed to report to the House the fact that they had failed to agree upon this amendment.

Mr. JACKSON. If the report of the committee of conference, of which I am a member, shall be adopted by the House, there will be but one matter of disagreement between the two Houses, which is in reference to this last amendment of the Senate. The Senate struck out a provision in the bill, which was inserted on motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and inserted a substitute therefor. I desire to submit a motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment; and I do so for the purpose of expediting the business of the session. We are all anxious to adjourn on next Monday. This legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill must be passed. If this single amendment hangs fire much longer between the two Houses, we may be compelled to prolong the session. I desire, therefore, to test the sense of the House upon this amendment, and shall move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Can that motion be made now?

THE SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Georgia cannot be entertained until the report of the committee of conference has been disposed of.

Mr. JACKSON. If the report of the committee of conference be agreed to, will the motion then be in order?

THE SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. JACKSON. I give notice, then, that if the report of the committee of conference be agreed to, I shall submit the motion to recede from the disagreement to that Senate amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I simply desire to give notice that if the report of the committee of conference be agreed to, I shall move that the House insist on its disagreement.

Mr. RUFFIN. I desire to ask a question of my friend from Pennsylvania. There seems to be an appropriation inserted by the committee of conference of $5,000 for stationery for members. It seems the Senate has put in an appropriation of $5,000 for stationery, and that the committee of conference have put in a like appropriation of $5,000 for the House. I want to know how this amount becomes necessary? I should like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania explain.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I will answer the question with great pleasure. Before the meeting of the committee of conference I received an estimate from the Clerk of the House informing me that that amount would be necessary for the present session to pay for the stationery of the members. A deficiency to this amount had arisen, and I thought it better to put it in the appropriation bill in preference to passing a joint resolution, which I had in my desk ready to offer. The sum appropriated for this purpose at the last session

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 163.

was expended, as I understand, by the Clerk of the last House.

Mr. RUFFIN. I want to know how it came to be exhausted?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I cannot answer that question. The present Clerk reports that there is no money in hand for the purpose stated. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order, and for the purpose of presenting to the House a character of legislation which has crept into appropriation bills of late, not through the instrumentality of either House, but through the instrumentality of conference committees. A conference committee has no right to introduce new matter into an appropriation bill that has been referred to it on disputed amendments.

The SPEAKER. The chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not stated my point of order fully. I desire to state it a little more distinctly. The appropriation for the Senate, in this case, is one single proposition. I raise the point that the conference committee cannot introduce a new and distinct appropriation. The House has taken no action on the new matter introduced.

Mr. EDIE. Has not the previous question been called?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was not aware of that. This appropriation has never been discussed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and the rule requires that all appropriations shall have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It has never been discussed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; it has never been discussed, either in the House or in the Senate. That being the fact, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order in this bill; and I make the point purely because of the principle involved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order. It is perfectly competent for a committee of conference to report an amendment, or to agree, or to disagree, to an amendment with an amendment. The gentleman from Alabama will remember that, in this House, the bill which has given rise, perhaps, to more feeling and discussion than any other considered here, was matured, from beginning to end, in the committee of conference.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Chair does not reply to my point as I make it. I do not pretend to say that a committee of conference cannot agree with an amendment; but then the amendment must be of the subject-matter referred to the committee. Here the committee report a new appropriation, and not of the subject-matter referred to it. The instance the Chair has cited is not against my position. The report of the committee was precisely of the same subject-matter that was referred to them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the point of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call the attention of the Chair to this point. This is an appropriation which has not been discussed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Has the committee of conference more power than the House? The House could not pass the appropriation until it had its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the latter branch of the gentleman's point of order; and his decision is predicated upon the uniform practice of the House, with which the gentleman from Alabama must be familiar, that appropriations recommended by the committee of conference are not required to be discussed in the Committee of the Whole. The bill has passed beyond that stage.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have only a word to say in reply to that.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I object to this discussion, unless I am allowed to reply. The previous question has been called.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing that the gentlemen shall be allowed to reply to me, if he can.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Is it in order for the committee of conference to make a report on some matters referred to them, and to disagree to others?

The SPEAKER. It has been the uniform practice of the committees of conference to report as many amendments as they choose. It reduces the disagreement between the two Houses.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof, the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. I now move that the House recede from its disagreement to the thirtieth amendment left out of the report; and I desire to say a word or two on it. I will not detain the House longer than five minutes. I ask first that the Clerk read the clause inserted by the House, and the one which the Senate proposes to substitute for it.

The Clerk read the House clause, as follows:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no part of the amount appropriated by any act of Congress for the service of any one fiscal year shall be used for or applied to the service of any other year, nor be transferred to or used for any branch of expenditure than that for which it may be specifically appropriated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to appropriations for the present or next fiscal year."

The Senate amendment, as a substitute for the House clause, was read, as follows:

"Hereafter the estimates for the various Executive Departments shall designate not only the amount required to be appropriated for the next fiscal year, but also the amount of the outstanding appropriation, if there be any, which will probably be required to be used for each particular item of expenditure."

Mr. JACKSON. I desire to call the attention of the House very briefly to the point of difference between the Senate and the House, in view of those two provisions. It will be seen that the provision of the House amounts to nothing in the world practical, because it does not apply to one dollar of the money appropriated by that bill. The proviso says that it shall not take effect for the next two years. The law, as it now stands, provides that all the money not used in the next two years shall go into the surplus fund, and shall not be applied without reappropriation. Therefore, it is not practical as applied to this bill. I say that the amendment is useless, and that the House should recede from it. It is not worth a snap of my finger as regards the money appropriated in this bill.

Mr. SICKLES. I desire to inquire from my friend from Georgia, what would be the effect of striking out the proviso to the House clause? Would it not then apply to the existing bill?

Mr. JACKSON. Of course it would then apply, but I understand that that cannot be done now. It would be then practical legislation; but as it now stands it is not practical legislation. It is incongruous to the bill, and would not affect a dollar of the appropriations contained in it. Therefore, the two Houses should no longer disagree in regard to it.

Further, Mr. Speaker, if it were even practical legislation, and applied to the appropriations in the bill, it is wrong. Why do I say that? For the reason that, if it were adopted it would cause the suspension, on the 1st of July, of all the public works of the country, where the appropriations were not expended, but were not reappropriated. That would be the practical effect of it, and I want to know whether any man wants that to be done? My friend from Georgia [Mr. SEWARD] has a deep interest in a work in his State; and would he like, when the 30th of June came, and while the appropriation was still unexpended, to have the work stopped and the men discharged because Congress had not appropriated the money?

Again, the other part of the House amendment requires that there shall be no transfer of money appropriated from one branch of the public service to another. I say that that is wrong, as to the War Department. The law now authorizes the War Department to transfer appropriations for forage and supplies from one object to another. Indian hostilities break out in one section of the country. Money is appropriated to suppress them. They are suppressed. Some of the money is left in the Treasury. During the recess of Congress Indian hostilities break out somewhere else. By the law, as it now stands, the War Department can transfer any amount of means appropriated for the purpose of suppressing these hostilities anywhere; and this amendment would prevent such a necessary discretion. In my opinion the amendment is wrong, even if it were practicable; but I think it does not affect the amount appropriated in this bill at all. The conferees on the part of the Senate—consisting of two Democrats and one Republican—were, I believe, unanimously against the House amendment, and I believe the private judgment of each of the conferees on the part of the House was against it. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. J. GLANCY JONES] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HORTON] thought we were bound to regard what the House had done, and therefore we insisted upon it. Hence it comes back to the House. I move that the House recede from the amendment, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I desire to submit a motion to insist, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw his call for the previous question.

Mr. JACKSON. I will, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I desire to say but a few words (as this matter has been already discussed) in reply to the gentleman from Georgia. He says that the House proviso does not take effect till after the next fiscal year. That is true; and the reason for that ought to have been known to the gentleman from Georgia. The House agreed to that amendment on the condition that it should not apply to the next fiscal year, because it was said that the estimates had been made on the basis of using the old appropriations and applying the surplus to the next fiscal year. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES], this proviso was added, so that this reform should commence in the future, and should not embarrass the administration of the Government. It does not apply to this or the next fiscal year, but after that it commences. That is a sufficient reply in regard to that point.

Now, sir, the proposition is simply this: to bring back this Government to the original policy of appropriating a specific sum of money for a specific purpose, to be expended by the executive department within a given time, and to refuse to the Executive the power to spend this money for any other purpose or at any other time. The proposition is plain, simple, and practical. The gentleman talks about difficulties in public works when Congress is not in session. Why, Congress is always in session within three or four months before the beginning of the fiscal year. If any disturbances or any difficulties or any wars grow up in the course of the year, these difficulties should be submitted to Congress, and Congress ought to consider whether money appropriated for one purpose should be used for another, or whether money appropriated for one fiscal year should be used for another. But by abuses and by our neglect, the Executive has seized on all these important powers, and exercises them instead of Congress doing so.

The amendment is simply declaratory of principles contained in the Constitution—that all moneys shall be appropriated by Congress. It simply cures and wipes away the abuses that have grown up in the administration of the Executive Departments—not by one party only, but by all parties—and brings us back to constitutional principles. The amendment proposed by the Senate means simply nothing at all. It requires the Executive Departments to give us the very information which is given to us every year. It is, therefore, perfectly nugatory to put in that provision. The Senate provision is an evasion, and amounts to nothing at all. If the House surrenders the great principle contained in the second section, they surrender more than they have done this session, because there is more of reform secured by that section than in any other provision of law passed this session.

Mr. STANTON. I would suggest to my colleague that he is mistaken in one thing. The gentleman from Georgia says that if Congress be not in session when the fiscal year expires, the works will have to stop. My colleague says that Congress is in session three or four months before the close of the fiscal year. I say he is mistaken, for Congress is always in session eighteen months before the fiscal year expires. Congress meets in December, and the fiscal year does not expire till June in the second following year, so that there are eighteen months to anticipate deficiencies.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The objection is made, that when we appropriate money to erect custom-houses, and when the year expires, unless Congress makes another appropriation, the money cannot be expended. Well, that is right. Congress ought to appropriate so much money to be expended in a given year, and if it cannot be judiciously expended by the executive department, Congress ought to determine whether any more money will be expended there. If there is a deficiency, the department must call on Congress to supply the deficiency; but they have no right to take money appropriated for one purpose and apply it to another. Congress must, in its wisdom, determine whether the work ought to stop, and Congress ought to have power to stop it at any time. If you do not insist on that right, you recognize the validity of that very usurpation and abuse on which all parties have agreed during the present session of Congress. And therefore this proposition, which the Senate have stricken out, when it was first offered here received the unanimous assent of the House; and afterwards, when it was again considered, it received the votes of more than two to one. The more it is considered and discussed, the more important and practicable it appears to my mind. I hope, therefore, that the House will insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate; and now, in pursuance of my promise to the gentleman from Georgia, I move the previous question.

Mr. MILLSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The previous question is not under my control. I renewed it at the instance of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. JACKSON. I have no objection to its withdrawal for a few moments.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Then, of course, I withdraw it.

Mr. MILLSON. I desire to say only a few words in explanation of what I regard as one of the most important subjects connected with our appropriation bills that has come up for the consideration of Congress at its present session. The gentleman from Ohio is entirely in error in stating that this amendment was unanimously adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. No objection was made to it, I believe.

Mr. MILLSON. There was objection. I objected to it myself.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The first time it was offered?

Mr. MILLSON. Yes, sir; I objected to it.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. There were many objections to it; but the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, to a certain extent, accepted it.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I only know that when the amendment was first offered, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means said that there was no objection to it, and I understood that none was made.

Mr. MILLSON. I have no doubt in the world that the object of the gentleman from Ohio is perfectly right and proper, and that he desires to effect what he considers a salutary reform. I have no doubt his purpose is good; but I wish simply to show him that the amendment is utterly impracticable, and that if it were to become the law now, it would be repealed by the general consent of both Houses of Congress, and upon the united demand of every Department of the Government, at the very next session. I desire briefly to call his attention to one or two considerations which, I think, will make this evident to his own mind. We have a law already which provides that all the moneys appropriated by Congress, and not expended for the objects for which they are appropriated, shall return to the Treasury after the next fiscal year. The effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is, that these moneys shall be returned to the Treasury at the end of the first fiscal year.

Now, I beg leave to call his attention to the difficulties which would prevent the successful execution of such a provision of law. The gentleman must know or ought to know that it is not until appropriations are made by Congress that contracts are made by the different Departments of the Government for the purpose of obtaining the supplies, purchasing the merchandise, engaging the services, or prosecuting the works which are the objects of appropriations. No bureau of the Government will make a contract for any supplies or for any labor in advance of appropriations. They wait until the money is appropriated. The law requires that the contracts shall be advertised for from four to six weeks in the public papers throughout the United States. Then proposals come in sometimes from the most distant parts of the country; sometimes the proposals from California do not come in for months after the passage of the law, or the commencement of the fiscal year. Then the Departments sometimes require weeks and months to scale the bids and ascertain upon an inspection of all the various proposals, who is the lowest bidder for any specific article. You have then got to three or four months after the commencement of the fiscal year before you even ascertain who is to receive the contracts. Then you have a delay of from three to four weeks in the execution of the contracts, and in the contractors providing securities. And when you have got the contracts executed, then sometimes three, six, nine, or twelve months are required for the delivery of the articles, and in almost all cases, you come to the winter season before you commence. Well, when you come into the winter season, the weather is altogether unsuited for the commencement of the work. You have to purchase granite, it may be, for the construction of custom-houses. That cannot be had in the winter. The spring will sometimes open before a work can be commenced which has been provided for in a previous law, and for which a contract has been executed by the Government. So that it will almost invariably happen that you will exhaust eight or nine months of the fiscal year before you can expend a dollar of the money appropriated for that year.

Now, the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio would be to restrict the payment of the money appropriated by Congress, to about three months of the fiscal year. Sometimes the money will not be called for by the contractors during the first fiscal year. Always ten or twenty per cent. on the amounts due to contractors, is withheld until the final execution of the contracts. They are not entitled to demand that money, and to say that no portion of the money appropriated shall be drawn from the Treasury except during the fiscal year for which it is appropriated, is to so cripple the operations of the Government as to prevent it from doing almost anything that the public necessities may require. I will state to the gentleman, that a similar proposition was made in the Senate, and was adopted by the Senate on motion of a Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN.] The Senate had not then considered the subject at all, but in the interval between the agreement to the amendment in Committee of the Whole of the Senate, and the final action upon the amendment in the Senate itself, the members of that body had become perfectly assured that the change was highly inexpedient and would prove mischievous, and by general consent they disagreed to the amendment which they had before agreed to. Now, it was for these reasons that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House, the Senate having been themselves led into the error into which the gentleman from Ohio has fallen, and into which he has led this House, and they took the promptest method of repairing their error, and I trust the House will do also by receding from their amendment. And now, in compliance with the engagement which I made, I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I trust the gentleman will allow me a moment to reply.

Mr. JACKSON. How long will the gentleman wait?

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. About three minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. Well, I have no objection to the floor being yielded to the gentleman for three minutes, as we have had two speeches on this side.

Mr. MILLSON. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I will not detain the House but for a moment. I have considered the objections of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.] I have conversed with him upon the subject, and he has already stated frankly his objections before. I have great respect for his opinions, but I am unable to see that these objections apply at all. The provision inserted by the House in this bill does not prevent the Departments from using the unexpended balances of one year to pay the unpaid debts of that year, where contracts have been made in the current year and the debt accrued in that year. It only prohibits the application of balances for the service of future fiscal years—for contracts made in future years.

And here is the difference between the House amendment and the Senate amendment, proposed by the Senator from Maine, referred to by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.] The House amendment is designed, and I believe it will have the effect, of correcting a practice which has been carried on during several Administrations, Whig and Democratic. A gentleman says for the last thirty or forty years. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] says that Senator TRUMBULL concurred in the amendment of the Senate. I do not so understand it; I conversed with him this morning, and he spoke of the provision as one of much importance.

Mr. JACKSON. I only wish to say that I know nothing of the views of Senator TRUMBULL, except from the views which he expressed in the committee room.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it in order to refer to the individual opinions of members expressed in committee.

Mr. JACKSON. I only referred to it because the gentleman from Ohio referred to the views of Senator TRUMBULL.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair was not called to the allusion of the gentleman from Ohio, or he would have interrupted him.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I demand the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the previous question, if seconded, will be to bring the House to a vote first upon the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to recede; and, if that fail, then upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to insist.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I wish to ask the Chair whether the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is not received as an amendment of the motion of the gentleman from Georgia?

The SPEAKER. They are independent motions. If the gentleman will refer to the one hundred and tenth page of the Manual, he will find the order in which the motions are to be put.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. HARLAN asked the yeas and nays upon the motion to recede.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 100, nays 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Barksdale, Bishop, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Bryan, Burnett, Caruthers, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Corning, Cox, Burton Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Iowa, Dinmick, Dowdell, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Gartrell, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Hatch, Hawkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jewett, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Landy, Lawrence, Leidy, Letcher, McClay, McKibbin, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Miles, Millson, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Scales, Scott, Searing, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Stallworth, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Vallandigham, White, Winslow, Woodson, Wortendyke, and Augustus R. Wright—100.

YAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Billinghurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Buffinton, Case, Clawson, Colfax, Collins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Edie, Eustis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Garnett, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Howard, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Miller, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Ricard, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, William Smith, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, and Zollicoffer—87.

So the House agreed to recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. JACKSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to recede from its disagreement; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOCATION OF LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. CARUTHERS obtained the floor.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I ask the consent of the House, at the instance of my colleague, [Mr. CARUTHERS,] who is not well enough to address the House, to take up Senate bill (No. 41) to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes. It is known to the House that my colleague has been absent, from indisposition, the greater portion of the session. This is a bill in which his constituents feel a good deal of interest, and I hope there will be no objection to taking up the bill and putting it on its passage. The bill relates to certain old land claims which have been the subject of adjudication. I ask that the Committee of the Whole House may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it may be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. It is the recollection of the Chair that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAIR] the other day entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLAIR. I made the motion at the request of my colleague, [Mr. CARUTHERS,] I reported the bill from the Committee on Private Land Claims. It was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and I entered a motion to reconsider the vote.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. Then I call up the motion to reconsider. The bill was reported, as I understand, without objection, by the Committee on Private Land Claims, and I presume there will be no objection.

Mr. EDIE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri to allow the vote to be taken upon the motion to reconsider. It will not then require unanimous consent to bring the bill before the House.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. That is my intention.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the vote may now be taken upon the motion to reconsider, and the bill brought before the House for action.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. BLAIR. The claims for land provided for by this bill were confirmed under previous laws, but the land for which they were confirmed had previously been sold and entered. There was then no land to satisfy them. This bill only allows the claimants to locate their claims upon any of the public lands of the United States open to public entry.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri, as I see that these confirmations were made in 1812, why it is that forty-six years have intervened between this and that time, and no action has been taken on the subject?

Mr. BLAIR. It was supposed for a long time that these claims could be located elsewhere, after it had been found that the lands for which they had been confirmed had been sold or entered by other persons. Some of the land was embraced by the school sections. Attorney General Gilpin, under Mr. Van Buren's administration, decided that the claims could not be floated and located elsewhere. A special act was then passed for the relief of some of the claimants. This bill provides for them all, and saves the necessity of passing an act in every single instance.

Mr. COBB. Does this bill allow the claimants to go upon any of the public lands and upon the alternate railroad sections which are held at $2 50 per acre?

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. The bill provides that the entry shall be made upon lands of the United States held for sale at $1 25 per acre.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR withdrew the motion to refer; and demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE M. GORDON.

Mr. COBB. On Saturday last I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill (No. 83) to vest the title to certain warrants for land in George M. Gordon was referred to a Committee of the Whole House. There was then a disposition to pass the bill, which was unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands; but as other matters of public importance pressed, I did not ask that the motion should be considered.

The bill directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to recognize the assignment made to George M. Gordon on the 21st of January, 1852, by Edmund Hugill, sergeant in Captain Gordon's company, third regiment of United States infantry, and James McIntyre, a private of the same company and regiment, to whom warrants Nos. 78,402, and 78,403 respectively, issued on the 13th of July, 1853, so as to vest the legal title in said warrants in George M. Gordon, his heirs or assigns, according to the intention of the parties.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion to refer; and it was disagreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT SNELLING.

Mr. MORRILL took the floor.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman to yield me the floor one moment, to take from the Speaker's table a private bill for the purpose of putting it on its passage. The circumstances are these: a firm in Missouri agreed to transport railroad iron to certain points. The railroad iron was in bond at New Orleans. A portion was to be delivered at Keokuk, Iowa; and another portion at St. Louis. These gentlemen gave their bonds for its delivery. By mistake all of it was delivered at St. Louis. There is a judgment rendered against them by confession.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot yield for that bill, as it must occupy some time in discussion.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. It is a case on which action should be taken.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment to take up a bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I must decline. I think that the question we have before us to-day, as the special order, ought to be considered; and I do not think that we have more time than is necessary for its consideration.

Mr. GROW. The loan bill has not been passed; and as this discussion can go on another day, I move that this Fort Snelling report be postponed until Thursday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

The question being on Mr. GROW's motion, there were, on a division—ayes 52, noes 71.

Mr. GROW. I want to take up the loan bill to-day. I do not care whether the Fort Snelling matter goes over till to-morrow or till Thursday. I modify my motion to make it to-morrow at twelve o'clock, instead of Thursday.

Mr. FAULKNER. It has been already postponed twice.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I raise the question of order that one motion to postpone having been voted down, another motion to postpone is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The question was not finally disposed of.

The question was taken on Mr. GROW's motion as modified; and it was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 59, noes 85.

Mr. MORRILL. In order, Mr. Speaker, that my remarks may be intelligible to those members of the House who have not been able to read through the vast volume of testimony in this case, I shall confine myself mainly to a recital of the facts as they appear in the evidence, and leave the conclusions to the judgment of the House.

This site, Mr. Speaker, about which there has been so much controversy, was occupied first during the administration of Secretary Calhoun in the War Department, nearly forty years ago. It was then selected by the military officers on account of its superior advantages as a military site. Through all the time, from that day down to and through the administration of General Pierce, it has been one of the most useful positions on our western frontier—more occupied, perhaps, than any other military position on our whole northwestern border. It is a position which has attracted also a good deal of attention on account of its superior beauty of location, its agricultural advantages, and its more notable advantages for a town site. Whatever witnesses in this case may have differed upon as to other matters, they nearly all agree that, as a point for a town site, it possesses superior advantages over any other in that part of the country. Therefore, it has been an object with speculators for some years to bring it into market. It was brought into market here when the present Secretary of War came into office, within a few days after it was brought to his notice, and before he had been in his place more than about six weeks. Such haste would imply some strong compelling motive. I think it was not the public interest.

I do not propose to discuss this question in a political point of view. I would have no political feeling to gratify on this subject. I shall endeavor that neither sympathy for, nor political disgust against, the parties who have been mixed up in the transaction, shall affect my judgment. I conceive that a great wrong has been done to the country; and this House, as the grand inquest of the nation, is in duty bound to look into it, calmly and deliberately, and true deliverance make as to all the parties in the transaction. If there is any disposition on the part of gentlemen on the other side of the House to mix up party feelings in this question, I would warn them against making this a precedent, to be followed in all coming time.

I know that it is customary, when a party obtains power in this country, that they shall monopolize the offices; but I have yet to learn that the Treasury is to be illegally plundered, or that the interests of the country are to be sacrificed in consequence of such a monopoly, and therefore I think that it would be a great misfortune to the country that this case should go into the history and records of our country as a precedent, to be distinctly avowed and acted upon by all parties.

Mr. Speaker, the very impartial and careful report of the majority of the committee, made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT,] relieves me from a considerable amount of labor. The report of the minority—and I take pleasure in testifying to the high-toned bearing of the gentlemen of the minority throughout the whole progress of this investigation—the report of the minority, in my judgment, does not make a single position that is maintained in the majority report untenable. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] who made the minority report, says:

"They felt no dissatisfaction at the fact that a majority of the committee, with whom they were called upon to act, were politically arrayed against the leading policy of the Government, and might, in addition to their sense of public duty, feel stimulated by the rare gratification of discovering something worthy of condemnation in the official conduct of an Administration to which they were opposed."

I find no fault with that rather ingeniously constructed sentence, although I think that, perhaps unintentionally, it contains a little sarcasm on the present Administration. Certainly, if one was disposed to seek for gratification of this sort, it seems to me that the occasions when it might have been indulged have not been rare. It may be the gentleman is stimulated by the gratification of a defense of an Administration to which he is not opposed.

There is one circumstance, Mr. Speaker, which I think calls upon us for our reprobation. It occurs to me that a frank and honorable man, placed in the position of the Secretary of War, when he found, as he must have found, in my judgment, that he had made a blunder, a mistake in the appointment of his agents, or that he had been circumvented by this combination in New York and Virginia, would have frankly admitted the fact and sought to have corrected it. But instead of that, I find not only a remarkable persistence in the wrong, but a studied effort to persuade us that it is all right; and for this purpose and no other, in my judgment, it appears that, upon the 18th of May, sundry petitions were presented to this House. I have taken the pains to examine these petitions. There are seven of them. Six of them are word for word and comma for comma alike, and there is only a slight verbal alteration in the seventh. These petitions come from St. Paul or its neighborhood; and who are they from? Why, sir, from the acting Governor of the State of Minnesota; from the United States collector; from the postmasters; from the assistant justices of the supreme court; from the two district attorneys; from the clerks of the courts; from the receiver general, the surveyor general, and the Indian traders—all of them connected with and dependent upon this Government, and some particularly, perhaps, upon the Secretary of War. But out of the whole number of those who have signed these papers, many with their occupations designated, there are but two farmers, as named. One is a party in interest, Mr. Sibley, and is to have thirty acres of the land, at the rate of the original purchase. Among the signatures are such names as these: J. Flynn, Jeremiah Daly, Michael Hann, Teneau Danteman, David Volleux, Lanimif Tadiski, Samuel Slouganborg, Foxe Schietz, Gottlob Weckwerth, Friedrik Kruse, — B. Gumpel, Bened. Hippber, &c. These may be very respectable names; I know nothing about them. I do not think it would be difficult to send out cut-and-dried counter petitions, and get them quite as numerous and respectfully signed.

Now, sir, in my judgment, these petitions—three of them in the same hand-writing—are not worth the paper upon which they are written. They all set forth that an effort is being made to set aside the sale, and they protest against it; and they, all of them, say that they do not believe that a higher price than eleven dollars an acre could be obtained for the land. All of them agree in that. I do not know, sir, whether the purchasers of the land got up these petitions or not, but the hand of Job is in all this thing.

Having passed these preliminary remarks, I propose, so far as my time will allow me, to speak from the evidence touching

1. The concealment which distinguishes this sale.
2. Incompetency of the commissioners.
3. Artful combination of the New York and Virginia partners, by which the Government was defrauded.
4. Inadequate price.
5. Quantity of land probably under-estimated.
6. Division of spoils.
7. Military authority against the sale.

Sir, there has been from the start a studied concealment of this matter. No corpse in the tomb of the Capulets was ever so securely locked from the light of day, as the whole of this transaction has been from the public eye. In various parts of the country, information was sought concerning the sale of Fort Snelling, and no one could worm out of the Secretary of War an inkling of what was going on. The epistle of St. Paul, to the Secretary, by a very worthy gentleman in my own State, is a trying instance of this pursuit of knowledge under difficulties. I will read a passage from that somewhat celebrated epistle:

"I possess some pecuniary ability, and have several relatives and acquaintances in Minnesota Territory, where I want to remove myself, so as to get out of a State where genuine Democracy is poorly thought of by the great colored party who rule, and always will here."

"If this property is to be sold, I very much desire to purchase the whole or a part of it; and may I not ask that, if it is to be sold, you will have the goodness to apprise me of the fact; also, of the mode I can adopt to make a definite offer? If it is for sale, I should esteem it a favor—perhaps it is my right, but that I do not discuss now—to be so informed, that I may have a chance for a bargain, and think I should come to Washington to confer personally with you."

I believe that all this gentleman says of himself is nearly true; but it only shows to what a depth this doctrine of the spoils has sunk the morality of the country. He goes on further:

"Let me add another word as to myself. I was a member of the 28th and 29th Congresses (I think) from Vermont, and was very well acquainted with several members from Virginia, among whom were George W. Hopkins and Governor McDowell. Mr. Cobb, the present Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Thompson, Secretary of the Interior, will remember me well; so, I believe, the Postmaster General; so of any and all the United States officers at Vermont, and I believe, on being referred to, will any or all vouch for me as a man standing well wherever known."

"Do you want to know why I am anxious to get a good foothold in the West? I give the reason in few words. I have four fine boys, the oldest of which is now twenty years, the youngest eight years, and if this is not enough, I will speak again."

Under these circumstances, I say, this gentleman spoke as correctly as to himself as could have been expected from one so eager for "a chance for a bargain." But, at his time of life, it is hard to make him "speak again," and it is absolutely cruel to leave those fine boys where they will, if they follow the teachings of the father, be so "poorly thought of."

To this letter no reply was vouchsafed, or none that the committee could obtain, upon application to either party, and several communications sent to the Secretary of War, making inquiries as to the time and manner of the sale of this property. No answers are on record. It appears that the Secretary of War sent a circular in response, but we have not been able to trace out the fact that any were ever received, except in one instance, in Missouri.

Well, sir, let us look at some of the other parties in this business. Mr. Richard Schell did not like to incur liabilities, and so his name does not appear in the contract. Mr. Heiskell admits that he may have informed Doctor Graham his business, but the fact that they traveled out there and back together, does not leak out until near the close of the investigation; and Heiskell did not know at all, as he says, to this day, only by rumor, that Doctor Graham was one of the purchasers.

"Question 2992. Did you meet Dr. Graham while you were at St. Paul?"

"Answer. I did."

"Question 2993. Were you a previous acquaintance of his, or did you make his acquaintance there?"

"Answer. I have met him before. I believe I was introduced to him once. I have seen him frequently. I saw him in Richmond during the session of the Legislature, of which I have spoken, when I was a member."

"Question 2994. Was Dr. Graham aware that you were at St. Paul for the purpose of making this sale?"

"Answer. I suppose he was; I saw him in this city before I went West, and again in Philadelphia. He told me that he was going out there, and I agreed to wait for him in Philadelphia."

"Question 2995. Did not you tell him that you were authorized to make the sale, and did you not confer with him about the mode of sale?"

"Answer. I think I told him I was going to sell it, but we had no conference about the manner of sale."

Major Eastman kept the secret with guarded sanctity. In reply to question 87, he says:

"We offered it first to Mr. Steele; we wanted to make as little noise about it as possible, to prevent anything taking place to defeat the sale."

He made no noise about it, lest it should affect the sale; no one, not even a brother officer, was taken into confidence by him. He even practiced duplicity to conceal the fact. He told Colonel Thomas, when asked in reference to the sale, on the 1st of August, that the fort had been or would be sold, carefully concealing the fact that it had been already sold, or that he had had anything to do about it. Dr. Graham says the commissioners did not learn from him that he was connected with the purchase, and that he might have known that there were other parties in New York who were parties to the contract, but that he never made any inquiry. He knew who the commissioners were to be before they were appointed, and knew what were their instructions, but says he did not see the Secretary of War only at his first interview.

Mr. Steele thinks that he might have informed the commissioners there were other parties, after the sale, but not before. As to his object in concealing the fact, he says he had "none in particular."

Another purchaser, John C. Mather, was a "stranger," and he seems to have preserved his character as such:

"Question 675. Did you conceal from Major Eastman and Mr. Heiskell, at that time, that you were one of the purchasers?"

"Answer. I do not know as there was any concealment about it."

"Question 676. Was there any open talk that you or any other party was a purchaser besides Steele?"

"Answer. I believe that Steele was the only man that had conversations with the commissioners in regard to the purchase."

"Question 677. Had you any conversation with Major Eastman or Mr. Heiskell, by which he was informed of the fact that you were a purchaser in part of that property?"

"Answer. I took no pains to conceal the fact or to make it known. I drew up the writing at the request of Steele, and I believe the commissioners changed it. I do not know whether Major Eastman or Heiskell knew the fact that I was a part purchaser. I was a stranger to both."

The only excuse Mr. Mather gives for this concealment is that "it was not thought necessary for our names to be incorporated in the contract." Mr. Steele was informed by Major Eastman, according to Dr. Graham, a few days before the sale was consummated, that it would be disposed of privately, owing to combinations.

And Dr. Graham confirms the same thing. So it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that it was communicated to no other person whatever but to the ultimate purchasers, after Heiskell arrived in this city, and after he had received his instructions, with a single exception, which was the bar-keeper at one of the hotels at St. Paul. It seems that he and Dr. Graham stopped at the same hotel, and that Heiskell had assigned to him an inferior room. Feeling his dignity injured he left in high dudgeon and went to another place, and, as we may suppose, in order to create a good impression upon the mind of the bar-keeper there—to impress him with plenipotentiary importance—he discloses to that bar-keeper that he is the agent of the United States appointed to sell this military reservation.

We find, by the testimony, that not a single Army officer was consulted by the present Secretary of War in relation to it. General Scott was not consulted; General Persifer F. Smith was not consulted; General Churchill was not consulted; Colonel Thomas was not consulted. No man in the Army was consulted, and the military opinions on record were all against the propriety of selling it, as well as that, if sold, it should be sold for no such price as that which was received for it.

Can it be possible that all this secrecy was purely accidental and without concert? There can be no answer save that it served the interest of the operators.

Mr. Speaker, I propose to refer to the testimony of two or three of these gentlemen, and I begin with that of Major Eastman, not for the purpose of impeaching it, but to show the utter incompetency of the men who were sent to discharge such a duty as was devolved upon them by the Secretary of War. Major Eastman says, at one time, that Graham was there, and then, again, that he cannot tell whether he was there or not. As to whether Fort Snelling is more valuable as a town site than St. Paul, or any other town in that region, he says:

"I should think it was, if the others had not had the start. I have always supposed that a town would be built there; I suppose that if the reservation had been sold seven or eight years ago, before St. Paul was established, the town would have been there; now, I think it is too late."

But we find that he was ready to go to a combination for the purchase of some of the lots in this town site, and to pay a liberal price for them, showing that it was not too late, when he wanted to buy, though it was when he wanted to sell. I refer now to the testimony of Captain Thom:

"Question 2130. I ask you whether you ever had any conversation with Major Eastman in regard to the purchase of a part of the Fort Snelling property; and, if so, what that conversation was?"

"Answer. I had some conversation with him upon that subject; the exact time I do not recollect, but it was after the sale was known to the public. He accented me in the grounds of Fort Snelling, and said he had proposed to some of the officers to make an investment. He asked me if I would like an opportunity to do so with them, saying that they proposed to put in a couple of hundred dollars each and buy a block. The price, he mentioned, would probably be about sixteen hundred dollars, and saying that he thought he could get it at that price. I then mentioned to him that as a block usually contained only six or eight acres, I thought it a pretty large advance upon the price which I understood was paid for it, as that price would make it cost about two hundred dollars an acre. I said that at that price I supposed we might have our choice or pick of the blocks upon the reservation. He said, no; at that price we would have to take a block back, at about an average place on the reservation. He said the blocks composing the water lots would cost several thousand dollars. He suggested to me that this would be a good investment. He offered me the opportunity to go in with him and such others as he might find to join together."

Whether this lot was to be paid for, or whether it is one of those Mr. Steele speaks of having given away on condition that it should be built upon, does not appear, but it shows Major Eastman's real estimate of the property as a town site. He says that,

"During a long life, I have never bought any land."

Notwithstanding, the Secretary of War again placed this man with John C. Mather, so late as September 9, 1857, to sell Fort Ripley; it is not probable this officer will again be detailed to sell any land. Certainly, Dr. Graham would not employ him. When asked, from what he observed, if they (the commissioners) were such persons as he would intrust property with to sell, Dr. G. says:

"I would not have selected them, probably, as the keenest agents."

Seeing that before the sale he was constantly urging that it was a very valuable piece—over-estimating it, he says—and that since that, he says, we have "got too much for it," that a large portion of it is "only fit for duck ponds," neither his judgment or candor will be likely to be over-estimated.

But, Mr. Speaker, the fault I have to find with Mr. Eastman, is this. He was sent out to make a survey and preliminary report, but it does not appear that he ever made any such report, nor that he ever completed the survey. The land was sold without its being known how much there was of it. It is not known now. At the first interview with Mr. Heiskell he learned, to his surprise, that he was appointed one of the commissioners, because Mr. Heiskell wanted some good man with him, and decided to sell at private sale. At the second interview, they decided to sell to Mr. Steele. In less than thirty-six hours after Major Eastman knew of his appointment the contract was made. The instructions of the Secretary of War were disregarded, and it is clear that he was a cipher alongside of the other commissioner. Indeed, Mr. Heiskell is quite ready to take the responsibility, and claims that he was responsible for the private sale.

We find that Dr. Graham, of Virginia, called here to pay his respects to the Secretary of War. Here is his testimony:

"In the month of April, 1857, I was on a visit to Washington city. I called to see the Secretary of War, Governor Floyd, whom I had known in my State, and during a conversation with him I told him I was going to Minnesota to make some investments, and asked him if he had anything in his Department there I could do for him, to pay expenses. He told me he had nothing, unless I took the agency of selling some old forts that Congress had directed the sale of. He mentioned Fort Snelling and Fort Ripley. I had been in Minnesota in 1854, and knew something of the value of Fort Snelling, and preferred being interested as a purchaser, to taking the agency for the sale of it. Therefore I declined to have anything to do with the sale of it. That I did not state to him."

He was going "to make some investments." The sequel shows he had no money to invest.

"Question 274. You yourself, then, did not furnish any money to pay upon the purchase?"

"Answer. The purchase was made, and they advanced for me for a little while, and I paid it back."

"Question 275. In money, or in part of the property?"

"Answer. I paid it in my services—by my salary."

He had "been in Minnesota in 1854, and knew something of the value of Fort Snelling." Herein he had a decided advantage of the Secretary of War. He knew what he was about. The Secretary did not. Thus:

"Question 301. In the interview you had with the Secretary, was there any hint suggested, or intimated of any kind, directing your attention to the advantages of the Fort Snelling reserve, or any part or parcel thereof?"

"Answer. There was not; nor do I believe that the Secretary had the most remote idea of the value of either of those forts; he spoke of them to me as old forts, and I am satisfied that he had not any knowledge of the value of the property."

Dr. Graham did not accept the appointment, preferring to be a purchaser. This, he says, was about the 1st of April.

"Question 260. You then went immediately to work to form the combination to purchase it?"

"Answer. A combination was already formed."

"Question 261. You had, then, before you went to the Secretary, formed a combination."

"Answer. I did not. I did not know it."

"Question 262. You were afterward admitted?"

"Answer. I was; I did not make the combination, except so far as Mr. Steele was concerned."

It appears that a combination had already been formed to make the purchase, but the agents to sell had not been fixed upon. The Secretary now tendered the appointment to Mr. Heiskell, of Virginia. The incompetency of this commissioner has been shown up so fully in the report, that little need be added. His narrative of his interview with the Secretary of War is graphic and Boswellian to the last degree. If the friendship of Johnson for Boswell is unaccountable, that of Governor Floyd for Heiskell is not less extraordinary. Here it is:

"But I will commence at the beginning. Before Governor Floyd was appointed as Secretary of War, he and myself ran a race for the Legislature in 1855. Shortly after he had received notice from Mr. Buchanan that he would be in the Cabinet—the next morning, I believe—I remarked to him, jocularly, 'Now, old fellow, we have had a rather hard fight of it together, against the Know Nothings here, and when you get in office you must not forget me. I want you to give me a place. I want one that will pay not less than four or five thousand dollars a year. I don't want anything else.' Said he: 'Well, old boy,' in his way, to me, 'if I can do anything for you, you shall have it.' After he had been here in office for two or three weeks, he wrote a letter to me, telling me, 'there is nothing here that you would want. There is no office in my gift, or in the gift of the President, that you would have.' Sometime in the month of April, he wrote to me that he had a little business for me to do, that would pay my expenses, and he wanted me to come on here. I wrote to him, 'I do not want to do anything that will not pay well.' He wrote to me to come on here; that he had some business he wanted me to attend to; that there was a reservation he wanted me to sell."

It seems that his qualifications for this position were, that he was a hard student of newspapers, and that he had run a race for the Virginia Legislature and was elected after a hard fight with the Know Nothings. There he seemed to have got a good deal of information. He had been an agent to keep a depot for a large supply of salt, and for a short time corporal in a company of Virginia militia. He says that "we were writing to each other every week." It seems that he and Governor Floyd were old cronies and very intimate. He called the Governor "old fellow," and the Governor called the corporal "old boy."

Mr. Heiskell says:

"A good deal has been said about this matter being kept private. When I left Abingdon I reckon two thousand men knew where I was going and what my business was."

Upon looking at the Gazetteer, I find that Abingdon is a very flourishing village in southwestern Virginia, containing, in 1854, fifteen hundred inhabitants. Must he not have been diligent to have informed two thousand men in a village containing only fifteen hundred inhabitants in all, men, women, and children?

Why, sir, it appears to me that Falstaff's men in buckram or Kendal green, were nothing to these two thousand gentlemen in Abingdon. But after a while it will be seen that this gentleman was studiously keeping his business private, and this is the reason for his doing so:

"Question 269. Is it your habit, when you have a piece of property for sale, to communicate the fact to but one individual to whom you want to sell it, or do you let it be known publicly, and get the best price you can?"

"Answer. That is a question which I do not conceive has anything to do with this matter; but I have no feeling upon the subject, and will answer it. When I go to make a sale of land of my own to a particular individual, I say nothing to anybody else about it until he is either off or on; because by intermeddlers, who thought they were doing a friendly deed, I have lost first rate sales. They knock me out of good chances."

It appears that after he had got his instructions here in Washington, and after he had got alongside of Dr. Graham, with whom he had an appointment to meet in Philadelphia, he was entirely mum. The great chance with the New York and Virginia company was not to be knocked out of him. After he had arrived at St. Paul, to counteract the effect of his communicativeness to the two thousand men at Abingdon, he wrote a letter very promptly to one gentleman, informing him that there "was a bad chance for speculation;" that "combinations among the people were being made;" and, of course, advising him not to come there at all. He did not see anything more of him until he got home. In the report of the commissioners to the Secretary of War it is said that the buildings cost not less than $30,000. Mr. Steele is far more moderate, and estimates his own at eight or ten thousand dollars, and all the rest at six or eight thousand dollars, or from fourteen to eighteen thousand dollars, instead of $30,000. The Government buildings were estimated by Heiskell at $10,000; by Eastman at fifteen to twenty thousand dollars. The facts are, that the Government had laid out over ten thousand dollars in permanent improvements there within the last year; and the best opinion is, that the buildings could not have cost, constructed in part by labor of soldiers at fifteen cents per day, less than fifty or sixty thousand dollars; and are to-day worth more than that to the Government. Colonel Thomas thinks the Government could afford to give the parties $90,000 for the fort and buildings alone—allowing them to keep nearly all the eight thousand acres of land—rather than to surrender and abandon the post!

It is quite apparent that the purpose of these commissioners was to elevate the value of private and depress that of public property on the reservation. Heiskell told Major Eastman, as he says, that if the reservation was sold at public sale they might force it up to $50,000.

Alluding to the same conversation subsequently he fixes the sum as low as $20,000. The combination night-mare greatly depresses him.

Mr. Heiskell says, he got to St. Paul on Sunday. Monday was election. Tuesday he went to see Major Eastman, but failed. The next day he went to Stillwater on a little business. On Thursday he went to Fort Snelling and delivered to Eastman his commission. They talked it over. That, he immediately says, was on Friday. On Saturday, he says, he went back and they got to talking about whom they could sell to, and sent a note to Mr. Steele, who replied. They declined to take less than $90,000. Steele then replied, as he says, on Monday, that he would give the $90,000. They signed a brief contract. Steele came to St. Paul the next day, which was Thursday, as he says, and the next (or Friday) they signed the papers.

This is a singular time-table, to say the least.

Now what are the facts? It appears from Mr. Steele's testimony that both offers were made the same day, and the contract is conclusive on the point, as that is dated 6th June, (Saturday.) Therefore it was made on Saturday, or the next day after Heiskell's delivery of his commission to Eastman.

Here was extraordinary dispatch of business! Scarcely less deliberation could have been yielded to the sale of an ordinary mule.

It has already been seen that at first he told Secretary Floyd, "I want you to give me a place." On page 310, he says, "I never intimated I wanted a place."

But such discrepancies—as "the very next morning after" changed into "three or four days after"—are merely alluded to for the purpose of showing the character of the commissioner—not as of much moment touching any other issue.

But what reliance can be placed on the testimony of a man with so poor a memory, and who uses his tongue with this perfect looseness? He sets it in motion as a man sets a saw-mill, and leaves it utterly irresponsible for what it says. He tells his story with such a hearty jollity that I can hardly impute intentional misrepresentation, but he certainly appears to be an off-hand, reckless talker. But we have the secret at last, when he says:

"Question 2173. When you made the sale, did you expect the deferred payments would draw interest?"

"Answer. I do not know. I gave no thought about it. I was only anxious to get home. I do not think that I really thought of it at all. I do not think it was mentioned between Major Eastman and myself at all."

There is a model commissioner for you, who, with the interest of the Government at heart, is "only anxious to get home."

This commissioner, like the other one, just as soon as the sale is completed, began to run the property down, telling Mr. Steele "that he had got a hard bargain." One more extract:

"Question 2670. You say you were selected by Governor Floyd from the fact that you were regarded as a sharp trader at home?"

"Answer. When I got here he told me that I should have to keep my eyes open; that I was regarded at home as a pretty good trader. I do not think he selected me on that ground alone."

I think the House will be apt to concur in all this, especially that he was not selected on the ground alone that he was a sharp trader.

These gentlemen seem to have been anticipating that there might be some fuss made about what they had been doing, and therefore they are anxious to create an opinion, to forestall the public judgment, that they made the best bargain they could, and the best bargain that was ever made.

The next bargainer in the matter whose course I will comment upon, is Mr. John C. Mather. It is a little curious to see how artfully some of these witnesses conceal things at some times, and give vent to them at others. This man says he had passed through Fort Snelling, on his way to Fort Ripley. Now, it will be seen that his instructions were one day later than those of Mr. Heiskell, and the testimony of other parties is that he arrived there about the same time. He admits that Graham went ahead of him; but that they were there nearly at the same time. He says he was returning; but gives the idea that he was only there a few hours. He says so. Mr. Heiskell says he (Mather) did not go from Fort Snelling to Fort Ripley while he was there; that he was taken sick.

Well, now, Mr. Heiskell says in another place that he went with Mather to the stage office and bought his ticket, and after that went to church with him. In another place, Mr. Heiskell says that Mather was not present. Mather says he was there, and drew up the contract, although it was subsequently changed; and that he was there just after the sale. Steele says that Mather was there, and perhaps drew up the contract. He also says:

"Question 1319. Was Mr. Mather present at the time of the sale?"

"Answer. He was."

"Question 1320. How long had he been at Fort Snelling before the sale?"

"Answer. A few days. I do not recollect how long."

"Question 1321. What was his purpose in going there?"

"Answer. I presume to make the purchase. I know of no other."

Mr. Mather says that the appointment to go and make an investigation in relation to Fort Ripley was unsolicited by him, and was made before any purpose had been formed, on his part, of purchasing Fort Snelling. Graham, on the contrary, says that the New York company was formed before they left, and even before he called on the Secretary, early in April. Mather admits that he was here before the sale was confirmed, and that he asked the Secretary of War if it had been confirmed. It is also in evidence that he had intelligence when the sale was confirmed, and that he telegraphed the fact to Steele. There is a bill annexed for his services. It is for thirty-five days, at eight dollars a day, and expenses. He received his appointment on the 26th day of May. Well, if he had completed his service, and was here in Washington before the sale was confirmed, it will be seen that he must have charged for some constructive days, up to the date of his report. It will also be seen, by Mr. Heiskell's testimony, that he (Heiskell) was paid for sixty-odd days. His commission is dated on the 25th day of May, and the sale was confirmed on the 17th day of June, making but twenty-one days; so that he must have received something like forty days' constructive per diem; and yet he says that, in consequence of his having made the best bargain for the Government that ever was made, he ought to have $213 more!

Mr. Speaker, I have some comments to make in relation to the price that was paid for this property, and some comments upon the testimony as stated in the minority report. I do not complain of the minority report; but if gentlemen will read the full report of the testimony, I think they will see that in every instance where evidence is quoted in regard to the value of the land—its being worth a higher price than was paid for it—the evidence as fully reported is still stronger, and in other instances, where the value is underrated, they will find that in the cross-examination the testimony is very much changed and softened down, so as to alter the whole complexion of the case. This testimony contains the evidence of three Indian agents and some seven or more gentlemen from St. Paul. How they came here I know not, but I suppose somewhat as those petitions came. St. Paul, like other smart towns, has a small opinion of outsiders. It is perfectly apparent that the gentlemen who live at St. Paul imagine that "the axis of the world sticks out just there," or, to quote the witty author of the Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, substituting, for the words "Boston State House," St. Paul, they imagine that "St. Paul is the hub of the solar system; you could not pry that out of a man from St. Paul if you had the tire of all creation straightened out for a crow-bar."

As an instance where the full testimony is stronger than the extract, I take the testimony of Mr. M. C. Smith, as stated in the minority report:

"M. C. Smith thinks it was worth twenty-five dollars per acre for agricultural purposes; but, considering its advantages as a town site, he estimates its value at $400,000."

Here is his testimony:

"Answer. I could not. I have seen a small portion on the creek, back from the river, which is rather sandy, but at the same time, adjoining that, on the other side of the creek, I wanted to buy some land, the price of which was thirty dollars an acre, and I advised a friend of mine to purchase it at that price. It is not only equally as sandy, but nine or ten acres were a bog hole."

"Question 1349. Do you regard the site of Fort Snelling as an eligible point for the location of a city or a town?"

"Answer. I do."

"Question 1350. What would you say that tract of land was worth, taking into consideration its advantages as a town site at that time?"

"Answer. I should not put it under $400,000. I think it was worth not far from that."

Take, as another instance, the testimony of Mr. Rice. It will be seen, by referring to his testimony, that he thinks it would have been wrong for the Government to make any money out of the sale, and that they ought to have disposed of it at the lowest price possible. He is not in favor of the Government receiving more than $1 25 per acre, and of course he gives his testimony in accordance with that theory. But I shall not have time to go through with the testimony upon this point seriatim, as I had proposed. I argue that the price paid was not enough, because Dr. Graham says that they proposed to give at least $100,000, if they could not get it for less. Steele says that they would have given $110,000, and Mather $100,000; and Graham admits that they would have given $20,000 more, if they did not have anything to pay to these outsiders for their improvements. Dr. Graham admits that it is worth double what they gave for it. Mather thinks he would not sell it for that, but finally concluded rather reluctantly that he would take double what he gave for it. Colonel Robert Smith says that he would have given four times eleven dollars an acre, and would have gone "the extent of his pile," and would do so now. I do not regard the price of any material consequence; but I do regard it as of some consequence that we should set the seal of our disapprobation upon the manner in which this sale has been conducted.

Mr. Steele sold a part of this land to railroad men, as a particular favor, and also because they were railroad men, whose aid and assistance it was desirable to enlist, and hence there was an inducement for him to put it at a low figure, and yet that was for about double the rate he paid for it.

Matthew Johnson had offered to him one twenty-seventh part of it for $25,000, bringing the whole reservation up to $675,000, and the seller figured the prospective value up to $1,400,000. J. C. Hall would like to buy half at double the cost price. The price paid was inadequate, on account of the terms in regard to interest, a credit having been given of one and two years upon two thirds and one third of the price. So that, with the price of money as it could be loaned by Mr. Steele at three per cent. a month, it was better terms than $65,000 would have been, cash in hand. The price paid for it was not as much as was offered by Mr. Steele for it one year ago, for then he offered fifteen dollars per acre, or, to take it in the lump, and call it five thousand acres, for $75,000, while eight thousand acres were sold to him now for $90,000. The reserve was then computed by Mr. Steele to contain five thousand acres, but now he admits that there are eight thousand acres. His offer a year ago conceded to the Government the retention of the fort, buildings, and a tract of land for Government use. It is now sold for $90,000, on time, without interest, including all the Government buildings and all the surrounding land. It does not appear, from the report of the commissioners, that they knew anything at all about the exact quantity of land in the reserve. The contract says that there were seven thousand acres. In that a deception was practiced upon the Secretary of War, for Major Eastman admits in his testimony that there are seven thousand five hundred acres. He says he did not complete the survey, but that he had progressed so far that he could determine the number of acres. But it does not appear that he ever did compute the number of acres. It was guess work, and I have no more confidence in his guesses than in another man's.

Captain Whitall testifies that there were eight or nine thousand acres. M. C. Smith thinks there were eight thousand; and many think, he says, there are more than ten thousand acres. Major Martin says that Major Eastman told him that it had been underestimated, and that there were eleven thousand acres.

That there were combinations, the report of the commissioners to the Secretary roundly asserts they have "upon good authority." But upon the closest investigation, all the stories and rumors sink into utter insignificance. Mr. Steele probably whispered the tale to Major Eastman, and he very greedily swallowed it. Beyond this, it appears in Mr. Heiskell's supplementary letter to the Secretary of War, June 17, 1857, that Major Eastman, being there on the spot, was fully aware of all the movements going on, and the combinations being formed. But the major flatly contradicts this, and says he had no personal knowledge of any such combinations; and that he "could only glean it from rumors; but the other gentleman, (Heiskell) who mixed freely with the people, being a stranger, and being more or less at the hotels, heard things which led him to believe that such was the fact, and he told me."

On the whole, the knowledge of the commissioners on this point was entirely reciprocal. Mr. Heiskell was informed by Major Eastman, and Major Eastman was told by Mr. Heiskell!

The military authority in favor of the retention of the post is overwhelming; but I have no time to quote it.

I now come to the division of the spoils. Mr. Steele testifies that his share is one third, and the written contract between the parties shows that was his bona fide share.

Dr. Graham testifies that his share is one ninth; but the contract referred to shows it was fixed at one third, however subsequently partitioned.

Mr. Richard Schell testifies that the interests of Mr. [himself] and Mrs. Schell and Mather have not been separated, but that he thinks, his wife will have two twelfths and himself nearly two twelfths. He also says that he and Mather paid $20,000, and that he paid about $13,000, which left $7,000 for Mather to pay. If, therefore, Mather's interest is just what he contributed, according to this there would be, with Schell's $3,000 excess, over one third, and Mather's $3,000 short, the sum of $6,000, or one fifth of the purchase lying waste, ready to be entered upon by Hard Schell Augustus, or any other enterprising favorite.

The commissioners (Heiskell and Eastman) knew no other party but Steele.

Mr. Steele knew no other parties but himself, Mather, and Graham.

Mr. Mather knows only Steele, Graham, Schell, and himself.

Mr. Schell knows only Steele, Graham, Mather, himself, and wife.

Mr. Graham says "there are other parties, possibly in New York, connected with it, whom I do not know."

Mr. Richard Schell had "never seen any contract." He says, in answer to question 809:

"I rather think he [Mather] told me that it had been made at private sale; but really I do not remember, for I did not pay any attention to the matter, or think it of any consequence. I did not give it much attention then, nor do I give it much attention now."

Again:

"Question 856. Then your sole reliance is on the honor of the parties as to any future distribution?"

"Answer. Yes, sir. I never should ask a question outside those gentlemen. I was perfectly satisfied."

Then again:

"Question 858. Who furnished the money for this purchase, and of whom did you have the money which you paid?"

"Answer. I had it of Mrs. Richard Schell—my wife—who has an estate of some hundred thousand dollars."

"Question 859. Who furnished the other portion?"

"Answer. Mr. Mather furnished his portion. I think he furnished some eight or nine thousand dollars."

"Question 860. State whether you received any portion of it from your brother, Augustus Schell?"

"Answer. My wife borrowed some money of my brother."

"Question 861. How much?"

"Answer. I think $5,000."

Once more:

"Question 787. What interest or expectation in it did you have before the return of Dr. Graham and Mather from Minnesota?

"Answer. I expected to go into it just where they meant to place me in it. I did not consider it a matter of any great moment or consequence. Those men did the business, and I was invited to rely upon them."

Mr. Mather says he proposed to admit Augustus Schell. Mr. Richard Schell asked his brother about taking an interest. It was declined because he was about to become, or had become, a Government officer. Mr. Augustus Schell does not say whether he shall be a public officer four years hence; and it is to be remembered that the interests or shares of the purchasers have not yet been separated; but he does say the $5,000 loan to Mrs. Schell, his brother's wife, who was a purchaser unawares, has not yet been repaid.

Graham says the company was made up before he left this city, so far as the New York interest was concerned.

Mather says the understanding was had after he arrived out there. He also says Schell had no interest in the purchase when made, and not until his return to New York.

Schell says there was an understanding about it, and that they would not pay more than ninety thousand dollars; and yet he afterwards says:

"Question 818. Up to what price, before making the purchase, did you undertake to go in order to get it?"

"Answer. I do not think I ever had anything to do with it in that way, or ever made arrangements in that way."

At one time he cannot swear positively, and at last he says, "Yes, there was a general understanding before Graham and Mather left New York."

Mather does not remember exactly the amount of money which he paid.

From such conflicting statements as these, by which it is clear the purchasers do not know their own copartners, or that they do not understand their own business alike, we are left to draw our own inferences; but there is no clew to all the real owners.

Under all these circumstances, with all these facts, drawn mostly, too, from parties directly interested, I submit that the reputation of our common country demands that we brand this sale with the seal of our strongest disapprobation. The purchasers have no title as yet, and they deserve none.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[A message was here received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference, upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 201) making appropriations for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government, for the year ending 30th of June, 1859.]

Mr. FAULKNER. It is not to be supposed that within the limited period allotted to a member upon this floor, it would be possible for me, in any detail, to discuss the several points of law and the question of facts that arise in this case. Fortunately it cannot be necessary. The majority and the minority reports of the select committee have been for weeks in the possession of this House, and it is fair to presume that they have received from every member of this body that careful and intelligent consideration which might be expected from their own high characters, and from the grave charges which are preferred against a high functionary of this Government.

Mr. Speaker, I will say one or two words in reference to those reports, which have been alluded to by the gentleman who preceded me. The minority, in their report, have sought in a fair and impartial manner to present to this House and to the country the real character of this transaction. It is true, we have passed over many irrelevant matters, some of which have been the subject of comment by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] this morning. But I speak with confidence when I here assert that we have omitted no fact material to a just judgment of this case. We have followed the law as it has been recognized by this Government for the last thirty years of your history, and as it has been expounded by the highest judicial tribunals of the country. And, sir, if we have committed any error, it has not resulted from a disposition to screen any man from just condemnation, nor to cover up any abuse from the exposure which it merits. Sir, arrogating, as I do, to the report signed by the gentleman from Kentucky

[Mr. BURNETT] and myself, the claim of strict impartiality, it may seem a little ungracious, especially after the compliment which the gentleman from Vermont has bestowed upon the gentleman from Kentucky and myself, as members of that committee, to express—as I must do in the discharge of the duty which I owe to this House—my strong condemnation of the tone and temper of the report of the majority. Sir, I do not question the tact and ability with which that document has been prepared. My complaint is, that its ability is displayed in presenting this case to the House, and before the country, in a light wholly different from what the testimony warrants. As a report from a committee of Congress, I have no hesitation in saying that it is more marked by partisan feeling and partisan bitterness than any document of a similar character that I have ever read. And I appeal to the members of this House who have listened to the gentleman from Vermont this morning, whether his speech is not characterized by the same partisan spirit, manifested in culling and collating from that evidence everything calculated to exacerbate party feeling, in at least a portion of this House.

Sir, that document abounds in loose and inaccurate statements of the evidence. It deals unfairly with the witnesses opposed to its views. In the same spirit of injustice which the gentleman has manifested this morning, it culls every hasty and incautious remark which happened to fall from a witness, and parades it with the skill of a practiced attorney, before this House as a fair illustration of his testimony; and, in its anxiety to produce an effect upon the country, and to cast ridicule upon a witness who has also been made a special object of assault by the gentleman from Vermont, it has transferred the answer given by him to one question, to another, altogether different from the one propounded to him. It deals in hypothesis, substitutes conjecture where the evidence is deficient in facts, and reaches its conclusions by disregarding the weight of the evidence embodied in the volume before you. It has censured the Secretary of War upon subordinate points where the record shows that he was not justly liable to censure; and (what, sir, in my mind is of far higher importance) it has omitted to do justice to that public officer in the only material and important point of this whole inquiry, and in a point in which I assume to say, and do say, without the fear of contradiction, that these gentlemen concurred in the effect and conclusion of the evidence with the gentleman from Kentucky and myself. Sir, I say that that committee have failed to do justice to the Secretary of War in the only material and vital point in this whole inquiry.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman wishes, I will state precisely what my position is.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me. He will find it unnecessary. Let me say what I was going to say; and then, if I am in error, I shall be most happy to be corrected. I say that the committee has failed to do justice to the Secretary of War in the only vital and material point in this whole inquiry. Sir, for what object and for what purpose was this committee ordered by this House on the 4th of January last? Was it to supervise a mere act of executive discretion? Was it to inquire how far the President of the United States and the Secretary of War had discharged, with good or bad judgment, a trust conferred on them by law? I cannot do this House the injustice to suppose that it ever meant to institute any such inquiry. Was it to ascertain whether of the millions of acres of the public lands which this year, and every year since the foundation of this Government, have been sold for one half, one quarter, or one tenth of their value, this parcel of seven thousand acres of public land, situated at the junction of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers, had sold for a few dollars less than it was actually worth? I say, sir, that no such subordinate object ever entered into the contemplation of this House when they authorized the appointment of this committee of investigation. You ordered this inquiry to satisfy your mind and to satisfy the country whether, as rumor had asserted, there was any corruption in the high places of this Government; and, if so, to bring the offender to punishment.

It is well known that immediately succeeding the sale of this reservation at Fort Snelling, there commenced, in the northern papers of this Union, attacks impeaching in strong terms the integrity and honor of the Secretary of War. So systematically and pertinaciously were these assaults maintained, that it is not to be disguised that through the North and South there was created a painful impression upon the public mind that he had in some form prostituted his official influence and power to some enormous and flagitious speculation, in which he, or some persons nearly connected with him, were interested.

When, therefore, on the 4th of January, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] brought before this House his resolution of inquiry into the facts and circumstances connected with the sale of Fort Snelling, with power to send for persons and papers, it was supposed that he gave credit to those imputations, and that he sought this committee as a means of establishing the facts before the country. It was in that sense that the resolution was received and acted upon by this House; it was in that sense that it was received by the country; it was in that sense that it was received by the committee of investigation; for, on the first day of our appointment, on the very first meeting of the committee, I introduced a resolution calling upon the gentlemen from Illinois to appear before that committee in person, and also to give us the names of all the persons upon whom he relied, from information or otherwise, as witnesses to establish any matter of fraud, corruption, or impropriety, in the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation. That, sir, I supposed was the only material and substantial inquiry for which that committee was appointed. I never dreamed that for three months we should have been occupied, at an expense to the people of the United States of some twenty thousand dollars, to determine for the benefit, either of the successful purchaser, or of the disappointed land speculator, whether Fort Snelling would or would not, at some future time, become the seat of a great and flourishing city; whether provisions could be transported more cheaply upon the backs of Government mules from Fort Snelling to Fort Ridgely, or more cheaply by steamboat from St. Paul to Fort Ridgely; whether it would better satisfy the people of the United States that Franklin Steele, or Robert Smith, or M. C. Smith, or any other Smith, should be the owner of this property; or whether one mode of sale might not be likely to put a larger sum into the Treasury than that which was adopted by the agents of the Government. That committee was in session for three months. It had surveyed the whole field of inquiry. Its search had been thorough and complete. It has found time to criticize the military judgment of the Secretary of War; to criticize his political errors; and even his temper. They have found time to assail the character of a private citizen of this Republic, to cast ridicule upon the witnesses, and to announce many propositions of bad law; yet, sir, in that report of forty pages there is not to be found one word or syllable touching that great, vital, and material point submitted to them—the official purity and integrity of the Secretary of War. Everything, in their judgment, is worthy of some notice, but that. I complain of this omission as an outrage upon justice. The official purity and disinterestedness of that functionary was, in my judgment, the main point of the whole inquiry. If guilty, his guilt should have been announced in thunder tones to the world. If free from all official taint or ground of just suspicion, that committee owed it to itself, to this House, and to the country, to say so, and thus dispel the clouds which malignity and falsehood had gathered around his name.

Now, sir, so long as there was any room for investigation upon that branch of the investigation; so long as it was not absolutely precluded by the fixed and admitted facts of the case, I was a constant attendant upon that committee; and I will appeal to the journal of the committee, and to the testimony of my colleagues, if any man manifested a more determined purpose than I did to ferret out and expose whatever might constitute a public wrong in this transaction. And, sir, had I elicited one single fact or circumstance from the beginning to the end of this affair, calculated, in the slightest degree, to taint the personal or official honor of the Secretary of War, so far from being restrained by the fact that he was from my own State and a Cabinet minister of an Administration to which I give my cordial support, I would have felt it a peculiar and especial duty which I owed to the State of Virginia, to the South, and to the Democratic party and to the country, to have been first and foremost to strike him down from a position which he would then have dishonored. But, sir, when the testimony conclusively exhibited the most absolute freedom from official guilt—when the very worst aspect which his worst enemies could give to it was to call it an official blunder, the result of inexperience, committed within the first forty days of his administration of that Department—I turned from the subject as one no longer worthy to be dignified as a congressional inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time in the history of this country in which the official conduct of a Cabinet officer has been the subject of investigation before this House. Some of the purest and noblest statesmen who have adorned the executive posts of this Government have been arraigned by the malignity of their enemies before this high tribunal of justice. But this, sir, is the first example in the history of this country, so far as my memory reaches, where, when such investigation has been ordered, and has resulted in the absolute exoneration of the high officer of the Government from all imputation upon his official honor and dignity, that it has not afforded pleasure to the committee charged with that duty to announce such to be the conclusion of their minds to the country.

The public character of our public men is a portion of the moral wealth of the country; and where they are free of offense, it should be our pride to guard it with jealous care. It is true, sir, that no purity of private character, and no fidelity to public trust, can arrest that rage for slander which marks the venal and prostituted portion of the press of this country, and of which we have some recent evidences. Yet, thank God, it has never yet been found in the history of this nation that the representatives of the people have failed to protect the official reputation of a public man, though an opponent, from unjust censure, when his conduct is made the subject of investigation here.

When Alexander Hamilton was charged with having defrauded that Treasury over which he presided, and to which he gave organization and life, although there were developed some matters not very creditable to him as a husband and a man, yet the committee, composed, as it was, of his political opponents, did not hesitate, when they perceived that his official robes were free from all stain, to make a prompt and cheerful annunciation of the fact to the world.

When Mr. Calhoun, in 1823, was arraigned, as Secretary of War, before this body, and charged with having made a private contract with Charles E. Mix, through the engineer department, for furnishing stone at Point Comfort, in violation of the usage and public policy of the Government, which prescribed that such contracts should alone be made, after public advertisement, to the lowest bidder, and when, after full investigation, the committee reported to the House that there was no fraud in the transaction, however irregular and against the usages of the Government, the whole subject was, without discussion or debate, laid upon the table by the House.

In 1824, when William H. Crawford, then Secretary of the Treasury, was charged with official corruption in the management of the western banks, in connection with the duties of the fiscal affairs of the Government, in all the turmoil and excitement of a presidential election—himself a candidate for the Presidency—and the committee of this House appointed by a rival candidate for the Presidency; whilst that committee may have found many matters of detail not in conformity to their own opinions of a sound and discreet administration of affairs, they nevertheless, upon a full investigation of the facts, concurred in a unanimous report exonerating him from all censure, so far as his official integrity was concerned; and when the fact was announced to the public, the whole country, without regard to party predilections, rejoiced at the result, as they will always rejoice, without distinction of party, when a high public officer is relieved from false imputations upon his official conduct; for the public feel an interest in the character of the public men of the country, unless, indeed, a high officer of the Government has done something which dishonors his place; and then we all feel that he should be stricken down by the arm of the public justice of the nation.

So, sir, as late as 1846, when that great and illustrious son of New England, Daniel Webster, was charged before this body with embezzling the secret service fund which was placed under his control as Secretary of State, the committee charged with that investigation, while they did not undertake to pronounce upon the propriety of the expenditure of that fund, yet they saw enough to exonerate his public and official character from the base assault made upon it, and they so promptly announced to the country. And when they did so, sir, there was not a man within the broad limits of this Republic—no, sir, not one within the limits of the civilized world—who had ever felt the power and influence of his mighty intellect, who did not rejoice at the result as a personal triumph, as sincerely and as fully as if he had himself been the subject of such investigation and acquittal.

Such, sir, has been the character of the investigations which have been heretofore instituted by this body, where high functionaries of the Government have been brought before it. The great and substantial point of every such inquiry, has been into the official integrity of the officer, and whether the facts sought, if ascertained to be true, would afford ground for impeachment. Congress has never undertaken to supervise the mere discretion of executive agents; this is the first example, I apprehend, in our history, where the attempt has been made to constitute this House the judge of the mere details of executive action, in the absence of all charge of official guilt and corruption.

Now, sir, I do not mean to place the present Secretary of War, as an historical character, upon the same pedestal with those distinguished statesmen to whom I have just referred; yet, sir, he is a Cabinet officer of your Government—he is a high public functionary of this Republic, and I assert, sir, that not Alexander Hamilton, nor John C. Calhoun, nor William H. Crawford, nor Daniel Webster, presented a cleaner record, and one more free from official guilt in the matters of their trial before the House, than the Secretary of War does in this investigation, and yet while men of all parties concurred in their triumphant vindication, there is not one word in the report of the majority that announces this result, or that seeks to shield his official honor and integrity from the malignity of his foes. Is this just? Is it manly? Is it honest? If he is guilty, condemn him. If innocent, he is entitled to something more than mere silence; he is entitled to your judgment of acquittal.

This is one of the fundamental points of difference between the reports of the minority and majority in this case. With the fact before them, which they cannot controvert, that there is not one fact in this entire evidence that affects or touches the official integrity of the Secretary of War, there is not a word in their report that awards to him an honorable acquittal. The minority report responds to that accusation which was essentially implied in the very character of this inquiry, and announces that there is nothing to impeach his honor or integrity.

I do not ask, and have not asked in my resolutions, that this House shall pass a vote of approval of his official conduct. I do not ask them to say whether he acted wisely or unwisely in the sale of this site. I do not ask them to sanction the mode of the sale, or the price paid for it to the Government. I regard all those as executive details, or judicial inquiries, over which this body has no rightful or legitimate jurisdiction. But I do ask, in the name of justice, and of my country, that when the evidence exonerates the Secretary of War from all official guilt, that you will have the manliness to say so.

Mr. Speaker, I differ altogether with this committee as to the powers and functions which it arrogates to the House of Representatives. I concede, to the fullest extent, the power of this House as one branch of the Legislature. I concede, to the fullest extent, the power of Congress to regulate and control executive discretion, where it is not derived directly from the Constitution. I concede, to the fullest extent, the power of this body to originate impeachments to be tried in the Senate; and I should not be disposed to quarrel with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] that there might be some occasional exercise of this right to show that such a power practically exists in Congress. I cannot agree with this committee, however, that this House may rightfully and properly administer legislative rebukes upon the good or the bad judgment exercised by the Executive in the performance of his official duties. Still less can I concede to this House the right to declare a sale void between a citizen of this Republic and the authorized agents of this Government. Such an exercise of power is a rank usurpation of the judicial functions of the Government, and is only relieved from features that would cause us to recoil and revolt at its exercise by the utter imbecility and impotency of any attempt to execute the judgment here decreed.

Sir, the powers of the three great departments of this Government are clearly and accurately defined by the Constitution, and are known to every tyro in jurisprudence. But I do not mean to discuss these points now. I shall not enter any plea to the jurisdiction of this House. I design to meet the questions raised here, and to meet them upon their broadest merits.

The chief assault which has been made against the Secretary of War in this case is against the military judgment which he exhibited in the sale of the Fort Snelling reserve. The French Convention made itself supremely ridiculous in history, by its efforts to regulate and control the movements of the revolutionary army of that Republic, and this body would find itself occupying a similar position in the eyes of the American people if it shall undertake to regulate the details of executive action. The committee finds fault with Mr. Heiskell because they say, that as he had never attained to the dignity of a third corporal in a militia company, therefore he must necessarily be unfit to make a sale of a piece of land that had once been set apart for the use of soldiers. Have these gentlemen of the committee attained the high dignity of third corporal in the militia, either of Vermont or any other State? Yet, sir, here they are with singular inconsistency, having no claim to military experience themselves, having never been third corporal in a militia company, sitting in judgment upon the act of the Commander-in-Chief of the American Army, done in the performance of his constitutional function, and sustained by an array of genuine military authority sufficient to sustain any question upon which a controversy could arise. Still, I do not mean to except to the competency of these gentlemen. Neither do I mean to pronounce any judgment upon the general fitness and capacity of the Secretary of War for the discharge of the duties for which he has been selected by the President. Let time develop whether the Secretary of War is, or is not fit for the place which he now fills. I have no judgment to pronounce on that point; but this I do say, that whether this act was the result of a fortunate guess or the result of military sagacity, it stands, according to the evidence in this record, so fully and conclusively vindicated, that no man can question the propriety of parting with that reserve who will take the pains to read and examine it carefully.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has given to some extent the history of the Fort Snelling reserve. It is sufficient to say that it was originally established to defend the frontier from Indian aggression; that it accomplished that purpose up to 1851, when, by treaties, the Indian title to forty-five thousand square miles was extinguished, and the Indians were removed to the northern and western portion of that Territory, since which time it has ceased to possess any value as a military post. Fort Ridgely and Fort Ripley were then established on the frontiers to accomplish precisely the purpose for which Fort Snelling had been erected some forty years before; a population of from two to three hundred thousand had poured into that portion of Minnesota lying between Fort Snelling and the Indian reserves; and it is now rare to see an Indian at Fort Snelling. The committee themselves tell us there is a population of thirty thousand within a radius of six miles of the fort. As a post of defense since 1851, Fort Snelling is as important as it would be to keep up a body of troops in the vicinity of Wheeling or Cincinnati, to protect the population of those two cities from the aggressions of the Indians.

You have before you the opinion of twenty Army officers, more or less distinguished for their high intelligence and military experience, every one of whom, without, a solitary exception, declares to you that Fort Snelling has ceased, since 1851, to be a post useful for any of the purposes of military defense, for which it was originally established. There is not one dissenting opinion in the whole record—not one. This, then, disposes of that aspect of the question. But a new idea has been suggested, as to the purposes for which that property might still be used; that having ceased to be valuable for any of the purposes of military defense, it might still be convenient to appropriate it as a depot, or place of storage, from whence clothing and subsistence stores might be forwarded by Government transportation to the frontier posts of Ridgely and Ripley; and it is alone in reference to this latter use that there has been expressed any diversity of opinion among the officers of the Army. The whole controversy, therefore, has been reduced to the simple inquiry: what is the most efficient and economical mode of furnishing supplies to those two frontier posts?

Now, sir, this idea of converting an old abandoned military site into a commercial storehouse, into a great Government depot, where wagons, oxen, mules, horses, and employes are to be kept up at the expense of the national Treasury, and at a cost, as General Jesup tells us, of indefinite thousands of dollars, for the purpose of competing with God and man, with steamboat and river navigation, in the supply of two small frontier forts with clothing and subsistence stores, is one of the most obsolete conceptions that ever entered into the head of a sensible man. It belongs to the worst fogism of the retired list of the Army. You complain of the enormous and increasing expenditures in the quartermaster's department. Never open your lips again in complaint, if you can censure the Secretary of War for exploding a fallacy and an absurdity so rank as this. The State of Minnesota is abundantly supplied with all the means and facilities of transportation. The rivers in that State are alive with steamboats. The best commission houses are to be seen in St. Paul, with competition to reduce all prices to a reasonable standard. There are no means of transportation which are not to be found in Minnesota, for all needful purposes, to as great an extent as in any other State of the Union. And yet, in the face of these admitted facts, it is contended that we must keep up an expensive Government establishment there, involving a large capital and at a heavy annual cost, to forward supplies, for the transportation of which, one small steamboat, once a year, would be adequate.

But the committee who made this report seems to treat this as an exclusively military question; as one wrapped up in all the mystery of professional learning, on which no man is authorized to have or express an opinion except he has epaulets on his shoulders. Why, Mr. Chairman, this is no military question at all. It is an ordinary commercial question. It is a simple question of economy of transportation. It is simply whether subsistence and provisions can be more cheaply carried on Government mules or in Government wagons from Fort Snelling to Fort Ridgely, or whether they can be more cheaply transported by steamboats from St. Paul to Fort Ridgely. Sir, there is an absurdity in calling this a military question, or in attaching this sort of professional mystery to it. Any man of common sense, acquainted with the course of business in the country, is as competent to decide questions of this kind as Winfield Scott, or Napoleon Bonaparte, if he were alive and on the spot. Military stores, it is true, are the subject of transportation; but the point to be solved is not strategy, but cheapness. They might as well call a steamboat a military steamboat because it carries bacon and flour to the soldiers at Fort Ridgely. You might, with as much propriety, call Pennsylvania avenue a military road, because a regiment of soldiers occasionally march over it, as to talk about this being a grave military question, because military stores are the subject of transportation. It is a mere question of economy of transportation. Is it cheaper, is it more economical, to transport supplies by means specially provided by Government, or by those usual and ordinary facilities furnished by the advantages of a cheap navigation and the enterprise of private citizens? The ridicule which they have sought to cast upon Mr. Heiskell, because, as a plain citizen, of vigorous common sense, and not having attained a higher grade than third corporal in a Virginia company, he has presumed to have his opinion on this subject, will fall harmless at his feet, or take wings and return to light upon their own shoulders.

But, if this is a military question, determinable only by military authority, let us see how it stands on the testimony of the officers of the Army. The majority of the committee say there are several professional experts on whose testimony they rely. I cannot concede them quite so many. There are but three officers whose opinions are worth referring to, who have taken what I regard strong and decided opinions in favor of the retention of this fort as a depot. The first is Colonel Thomas, an assistant quartermaster general of the Army; and, pray, sir, upon what ground does he justify his opinion? Whilst he admits that transportation can be readily furnished from St. Paul, by the citizens of that place, he proceeds to say that there are two modes of supply—one by our own teams and trains, and the other by citizens:

"As a military man, I would not wish to throw myself into the hands of citizens; for in an emergency they will combine against you. At first you might get supplies from citizens at a reasonable rate; but the moment you break your own supply trains they will combine against you."

And is it by slanders of this kind—slanders upon the patriotism and public spirit of our people—that this obsolete, foggy policy of keeping up expensive Government establishments is to be justified and defended?

But I have not time to proceed with the just criticism which I might make upon the opinions, and reasons for their opinions, given by Captain Thom, Major Martin, General Churchill and Captain Simpson. I pass them by to grapple with all those weightier names, whose authority has been so freely invoked by the committee. General Scott, in all his testimony, uses no stronger language than that Fort Snelling may be of some convenience to the troops on the frontier. It remains of some little utility as a depot of storage. It would have been inconvenient to have abandoned it last summer. This is the usual language in which he speaks of it. General Jesup thinks supplies could be forwarded as cheaply by private enterprise as by Government means, but not so certainly. He admits that he may be biased in favor of the retention of Fort Snelling, by the fact that it was selected originally by Mr. Calhoun, upon his report. He states that he has found no difficulty heretofore in obtaining in that country the means of transportation. That much of the value of Fort Snelling as a depot has been removed by the rapid settlement on the frontier; that the supplies could now be placed at St. Paul, the head of navigation, and taken up from there to Fort Ridgely by the river or by land.

Now, what is the evidence on the other side? You have, first, the opinion of General Persifer Smith, the commandant of the military division in which Fort Snelling is situated, and you have his clear, logical, and conclusive reasoning on the subject. He shows that the site fulfills none of the conditions requisite for a point of supply. You have the opinion of Colonel Francis Lee, who, by the transfer to Utah, and death of General Smith, is now in command of the same military department, and who was four years in command of that post. You have the opinion of Major Eastman, who was for nine years also stationed there. You have the opinion of Captain Whitall, who was two years at that post; and of Lieutenant Drum, a most intelligent young officer, who has been, for some six or seven years, stationed in that department, all concurring in its utter inutility as a depot of supply.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are facts in this case which are stronger than even the opinions of the ablest military minds, to which I can only briefly advert. The very location of Fort Snelling unfits it for a depot. In the ordinary stages of water the river is not navigable for large boats above St. Paul; and in the fall and winter access to it by the river is frequently cut off by the running ice, requiring a circuit of eighteen miles to reach it. It is situated on a high bluff—some two hundred feet high—so high that an intelligent officer of the Army has said, in the course of his testimony, that he would rather, in an ordinary stage of water, take provisions from St. Paul to Fort Ridgely—one hundred and thirty miles—than have them removed up the high hill to the warehouses at Fort Snelling. You have another fact; and that is, that it was not used for any such purpose. Colonel Lee, who was in command of the fort from 1851 to 1854, tells you that such an idea was never thought of as the use of Fort Snelling as a depot; that the stores were all purchased at St. Paul, or elsewhere, and sent direct to the respective forts, and never deposited at Fort Snelling, to be thence forwarded. Then you have the fact, in the testimony of General Jesup, that a responsible citizen in the West has made a proposition to the War Department, in which he has expressed his readiness to transport all these stores to the frontier posts at one half what it has cost the Government; and the Quartermaster General says he means to hold him to the offer.

Now, sir, in the face of these opinions from some of the ablest military men in the country, and in the face of the clear and incontrovertible facts to which I have referred, the select committee announce the following as the conclusion of their minds:

"The committee has come to the conclusion of the importance of Fort Snelling, for military purposes, up to the present time, and for some time to come, on the official opinions, clear and concurrent, of those having the frontier defense, as a system, in charge, and who, besides having a personal knowledge of the post, are, from superior position and a knowledge of the requirements of the service, best able, and only able, to give a reliable opinion of its local and general advantages."

"By relying on such superior means of information and judgment only, the committee has been compelled to reject some subordinate and unprofessional opinions as of no value whatever."

Subordinate and unprofessional opinions! Is this the language in which the opinions of General Persifer Smith, Colonel Lee, Major Eastman, Captain Whitall, and Lieutenant Drum are to be characterized? Who could have a better personal and official knowledge of the value of that post than officers who had resided for years at the post, and who stood in direct and immediate official connection with the spot?

So far the case rests upon the testimony as it stood before the report of the committee. But important evidence has accumulated since. During the latter part of April and early in May, a board, composed of the ablest and most experienced officers of the Army, met upon the spot, and, after a careful examination of the whole ground of inquiry, presented their report.

I have no hesitation in saying that, had I been consulted by the Secretary of War, I never would have advised him to have convened that board of officers. I would have been content to let the case rest as it stood upon the testimony before the committee, which sufficiently vindicates his military sagacity. Yet, sir, I cannot censure the Secretary of War for choosing to support his military judgment before the country by a piece of testimony so conclusive as this. A committee of this House, whether composed of third corporals or not, I cannot say, but still a committee of this body, had brought in a report condemning the military judgment of that high officer. Now, sir, the military judgment of the Secretary of War, so long as he presides over that Department, is as important and as valuable to him and to the country as the prestige of military judgment is to the commander-in-chief of an army in the field. And no one, surely, can censure a faithful and conscientious officer, under these circumstances, in seeking to have that military judgment fairly and properly sustained before the American people. He was no party to these inquiries that were prosecuted before the select committee. So far as he was concerned, they were all ex parte.

Was he summoned, sir, before that committee? Was he interrogated as to the grounds and reasons of his opinion and action? Was he even advised of his proceedings? Was he called upon for a defense? Was he even asked to furnish a list of witnesses to appear before the committee? No, sir. Upon the motion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL] the whole matter was placed under the seal of secrecy and confidence. The Secretary of War was indirectly assailed by the committee; his military sagacity and fitness for his place were questioned; not his honor nor his integrity; for they could not find, in all the testimony, one hint nor one suggestion to impugn either his honor or integrity; but his military judgment was assailed. Was it not, then, justifiable in him, under these circumstances, as there happened to be a very able body of officers collected in that western country, to constitute them a board to examine this site, and to report to the country whether it was or was not important, either as a point of defense or a point of supply? Now, who composed this board? General Harney, Colonel Johnston, Major Macrae, Major Chapman, Major Sherman, Captain Humphreys, and Captain Pleasanton. Most of these officers are known to the country.

I had a conversation upon this subject, a few days ago, with the late Secretary of War, the Hon. JEFFERSON DAVIS, whose authority has been most unfairly invoked here in opposition to the action of the present Secretary of War, as I could satisfactorily show if I had time; and when I stated to him the names of the officers who composed this board, he said to me, "Sir, it is a most able board; there is one single man upon it, Captain Humphreys, whose single opinion, if my own judgment had been the other way, would be sufficient to make me reconsider my views, such is my confidence in his knowledge, his integrity, his capacity, his power of judging what is and what is not demanded in that particular by the interests of the country." I asked him if I might be at liberty to repeat the substance of his remarks before the House, in the discussion of this question, and he told me that I could. Now, what do these able and experienced officers say? I can only quote an extract from its conclusion:

"The resources of Minnesota are sufficient to meet all the demands which the Government will ever be called upon to make in that quarter for the transportation of troops and supplies, at a very reasonable cost.

"The board is satisfied that the town of St. Paul, being the head of ordinary navigation on the Mississippi, would be the most suitable point of deposit and transshipment for the posts on the frontier to the north and west. By establishing a depot of supplies at Fort Snelling, the expense of an additional shipment would often be incurred, to say nothing of other material disadvantages arising from its locality, that will involve a loss of time and additional expense. The cost of maintaining a depot at Fort Snelling will be at least five times as great as the expense of forwarding supplies through St. Paul to the frontier. The duties of the subsistence and quartermaster's departments, in the receiving, purchasing, and forwarding supplies, being mostly of a commercial character, the experience of service has proved it more expedient to use the business facilities of commercial places for these purposes than to establish depots at military stations in their vicinity.

"The board respectfully suggest the entire abandonment of Fort Snelling, both as a military station and depot, and the establishment of an agency at St. Paul to forward the necessary supplies to the posts on the frontier by means of private transportation. This method of supply by private transportation, which was used here for several years, proved to be the most economical to the Government, and is the mode by which the quartermaster's department supplies, generally, the numerous posts established on the whole of our extensive frontier.

"The board is unanimous in the opinion expressed in these proceedings."

Here is this board of officers, who proclaim to you, and to the country, the precise idea upon which the Secretary of War has acted, that to maintain Fort Snelling as a depot of supply would cost the Government five times as much as an agency established at St. Paul.

The gentleman from Vermont has made some allusions to certain memorials from the people of Minnesota, which were presented here a few days ago by me because the Representatives of that State had not then been admitted to their seats. Those petitions disclose a most remarkable state of facts. In most portions of the country a great popular demand is made for the establishment of these military posts; and that demand has led to the vice which too universally prevails in our military system, of having numerous posts scattered over the country. But what do we see here? In 1855, the Legislature of Minnesota petitioned Congress and the Secretary of War to sell Fort Snelling, as being useless to the Government for any purpose, either of defense or supply. In 1857, the constitutional convention of Minnesota petitioned the Secretary of War—with the name, I believe, of every member appended—urging him to sell Fort Snelling. And now, in 1858, petitions to the same effect come here, with three hundred and sixty-six signatures to them—not signed, as the gentleman from Vermont has said, by a few Federal officeholders, but signed by the bone and sinew of the country—by the Governor, the judges, attorney general, merchants, farmers, lawyers, land agents, and men of every pursuit in life—of men that give character, dignity, and respectability to the community in which they live. But I shall leave the defense of their own constituents to the able Representatives of Minnesota. They know these signers, and can testify that they are entitled to all the weight that I claim for their opinions. These memorialists say that Fort Snelling is not only no longer useful for any military purpose, but they go on further, and say that they believe it has been sold for its full value, or beyond it. Here is the judgment of the vicinage—the declaration of hundreds residing almost in sight of the reservation, testifying to the honesty and fairness of the sale, and declaring their full approval of the action of the Secretary of War.

Mr. Speaker, I must take time to make a word of comment upon an expression made use of by the gentleman from Vermont, which, in my judgment, perfectly illustrates the spirit that has actuated this whole proceeding from beginning to end. From what part of the evidence did the gentleman from Vermont get this term which he applies to these gentlemen when he speaks of them as the Virginia and New York Company?

Mr. MORRILL. Does the gentleman wish an answer?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. MORRILL. The testimony of Dr. Graham speaks of a New York company; and from the fact that Dr. Graham was a Virginian, I thought I was justified in applying the term which I used.

Mr. FAULKNER. Justified by what?

Mr. MORRILL. Justified by the testimony of Dr. Graham himself. As he was also a member of the company which he speaks of as the New York Company, I thought I was justified in calling it the Virginia and New York Company.

Mr. FAULKNER. Sir, it is a sheer interpolation. The gentleman was not justified in the use of any such term. But, sir, it is characteristic of the spirit which animates this whole proceeding. It was to excite prejudice against the Secretary of War, who is from Virginia. Appeals are thus made to the prejudices of the country, instead of addressing its justice and reason.

The committee have rebuked the Secretary of War for appointing incompetent agents of sale; and they ask you to adopt a resolution declaring them to be incompetent, unqualified, and inexperienced. And who are these agents?

Major Eastman, of the Army, who has been for thirty years in the military service of the country, and who, for nine years, was stationed at Fort Snelling—an officer of intelligence, of unimpeached honor, and of high character. Who was the other commissioner of sale? William King Heiskell—a plain Virginia farmer, I admit—one who had no previous experience in the sale of public property, but a man of great shrewdness, of keen observation, and of unbending fidelity to the trust reposed in him. When Senator Rice found some fault with his conduct as one of the commissioners of sale, I asked him whether he censured his conduct for a want of zeal or for an excessive zeal for the interest of the Government. He replied that he found fault with him for the excess of zeal which he manifested for the interest of the Government. Such is honest William K. Heiskell. He is a frank, outspoken man; and, in his bluntness and honesty, says many things that a more discreet and cautious witness would reserve to himself. It was remarked of Charles II. of England, that he never said a foolish thing, and never did a wise one. Mr. Heiskell is one of those men of opposite character—he may sometimes say a foolish thing, but, I believe, rarely does an unwise one. Let the manner in which he executed the trust reposed in him decide the question of his competency. Judge him not by the portrait made of him by the select committee. I undertake to say that, from the foundation of the Government to the present time, no land belonging to the Government has sold for a better price, in proportion to its value, nor has any land sold for as much, with the exception of a small reservation located in the heart of the city of Chicago. I should like to notice some of the comments of the committee upon his evidence, but time will not permit.

Now, sir, I desire to say something upon the mode in which this property was sold. I have already, in my report, stated in very distinct terms my repugnance to all sales of Government property at private sale. I need not repeat my views. They are founded upon general considerations of policy, and not because experience has shown that public sales of Government lands have been beneficial to the Treasury. The reverse has been the case.

Still, no law has been violated by this mode of disposing of this reserve. The law of Congress authorizes a private sale; and the evidence shows a condition of things in which the exercise of this discretion may well be pardoned under the circumstances. I reject the case as a precedent, and judge it only on its special circumstances.

The committee has fallen into a very grave error in their reasoning on this subject. They contend that whilst the law of 1819 and 1857 gave full authority to the Secretary of War to sell when a site was useless, still that in executing the sale he should conform to those general provisions of law which regulate our land policy, by dividing it into small sections and selling it at public auction.

Sir, I see no warrant for this opinion in any fair construction of the law. A very marked diversity of policy has, from the commencement of our Government, characterized the legislation of Congress in reference to the great mass of the public domain and the reserves severed from it. The first has already been required to be sold at public auction; the disposition of the latter has been left discretionary with the Secretary of War to sell as he may think will best promote the interests of the Government. I have before me an opinion of Judge McLean, that, to my mind, is perfectly satisfactory on this point. It accords with the uniform construction given to this statute, from its passage. I will read an extract from it. After citing the act of 1819, and especially that portion of it which provides "that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the payment of the consideration agreed for, into the Treasury of the United States," to execute a deed, &c.:

"This law (continues the judge) was not intended to be a general regulation; but authorized the sale of military reserves, which, at that time, had become useless. It changed the settled mode of selling public lands, as it authorized the Secretary to sell for a price agreed on, which precludes, or, at least, renders unnecessary, a sale by public auction, as the general law for the sale of the public lands required. This consideration, as well as the purport of the section, showed that it was not a general regulation, but was intended to operate upon military reservations, which then existed and which were unnecessary."—McLean's Reports, vol. 6, page 526.

This decision seems to answer all the objections which I have heard urged against the details of this sale—so far, I mean, as its mere legality is concerned—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I was not one of the committee to which the subject of this transaction was originally referred; but being one of the body to which they have brought back their report and the evidence which sustains it, I have felt it my duty to submit some of the views which will control my vote upon this subject.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman to give me the floor for a minute. I wish to know of gentlemen on the other side of the House, whether it is their intention to press this subject to a vote to-day?

Several MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I would suggest that we agree to take the vote to-morrow at twelve o'clock, and let the debate go on to-night as long as gentlemen may see fit to speak.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I wish to know if it is the intention of the gentleman that this debate shall continue to-morrow until twelve o'clock?

Mr. BURNETT. That was my proposition.

Mr. LOVEJOY. Then I shall object, and hope the vote will be taken to-night.

Mr. BURNETT. Then let the debate go on this evening, and the vote be taken to-morrow, without debate.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest that it be the understanding that the previous question shall be seconded to-night, but that the vote shall not be taken till twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make an inquiry about this arrangement; whether it is to be the understanding that there be nothing else done to-day, and that this discussion go on?

Mr. BURNETT. My proposition is this: that this discussion shall go on to-night, with the understanding that the previous question shall be ordered before we adjourn; that we shall then take the vote to-morrow at twelve o'clock, but that no other business shall be done to-night.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. As one member of that committee, I cannot consent to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Before the proposition of my colleague [Mr. BURNETT] is acceded to, I wish to make a single suggestion. If it is the intention, by this arrangement, to cut off all propositions to amend, I shall object. I think the resolutions of the committee ought to be modified or amended, and I cannot consent to any arrangement which will prevent amendments from being offered.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection myself to any amendment whatever being offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that only one amendment can now be offered.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky if there is any reason why, if the vote is to be taken until some time to-morrow, the discussion shall not go on until the time agreed on?

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection at all to that; I have no feeling in the matter.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LEVEY] objected to the adoption of the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, unless debate is to be closed to-night.

Mr. STANTON. I hope the gentlemen from Illinois will not insist upon his objection. I think it is unreasonable to ask us to vote upon this mass of testimony with only three or four hours' discussion. I would propose that the time for taking the vote be postponed till two o'clock to-morrow, and that in the mean time the debate go on.

Mr. BURNETT. I will make this proposition to the House: that we take the vote to-morrow at twelve o'clock, with the understanding that this debate is continued up to that time.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I cannot consent to that arrangement; and I will state my reasons why. Another special committee was raised to examine into the purchase of the Willett's Point property. I understand that the report of that committee will be made to-morrow morning. I understand, too, that these two transactions, of Fort Snelling and the Willett's Point property, are somewhat connected together. The same parties, it appears, who purchased Fort Snelling, a few days before had sold to the Government the Willett's Point property.

Mr. DAWES. Does this come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I wish to say further that I want to have the privilege of seeing that report before I cast my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is hardly in order to discuss a report not yet submitted.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am a member of that Willett's Point committee; and if the gentleman knows that the report will be submitted to-morrow, he knows more than I do.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I was so informed by the chairman of that committee.

Mr. DAWES. I only yield if I can have my time afterwards.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. GROW. Has there been any arrangement in reference to the time when the vote shall be taken?

The SPEAKER. There is none, objection having been made.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Georgia. I give notice, that to-morrow, or to-night, when the discussion is closed, I will call for the previous question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to give way to me for a moment, that I may present a report from the Committee of Elections, in order that it may be ordered to be printed. It will only take a moment, and it will save a day in acting on the question.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that I cannot have my allotted time while this discussion goes on, and therefore I am constrained to claim the floor. I was about saying, when I was interrupted, that having read the reports and the evidence in this case, and being called upon to take my share of responsibility in the vote we shall take on this matter, I have made haste to get the floor, to offer, at this time, what little I may desire to say, that the debate upon this important question might close with the views of abler and more experienced gentlemen who might participate in the discussion.

Mr. Speaker, I have read those reports, and am prepared to vote for the resolution submitted by the majority of that committee. In coming to this conclusion, I do not affect an absence of party bias. I am conscious, perhaps, of as much party bias in the consideration of subjects here, as any member upon this floor; but I trust that in weighing a question of this kind, I have honesty enough to hold the scales of justice even, and to give the evidence submitted, and the circumstances which hang around this case, all the weight they ought to have. In the discussion of a question whether fraud may exist in a transaction of this nature, it ought not to be so much whether it may be found on one side or the other, as whether, when found, it shall be so concealed and defended. It is the concealment or the defense of fraud that justly brings odium upon any party. When fraud or corruption shall come to be a party question; when one side or the other shall attempt to cover up the tracks of the guilty in its ranks, then it is that odium commences to attach itself, and that party only suffers that undertakes to conceal, or omits to lay bare and probe the sore. That there may be on the one side and the other, accusations made without foundation, I doubt not; but it is only when we fail to weigh, as a judicial tribunal, all evidence of fraud or corruption that shall be brought to our notice—it is only when we feel called upon by party ties and party restraints to cover up and palliate a wrong, that we are bringing down upon ourselves, as a party, that odium which will weigh us to the ground.

Sir, I believe that the sale of Fort Snelling, in the manner, for the price, to the person, and at the time it was sold, was the consummation of a scheme laid in the past Administration, and carried out in the present one, before the eyes of the Secretary of War, in such a manner that blindness to it is the gravest official fault. I have not undertaken, in the evidence that is presented, to search after the direct testimony of anybody that these men who engaged in this scheme proclaimed their connection with it from the house-tops. My little observation of the world has taught me that, when men do thus undertake such a scheme as this, they never proclaim it to the world; and until some one of them turns State's evidence—the biggest rascal of them all, usually—it is only then that you find from the lips of any of them a confession of guilt.

But, sir, there are circumstances over and above the testimony of the witnesses which carry conviction to my mind, and constrain me to believe that the resolutions of the majority of the committee are sustained by the facts which existed in the case. What are the circumstances of the case? This Fort Snelling reservation is a large tract of country, situated at the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers. The quantity of land has never been made certain. It is variously estimated, even at this late day of the investigation, at five thousand, six thousand, seven thousand five hundred, eight thousand, and eleven thousand acres. The Lord knows best how much there is in it. It is the most beautiful tract of country, I am told, that there is on the face of the earth. On this territory was situated the dwelling and the property of one man, and only one, besides the property of the Government. Mr. Steele had built his house and had erected property on the soil of the Government, without any right, as he confesses, to the amount of $30,000, according to the report of the commissioners. He had lived there twenty years, and had made an immense fortune while living there. Seven children had been born to him there. There he had settled down to live. This was the position of Mr. Steele. He had in his eye all along, he testifies, the time when the land should be brought into market, and that he himself would secure it.

It was generally understood all about there, that he was calculating, by some means or other, to become the possessor and owner of this soil. Otherwise, all his property was gone. He had no hold, in law, on his improvements. Unless he became the possessor and owner of this soil, he had no security that all his investment there would not be taken away by some other person, and applied to his own use. He says himself, and that is the testimony of the other witnesses, that he had calculated from the beginning to become the owner of that property. More than a year before, he tried to purchase it, and made a written offer to the Government for it, at fifteen dollars an acre, cash down; but the then Secretary of War was against the sale. A year passed over. That Administration went out of power and a new one came in. With it, came in a provision of law—inserted by the direct influence of the very man who carried his first proposition to Secretary Davis to purchase—authorizing the sale. On the 7th of April, afterwards, this same man made a new application, for Mr. Steele, to the new Secretary of War, for the purchase of this property. That application was referred to General Jesup, and came back with an unfavorable report. These facts were known to the Secretary of War; and yet, in a short time, a man is sent out there to survey that property, preparatory to its sale. Mr. Steele is residing there. Nobody else is there. He sits by quietly, without any apprehension as to any other person becoming the purchaser of the property. He occasionally remarks to the surveyor that "it might be better to sell this at private sale. It would be dangerous to trust it at auction." Beyond that, not a word was said. He was the only mortal man who knew that Major Eastman was there surveying the property for the purpose of its sale, and he was at perfect ease as to the person who was ultimately to be the purchaser. Would any man, having $30,000 involved, who had not, from some source or other, ascertained that, in the fullness of time, he would be permitted to purchase on his own terms, have sat down so quietly as did Mr. Steele? It is pretended that there had been no communication between him and the Government as to what this all meant. No question had been, forsooth, put by him to mortal man as to whether the Government contemplated driving him from his home, or exposing him to the chances of a sale to some other person who would drive with him such a bargain as he pleased, or none at all, as might best suit his cupidity. Sir, his acts from the beginning, all through, are open to but one construction, and tell but one story. No other story is consistent with the action and course of that man. He knew, before Major Eastman reached Fort Snelling, who was to be its purchaser, and what forms were to be gone through with before the sale was to be consummated, and his knowledge did not mislead or fail him.

This man had been there a sufficient length of time surveying, but before he had ascertained how many acres there were there to sell, before he had uttered to mortal man his purpose of surveying it, except to this Mr. Steele, there joins him a new commissioner, Mr. Heiskell, who is authorized, jointly with him, to sell this property. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know how this is to be construed as an ordinary business transaction? Not an anxious look, not an anxious inquiry, followed the announcement of the object of this commission. Indeed, no announcement at all of that object was made, save in the ear of Mr. Steele. No step was taken by him that would indicate the least anxiety on his part as to the reason why, or the person to whom, this property was to be sold. The next day after Heiskell came there he came to Mr. Steele with an offer to sell to him. There was no manifestation of surprise on his part. It was in accordance with his belief. It was in accordance with his understanding. For, if he had not that understanding, there was no reason in his conduct and in his management of his affairs. It was the fulfillment of promise or prophecy.

Now, sir, in corroboration of this is the whole course of conduct on the part of the commissioners themselves. Major Eastman, who first went out there as a surveyor, preparatory, as he says, to the sale, understood, when he went there, that he was to survey that property, and ascertain how much there was of it, and get it in readiness for the sale when the man should come there who was authorized to sell it; and yet, sir, he kept that fact a secret. He went out there without the necessary implements to discharge the duty for which he was sent. He had to borrow the instruments he needed from an officer of the Army who was upon the spot, but he kept secret from him the ultimate purpose of their use. He told no man. He hardly believes that he told Mr. Steele himself what he was there for. And all this, he would have us believe, without any instructions to keep it secret; without any intimation from the War Department that he was to keep it secret; without any idea of a combination having been entered into here or any where else at that time! Sir, there was something understood by the parties that did not need words; something that talked plainer and more directly to the point than any words that man could use. He kept the object of his visit a profound secret until Mr. Heiskell came there to join him in the sale of that land; and, then, sir, on the very next day, before he had ascertained how much land there was, or who desired to purchase it, he, with Mr. Heiskell, made a written offer of this whole property, without reserve, without condition, without stipulation, to Mr. Steele.

Now, sir, I say that is inexplicable. Why, these men went to work and sold the property before they knew how much there was of it. If there was any need of a surveyor going out there at all, there was need of his bringing to some definite account the result of his labors: but up to this day, or up to the last day he appeared before the committee—if they have reported his testimony correctly—he cannot tell how much land there is there. He expressed the opinion, on examining his papers and data, some months after the sale, that there were about eleven thousand acres of the land. He has, before the committee, fixed different amounts, and finally said, "I cannot tell you the exact number of acres;" and that is all the testimony, as to the extent of the property, which we have from the man who thinks, or would have us think, that he was sent out there to ascertain how much land there was.

The course of the other commissioner corresponds with this policy. He went there as ignorant of this land as I am. He had never crossed the Ohio river in his life. He had never owned a foot of land outside of Virginia. He had never superintended a public work, except a salt-pit. He had never sold land for anybody in all his days. According to his own account, he went over this property twice on those two days before it was sold—the first time to hunt for Major Eastman, and the next time, he says, he went about the buildings, although he says he saw nobody—no officers or soldiers, and spoke to nobody. The commanding officer of the fort says he never saw him there. You can judge how much he examined the buildings. And with no more knowledge than that of the value of the property, he joined with Major Eastman in an offer to sell it to Mr. Steele, to the exclusion of everybody else.

Sir, that they sold it at the price for which they did, in pursuance of a scheme—a plan laid down in the past Administration—is just as evident as any other step in this whole proceeding. Well, sir, they sold it, nominally, for $90,000. When they made the offer to Mr. Steele to sell this property to him, he made them an offer of $75,000 for it. It would hardly do on paper to say, your offer is a very fair one, and you shall have the property at your own price. No; they had solemnly made up their minds that they would have $90,000 for that property. And in order to carry out, as nearly as possible, what somebody understood to be the plan, it was arranged, that, although these parties should pay $90,000 for the property, they should only pay $30,000 of it down, and $30,000 next year, and $30,000 the year after, without interest.

Now, it is in the testimony, and it is known to every member of this House, that at a rate of interest which money was worth in that market, at a rate of interest at which you could have invested $1,000,000 in that Territory, in a month these gentlemen more than made up the difference between $90,000, which they nominally gave, and $75,000 cash down, which they offered a year before, and which they determined now to offer. Money was then, and is now, worth at least two and a half per cent. a month there; and the interest of $30,000 for one year, and of $30,000 for two years, is $22,500, which was thus given Steele in this purchase, bringing the cost of Fort Snelling down to $67,500.

It is quite evident, too, from the conduct of the parties interested in this sale, that it was but carrying out a part of the plan before laid and understood from the beginning between the parties to this transaction—Mr. Steele, Mr. Graham, Mr. John C. Mather, Mr. Richard Schell and wife. The wife, I presume, had no connection with the matter more than was necessary to make her one of the parties to the contract. Mr. Steele had originally calculated to get the whole of the property. He made his proposition to the Secretary of War a year before, which was rejected; and rejected upon one ground, among others, that the price offered was far below its value. That reason Mr. Steele saw on record. It was on file with the adverse report of General Jesup upon the application. Then appeared, for the first time in this affair, Dr. Graham. He first enters upon the stage in the character of a gentleman at court, paying his respects to a Cabinet minister. He was bound, as a true Virginian, to call on the Secretary of War. He did call on him; and incidentally, not accidentally, suggested to him that he was going out West "to invest." I do not know what, for it appears that he had not a dollar of money to invest; but he wanted to know of the Secretary of War if he could not give him something that would pay his expenses out there. The Secretary replied that he could not, unless it was to sell some old forts. It was then, he would have us think, the first idea occurred to him that this fort was for sale. As a high-minded man, he at once eschews temptation, and decided not to take the agency. He starts for New York, and there enters into a combination with Mather and Schell to purchase the reservation. But before he goes to New York, he sees Steele, goes round by the way of Fort Snelling, and holds a consultation with him on the subject. He then comes back to Washington by New York, and this combination was organized, in which Mr. Steele was embraced, and was alone thereafter to appear upon the surface and move the springs and conduct the game. He then starts back to Minnesota with Mr. Heiskell, who held in his pocket a commission for selling the property. He goes in the same train of cars with him, but only now as a gentleman at large, traveling for pleasure and to see the country. No one uninitiated knows the purpose of this second visit. Mr. Mather follows him the next day, taking with him a commission to examine for sale Fort Ripley. I suppose, for the sake of decency, he did not go in the same train of cars, but the parties arrived there nearly at the same time and for the same purpose. I can come to no other conclusion, from the evidence. It appears from the testimony that about this time, at least before the sale, Dr. Graham got sight of Heiskell's instructions, and played out his game with the Government, like the man at cards who looks into the hand of him he plays against. Heiskell spends the first day in hunting up Major Eastman. He spends the second day in making an offer to Steele, in receiving a proposal, and in closing up the bargain; and John C. Mather, who was there for the purpose of making an examination of Fort Ripley preparatory to sale, drew up the contract as the lawyer of Steele. Now, sir, you have in all this a key of the motives by which they were actuated, the purposes they were to accomplish, and the agencies through which they succeeded.

These commissioners say they were afraid of combinations, yet themselves nursed into success the only combination which existed. Who are the men who intimated to them the danger of combination? Why, sir, Mr. Steele, who purchased, intimated it; Mr. Rice, who was aiding him, intimated it. Mr. Steele, the man who wanted to perfect the sale, and Mr. Rice, the man who procured the clause to be inserted into the bill authorizing the Secretary of War to make the sale. They, according to the evidence before us, were the men, and the only men, who intimated to these commissioners the danger of combination if the property was sold at public sale. But when Major Eastman was called to say who told him that there would be combinations formed, he said that Heiskell knew more about it than he did, and that he got his idea of combinations from Heiskell. When Heiskell is asked where he got his information on the subject, he replies that Major Eastman knew more about it than he did, and that he got his idea of combinations from Major Eastman.

The conduct of the Secretary of War also, if the gentleman from Virginia will pardon me, leads me to this same conclusion. He had been in office but a few weeks, or a month, when he sent this man on this mission. There was on file the opinion of his predecessor in office, a gentleman distinguished in that branch of the public service, against this sale. He had also on record the offer of Mr. Steele, made a year before, of fifteen dollars an acre for the whole of this reservation, cash down; and General Jesup's report upon that offer, that it was far below the real value. But, sir, he had not within himself made up his opinion that this property was no longer needed for the public service. At least, he put on paper that he had not; for, in his instructions to the commissioners he requires them to "examine Fort Snelling with reference to its being retained as a military depot for the use of the Government." But he then put these two men in commission, and required of them first to pass upon the propriety of selling Fort Snelling. One of the commissioners appointed to determine this fact had, as the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] this morning remarked, arrived at that proud and dazzling height of military advancement of third corporal in the Virginia militia. The other, though a military man, had not been upon the ground for about ten years. But, in the face of the evidence in his office against this sale, he sends out this commission. He sends one man who had never sold a foot of land in his life, and another man who had never crossed the Ohio river in his life,—a man who, according to his own confession, knew so little about the preemption laws of the Government, that he supposed Franklin Steele would be entitled to hold a thousand acres by preemption; another man, who did not know the difference between a private sale and a secret sale; a man who did not know the terms of the agreement that he had himself entered into, and a man who swore before the committee that he could not tell whether $60,000 of the public money, which he had lent out in this way, was drawing interest or not; another man, who said that it had never entered his mind to ask interest; two men, who said that the reason they sold this land on these terms was, because they knew the Government did not want the money; these men wanted to have it so; and they were in a hurry to get home. One of them, appointed by the Secretary of War, is a near neighbor and associate, and with whom he had carried on a successful and awful war "against the Know Nothings" in Virginia. He knew him; he knew his capacity to sell Fort Snelling; he selected him; he gave him his instructions; he sent him on this mission; he knew beforehand exactly what this man was to do, and what he would do when he got there; he was guilty of culpable negligence in the public service in intrusting such a man with any discretion at all.

Then there are some circumstances about this matter other than these. The Secretary of War had numerous applications before this time to sell this property. There is not on record an answer to one of them. Some of them were in the most imploring, sycophantic terms, claiming a chance in for political services and sufferings. It was due to the Secretary of War and the Government that he should have left upon record an answer that would have rebuked and forever silenced any such language addressed to a Department of this Government. He says that he answered all these letters. I am sorry to say that there is not a copy of any of these letters produced; and none of these particular letters have been kept, although there are copies of all the others. I am sorry to find that in the investigation of the committee, they have not been able to find that an answer to one of these letters was ever received. One man appeared at his Department in person for the purchase of this property. He made the application himself at the door of the Secretary's room.

It so happened that on the 1st day of July he did not find the Secretary of War in, although he had a long conversation with the clerk. He went back to his hotel, and on the second day he addressed a note to the Secretary. It turns out, on comparing dates, that on this very day that he addressed this note to the Secretary, the Secretary indorsed on this sale the approval of the Government. After all these statements, after the public mind had been aroused, and the Secretary of War warned and put on his guard, these parties failed to comply with their own contract, and there was no further obligation on the part of the Secretary of War, either in honor or law, to comply on the part of the Government. After they had failed, as they did, to make their payment on the 10th day of July, he was at liberty to take no further notice of that contract whatever. Yet on the 25th day of July, in the midst of these accusations, and when he had letters in his office, making representations and putting him on his guard, so that he might have known that the property had been sold for one fourth of its value, he voluntarily waived the non-fulfillment of this contract on the part of these parties, and ratified this foul scheme of plunder, so far as he could, by receiving the money.

As to the manner of sale. In the report of the minority, great stress is laid upon what they believe to be the fact that enough was paid for this property; and they seem to think that no censure should be cast upon this transaction, because, in their opinion, the full value of this property was received by the Government in this sale. They, to some extent, make that a test that they got all that it was worth, and not that it was a proper sale. I suppose that if a game of dice or cards, or any other game of chance, had settled this sale at what it was worth, that then they would have been justified. Yet as to the manner of sale, this is the reasoning of the gentlemen. Here is what the minority say, as to such kind of sales "generally." I read from the minority report:

"As a general rule of executive action, we concur most cordially with the majority in the opinion that all sales of Government property should be made at public auction, and after due notice, thereby affording to every citizen who desires it, a fair and equal opportunity to participate in the purchase. This is a rule demanded, not only by the relation which exists in a country like ours between the Government and the people, but it is an important check to official favoritism and partiality, and operates beneficially in guarding against that sense of individual injustice which springs from the preference of one man over another, where all have common rights. So strong are our individual convictions on this subject, that it would require proof of a very perverted sentiment in any State or Territory to excuse, in our judgment, a departure from so sound and salutary a rule of action. The amount which the Government will at any time realize from a sale of its property, must be insignificant, compared with the more important benefit which it must derive from an all pervading impression of its fairness, justice, and disinterestedness."

That is true. That is good, sound doctrine. But, after delivering such an opinion in court, what do you think is the judgment entered up? Here is their judgment on the opinion of their court, delivered in the words I have read:

"And yet it is difficult for any fair-minded man who reads the accompanying evidence, and learns that system of combination which controls the results of public sales in the West, to cast the slightest censure upon the motives and conduct of the commissioners of sale. We would not applaud their act as a precedent. We cannot condemn it as an individual case, under the circumstances."

This opinion and judgment are a non sequitur, and very much after the manner of an opinion and judgment rendered once by a village magistrate on a time when a gray-headed old sinner had been trifling with one of the commandments in the decalogue, and had been overtaken, as the lawyers say, flagrante delicto; and when brought before the magistrate, and the evidence was put in the case, and the whole charge proved by very much that sort of testimony by which I can at this moment determine with confidence who occupies the chair—the testimony of the eye—the magistrate delivered the opinion and judgment of the court in these words:

"Mr. Smith, stand up: Sir, it is the opinion of the court that, under the circumstances, you are not guilty; but don't you never do so again."

Now, one word more about the manner in which the sale was effected. There was a written offer, by this very Mr. Steele, in the Department, of $15 an acre for this property; and yet the Secretary authorized these men to sell it at $7 50 an acre. Their construction of their instructions was—and that is the plain language and meaning—that they were to sell at not less than $7 50 an acre, and make a final sale binding on the Government at that price. There was a written offer in the Department of $15 an acre, on which was indorsed General Jesup's opinion that that was far below the true value; and yet these men sold the property for $90,000, in the teeth of that offer—reduced by the terms of the agreement to less than seventy thousand dollars, and less than $7 50 per acre, it will be found, in my judgment, if the number of acres shall ever be known.

In conclusion let me say, that the manner in which this property was sold calls louder for condemnation than anything else. I do not care what it brought; I do not care whether it was needed for a military depot or not. I want the sale of the public domain to be so conducted as that it shall be above reproach. The doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils," is not a new one in this country, nor does its odium belong to any particular party. I am sorry to say that it has come to be the almost universal doctrine of parties. When it was first broached, Mr. Jefferson felt called upon in his first inaugural to discountenance it, and to declare that in the distribution of favors we were all Republicans and all Federalists. But it got possession of the minds of the men who managed the affairs of the Government, and it came stealthily, gradually, but certainly, to possess the minds of men of all parties. It was a good many years after that before it was publicly avowed, but more recently men of high position have declared the doctrine and practiced it. But if there is to be ingrafted on that doctrine the idea that the public domain is to be parceled out to political favorites, then I say, so demoralizing has come to be the working of this doctrine upon the political character of all parties in this country, that one might well despair of the Republic. If it has come to be understood, and the doctrine is here to-day to be sanctioned by a vote of this House, that by a secret sale, special political favorites are to have rich slices of the public domain parceled out to them to the exclusion of all others, then, sir, there has come to be such a demoralization of political integrity in this country, as ought well to cause alarm in the breasts of all true patriots.

Sir, who are the men who figure in this matter? Who is this Mr. Heiskell? A man who was such a political favorite that, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, there was no place in the gift of the President commensurate with his merits. He is commissioned to sell this reservation. To whom? Who is Mr. Steele? Who is Mr. Rice? Who is Mr. Mather? Who is Mr. Schell? Who is Dr. Graham? They have a right to be of any particular party they choose. I am only saying that it is a great misfortune that they made a secret sale of this property in which no mortal man figures but special party favorites. The public domain, the common property of all, is thus set apart as the political plunder of the victors. The real consideration for this sale, as well as its secrecy, are enough to damn it in any court and before the people.

I have a word or two to say in behalf of a New England Democrat. If this is to be the policy, I demand, in the name of New England Democracy, an equal participation in the division of the public lands. Sir, Mr. Paul Dillingham, of Vermont, put his application on record, based on the fact that he had been "a sound, reliable Democrat," had done, if not "works meet for repentance," certainly service that deserved meat, and had been condemned to live in "a State where genuine Democracy is poorly thought of by the great colored party who rule and always will here"—turned out on the barren waste of New England Democracy to seek a precarious livelihood. As he grew old, and his eye became dim, he turned, with the true instinct of those who know their master's crib, and made application to the Secretary of War for "a chance for a bargain" out of Fort Snelling. It is a touching letter, Mr. Speaker, and must have brought tears to the eyes of the Secretary. I wish we could have had the Secretary's reply. I doubt not he gave him a moral lecture on the vanity of human expectations—on the folly as a business transaction of laying up his treasures here in Washington. But, sir, his merit has not been appreciated. It costs something to be a Democrat in New England, while it rather pays in New York city. This is another evidence of the prejudice against New England. My friend, Paul Dillingham, comparing his claim with those of John C. Mather, who had fattened at the public crib in Troy and in New York city, or with those of Richard Schell, or of Mr. Steele, who had grown immensely rich on the crumbs which had fallen from his master's table at Fort Snelling, will be justified in exclaiming, "my sufferings is intolerable!" These men are chosen; and he who had sacrificed all his hopes and all his ambitions in undertaking to stem the current of political affairs in Vermont, is passed by.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BISHOP obtained the floor.

Mr. BURNETT. Before the gentleman from Connecticut proceeds, I desire to know from gentlemen on the other side, whether it is their intention to press any vote on this matter to-night? [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. PETTIT. I would say to the gentleman from Kentucky that it is not proposed to ask for a vote on it to-night.

Mr. BURNETT. Very well; let that be understood.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I object; unless the previous question be demanded.

MARYLAND CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. With the consent of the gentleman from Connecticut, I ask to present the report of the Committee of Elections in the Maryland contested-election case. I ask that it may be printed. I believe that the views of the minority are ready for presentation, and I ask that both may be printed.

Mr. WILSON presented the views of the minority.

The reports were ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. NIBLACK, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution amendatory of an act entitled "An act to regulate the compensation of members of Congress," approved August 16, 1856, so far as relates to such members as shall die during their terms of service; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Mileage.

BARK ADRIATIC.

Mr. BURLINGAME, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back, without amendment, the joint resolution relative to the seizure of the bark Adriatic, accompanied by a report in writing. The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

PAY OF FORAGE MASTERS.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill extending to forage masters of the Army the benefits of the act entitled "An act to increase the pay of officers of the Army," approved February, 1857; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BISHOP. Does all this come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. The propositions are introduced by general consent, and the time occupied will not be deducted from the gentleman's hour.

ATLANTIC STEAM FERRY.

Mr. MILES, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill authorizing the Atlantic Steam Ferry Company, incorporated by the General Assembly of Virginia, to purchase foreign-built vessels; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SALE OF FORT SNELLING—AGAIN.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, with a view of contributing, so far as I was able, to the dispatch of the public business, and with the desire of effecting a speedy adjournment, I have refrained thus far from participating in the discussion of most of the questions which have been presented for the consideration of this House. Many subjects have been acted upon by the House, upon which I should have been glad to have expressed my views, but I have waived my own personal feelings for the sake of expediting the public business; and, without any disrespect to any other gentleman, I must say that if many others had talked less and acted more, the business of the session might have already been completed, and we might be able now to return home to our constituents and be met with the approving words, "well done, good and faithful servants."

Impressed as I am with these views, I should not attempt, at this late day in the session, to occupy the attention of the House, did I not believe that a movement was set on foot in the report of the majority of this investigating committee, intended solely to bring disgrace upon the chief executive officers of this Government—a movement, as I believe, conceived and carried out for the purpose of gratifying that spirit of political dishonesty which seeks to establish its own purity and perfection by heaping disgrace and ridicule upon those who are entitled to confidence and respect. It seems to have become the peculiar province of a certain party in this House, independent of any action on the part of the coordinate branch of the national Legislature, to set itself up as a conservator over the executive officers of this Government; to place upon the laws of the United States its own construction; and to say to the heads of the Departments: "You must be governed by that construction, or be branded as dishonest men, and incompetent to perform the duties of your offices."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those men who believe that any political capital can be made by attacking the honor and integrity of any man who may differ from me in his political views. I have a right to differ from him in his political opinions; I have a right, if possible, to show that the doctrines which he seeks to establish are false in principle, and dangerous in their tendency. But, sir, until I can read the secrets of the human heart, and, with the eye of Omniscience, behold the hidden springs which move the judgment, I have no right to question his motives, or to brand him as a dishonest man.

Mr. Speaker, this system of indiscriminate personal abuse, among men differing in their political views, has already created mischief enough throughout this country. The time seems to have arrived in the history of this Government, when, no matter how pure or patriotic a man may have been, no matter how devoted to the interests of his country or the welfare of the Union, if he but suffers himself to be placed in any high official position under this Government, he is compelled to pass through a fiery ordeal most difficult to withstand. His honor, his character, and even his ancestors, relatives, and friends, must all be subjected to the taunts, the ridicule, and the insults of party malice; so that a man who has any character to lose may well tremble at the thought of allowing himself to be placed in any official position within the gift of the Government or of the people. It is not strange, sir, that it should already have become a matter of wonder and astonishment, among civilized as well as barbarous nations throughout the world, that Americans, according to their own showing, should invariably place their most consummate scoundrels in their most responsible offices.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about this Fort Snelling case except what appears from the report of the committee, and what I have gathered from persons well acquainted with the property disposed of, and with its value; and in speaking upon this report, I shall view it, not so much in the light of an expression of opinion on the part of the gentlemen composing the majority of that committee, as in the light of an electioneering political document for the benefit of the Republican party. The whole report, from the beginning to the end, in its statements and its arguments, in its assumptions and conclusions, bears unmistakable evidence of being a deep-laid party scheme intended to disgrace, in the eyes of the people, one of the chief officers of the Government, whom I believe to be as honest a man as ever honored the position of Secretary of War; and, sir, I am not surprised that the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRIS,] although not particularly favorable to the present Administration, should have repudiated the statements, reasonings, and arguments, of his Republican associates upon that committee. I do not believe it possible for any man having one drop of Democratic blood still left in his veins to stamp with the seal of his approval such a report as this.

But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRIS] does not favor us with the reasonings which have influenced his judgment. He merely gives his assent, and sings us the song:

"I do not like thee, Dr. Fell,
The reason why, I cannot tell;
But this I know, and know full well,
I do not like thee, Dr. Fell."

Perhaps the gentleman will give us his views hereafter. The first resolution reported by the committee declares that the sale of Fort Snelling was without authority of law. The arguments upon which this charge is based are of such a peculiar character that I cannot but allude to them.

The charge is that the Secretary of War has violated the law of the land. The law which the committee say he has violated reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, under the direction of the President of the United States, to cause to be sold such military sites belonging to the United States as may have been found or become useless for military purposes. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the payment of the consideration agreed for into the Treasury of the United States, to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments, conveying and transferring the same in fee; and the jurisdiction which had been specially ceded for military purposes to the United States by a State over such site or sites shall hereafter cease."

In March, 1857, this law was amended as follows:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1819, entitled 'An act authorizing the sale of certain military sites,' be, and they are hereby, extended to all military sites, or to such parts thereof, which are or may become useless for military purposes: Provided nevertheless, That nothing in this act, nor in the act above mentioned, shall be so construed as to impair in anywise the right of the State within which any such site or reservation may be situated, to impose taxes on the same, in like manner as upon other lands or property owned by individuals within the State, after such sale."

Now, according to my understanding of the English language, the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President of the United States, in accordance with the law of 1819, as amended in 1857, has full and unlimited power to sell any military reservation now owned by the General Government within the United States of America, whenever he shall consider it no longer necessary for the purposes of the Government. It is true there is a limitation in this act that such military reservations are only to be sold when they are no longer necessary for military purposes. But who, I ask, is to be the judge of the necessity of selling? Why, the committee would have you believe that some individual who was at the head of the War Department two or three years ago, was now to be the judge of the necessity of the case, and the Secretary of War must be governed by his opinion. Or they would have us believe that certain subordinate officers of the Army were to be the judges of the law, or that certain Senators and members of Congress were to be the judges, or that even half a dozen land speculators in the West were to be the judge and jury to decide upon this question, and that the Secretary of War was to be bound by their decision.

Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to be a lawyer; but there are some things which are so plain that "a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." And as every man can best illustrate his views by comparisons drawn from some business with which he is intimately acquainted, I propose to illustrate this point of the case by a railroad comparison. Suppose the directors of a railroad company, finding that they had on hand more cars and engines than were necessary for the economical transaction of the business of the road, should pass a resolution authorizing me, under the direction of the president of the company, to sell such engines and cars, or any part thereof, as were or might become unnecessary for the purposes of the company: I take it that under that resolution, I should have full power, under the direction of the president of the road, to dispose of any car or engine owned by the company, and that no court of justice on earth would declare that sale to be illegal or void. "But," say this committee, "the sale would be illegal, because there was another agent of the company three or four years ago, who was clothed with precisely the same power, who reported that no engines or cars could be spared, and that they were all necessary to transact the business of the road." My answer to that would be, that was the opinion of the first agent, but it is not my opinion. His opinion, expressed three or four years ago, when he desired to pursue one course of policy, has no weight with me now, when I propose to pursue a different policy, particularly as the business of the road has materially diminished since that time, and is now constantly diminishing. "Oh," say this committee, "the sale was illegal, because you did not consult the superintendent of the road. It is illegal because you did not consult the engineers and firemen. It is illegal because you did not consult the brakemen and the laborers employed on the road. It is even illegal because you did not consult the passengers in the cars and the inhabitants upon the line of the road." My answer to that would be that I am authorized, by a resolution of the company, to sell such cars and engines as are unnecessary for their business. The same resolution which authorizes me to sell, constitutes me the judge of the necessity of selling; and when I desire your advice, I will send for you.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we will suppose that I have sold a car, and soon after it is discovered that the very car which I sold is even now used by the company in the transaction of their business. "Ah!" say the committee, "the sale is evidently illegal now, because the very fact that the company are still using the car, is indisputable evidence that it is not unnecessary for the transaction of their business." My reply to that would be, that when I sold the car, it was laden with freight, destined for the other end of the road; and I made it one of the conditions of the sale, that it should not be delivered over to the purchaser until it was no longer needed by the company for the transportation of that particular lot of freight; and I apprehend that most courts of justice would pronounce that sale legal and binding, even though this committee should declare it null and void, because the car was not standing empty on a side track.

Now, Mr. Speaker, suppose that, soon after that sale had taken place, the annual meeting of the stockholders should be held. What kind of position, I ask you, would a committee, appointed by those stockholders to investigate the sale of that car, occupy? Should they bring in a report, that for such reasons as these I had violated my authority and made an illegal sale, particularly if it should be known that the gentlemen making that report belonged to a party which was seeking to disgrace me and drive me from the company, for the purpose of taking the control and management of the affairs of the road into their own hands, I think, sir, that they would occupy about as favorable a position as that political party which, through its agents, has the boldness to assert that, for such reasons as these, the Secretary of War has violated the laws of the land.

There can be no doubt of the legality of this sale, so far as the Secretary of War was concerned. The same authority which authorized him to sell constituted him the judge of the necessity of selling. If he chose to act upon his own judgment, he had the legal right to do so. If there is anything in a public officer which I admire, it is that spirit of independence which prompts him not to be governed too much by the advice and opinions of fawning sycophants and interested advisers, but to rely upon the dictates of his own sound judgment. Nothing in the character of that immortal hero, General Jackson, commended him so much to the admiration, the confidence, and the affection of the American people, as that indomitable will, self-reliance, and fixedness of purpose, which induced him to take upon himself the responsibility, and to administer the laws in such manner as his own sense of justice and right declared to be for the best interests of the country; and I, sir, for one, am glad to know that we have at the head of the Department of War a man who possesses, to some extent, at least, the qualities of the illustrious Jackson.

The committee, after passing judgment upon the law in the first resolution, proceed, in the second resolution, to denounce the action of the Secretary of War as a grave official error, because he differed in opinion from his predecessor in office, and from certain subordinate officers in the Army, and relied upon his own judgment and the judgment of two disinterested commissioners. I think, Mr. Speaker, that I have already shown that he had the legal right to rely on his own judgment. I doubt very much the propriety of his being governed too much in his action by the advice and opinions of those Army officers who were stationed upon the very ground which it was proposed to sell.

The committee, in their report, lay great stress upon the fact that these Army officers who testified that this reservation was no longer required by the Government, and should not have been sold, were stationed upon the very ground, and knew all about it, while those officers who testified to the contrary opinion had only passed over it occasionally. These very circumstances confirm to my mind the wisdom of the course pursued by the Secretary of War. Army officers are a good deal like other men. They like very well to be stationed near to a large and populous city, where the conveniences and luxuries of life are close at hand; where there is society for themselves, their wives, and their daughters; and when it is proposed to sell such a site, and there is a fair prospect that they will be removed hundreds of miles into the interior, where there is no society but Indians and bears, it is not strange that they should be of opinion that such a reservation should not be disposed of, but that it was extremely important for the military defenses of the country. Why, sir, I would just as soon rely on the judgment of the people immediately round a little county post office, situated in the distant corner of a town, to decide whether the people of the whole town would not be better accommodated by removing the office nearer to the center of population. However honest they might be, their judgment would certainly be biased by their interest.

I regard, therefore, the opinions of such men as entitled to little weight. The question as to whether the Secretary of War committed a grave official error or not, can best be decided by the result accomplished; and for that purpose, the evidence of officers, and others, taken since the sale, is just as good, and entitled to just as much weight, as the evidence of persons taken previous to the sale. The report of this committee, and the evidence presented with that report, shows most conclusively, that as many, if not more, reliable persons, both in civil and military life, have given it as their opinion that this reservation was no longer required for any military purpose whatever, as have testified to the contrary. The Secretary of War must have known, from the very circumstances of the case, that this was a question upon which officers and others would differ; and knowing this, he did just as he ought to have done, and just as the law authorized him to do—relied on his own judgment.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that a little common sense in matters of this kind is sometimes extremely valuable, and it does appear to me that if the majority of the committee had thought less of party capital, and looked more at the facts and the evidence in the case, they would have been inclined to agree with me. Why, sir, there is not a man, woman, or child in this country, who knows anything of its situation and condition, who does not know that a military post within ten miles of St. Paul is no more necessary to protect the inhabitants against the incursions of the Indians, than it is in the very center of the State of Connecticut. This reservation is situated in the midst of the most populous portion of a State which we have just admitted into this Union, with population sufficient to entitle her to three Representatives; and yet this committee would have us believe that the discontinuance of this post was to let in hordes of savage Indians to murder and massacre the defenseless inhabitants at St. Paul, St. Anthony, and Minneapolis.

I think, sir, that not a person who has testified in this case has expressed the opinion that this reservation was any longer needed for any purpose whatever, except as a depot for supplies. To my mind, that is about as ridiculous an idea as that it is required for military defense. If it is to be used as a depot for supplies, it must be used to furnish those posts lying north and northwest of it. But it is shown by this report, and the evidence contained therein, most conclusively, that those posts lying at the north would be much better and more cheaply supplied by the way of Fond-du-Lac, on Lake Superior. The committee, then, would have you purchase supplies at St. Paul, or St. Anthony, transport them ten or fifteen miles to this military depot, unload them, put them into storehouses, lock the doors, keep a company of soldiers and bevy of officers to stand guard over them, take them out again in the morning, and send them on their way to the frontier posts; and this, I presume, the committee call economy.

Why, sir, I am surprised that the committee did not report an additional resolution recommending the purchase of ground and the erection of military depots ten miles west of St. Louis, in order to furnish the western posts. If it is so extremely important to have a military depot within ten or twelve miles of St. Paul, where military stores can be purchased at all seasons of the year, that the Secretary of War must be accused before the country and the whole world of violating the law of the land, and of committing a grave official error in having disposed of it, he is much more responsible in not having recommended to Congress the purchase of the ground and the erection of storehouses within ten miles of St. Louis, whence many stores are to be forwarded to the western posts. The idea of establishing military depots within ten or twelve miles of points where stores can be purchased at all seasons of the year, and of transporting them a few miles from the point of purchase to a military depot, unloading them, reloading them, and then forwarding them to the frontier posts, is about as ridiculous a thing as can well be conceived.

The claim is all a subterfuge and a pretense. There is no reason, no common sense in it. And yet the Secretary of War must be charged with being incompetent for the discharge of his duties, and as having committed a grave official error, because he has not given his sanction to such a system as that. So impressed are the committee with the magnitude of this great official error, that they are led to use the following language:

"This was more than an error. It was a fault affecting the most interesting branch of the public service, and where incaution, want of judgment, and want of skill, are least excusable. In cases where professional and technical judgment is of so much importance, such a fact as has been stated, from whatever cause or want of cause it proceeds, is enough to occasion just distrust of the competent management of that branch of the Administration charged with the whole power of national defense and offense."

Let the country judge of the justice or injustice of these attacks and insinuations. I, for one, am perfectly satisfied that the sale was not only legal, but that the Secretary of War was in duty bound to dispose of it, it being no longer required for any military purpose whatever.

The committee seem to have been laboring under the idea that they were not merely to investigate the sale of Fort Snelling, but were to lay down rules and regulations for the government of the Secretary of War and his subordinate officers; and in doing this they seem to have discovered some new lights which have heretofore been concealed from the visions of American statesmen, and which are now, for the first time, revealed to the majority of this investigating committee. That is, that the head of the Department of War is, in reality, and should be regarded as the tail, and that the Secretary of War should be the mere tool in the hands of his subordinate officers, to do their bidding; and, in that connection, they use the following language:

"It is granted that, by law, the Secretary of War is the superior and head of the whole military service of the country. But practically he is not so—not in popular judgment merely, but because, in fact, without reference to his official position, he has but a minor part in projecting and executing matters of strategy. His office is rather administrative than executive; and in the absence of the legal idea that he is the chief of the Army, with no superior but the President, his office might be considered civil and not military."

Upon the same ground, I suppose the committee would hold that the heads of all the other Departments, including the President, were to be but mere tools in the hands of their subordinate officers; and, by following out the same process of reasoning, that the highest subordinate officers were to be governed in their action by the decisions of the officers next in rank, and so on down through the scale, until the very lowest officials and the common soldiers should become the supreme judges and executors of the law. They seem to go a good deal upon the principle of the little boy who claimed that he was king, because, though his father was in reality king, yet his mother ruled father, and he ruled mother. But I do not regard it as a very good doctrine to teach, either to children or to subordinate officers, that they are to set themselves up as dictators to prescribe rules and regulations for the government of their superiors.

Sir, I believe that the Secretary of War is not only in law, but in fact, the head and front of the military force of this country, and has been so regarded by the people and statesmen of this country, from the organization of the Government down to the present time.

The third resolution of the majority of the committee reads as follows:

"3. That with a knowledge of the great value of the Fort Snelling post and reservation, and the importance of great caution and judgment in making the sale, the Secretary of War appointed as agents for the purpose, unqualified, inexperienced, and incompetent men."

Now, sir, I have no acquaintance with either of the gentlemen appointed upon the commission, although I do know one of them; Major Eastman, very well by reputation; and I should require something more than such a report as has emanated from this committee to convince my mind that he and his associate were not fully qualified to perform the duties of their appointment. The principal objection to Mr. Heiskell seems to be that he is a Democrat, instead of a Republican; and the committee appear to be wonderfully exercised in mind because the Secretary of War did not appoint a political and personal enemy instead of a political friend and neighbor.

The committee, in this connection, see fit to lumber up their report with a jovial conversation held between the Secretary of War and his old neighbor in Virginia, in regard to some of their old political contests, all of which is logged into this report, having no bearing upon the case, for no other purpose whatever except to throw ridicule upon the Secretary of War. Then follows a long disquisition upon the impropriety of appointing political friends to office, from which I suppose they would have us infer that the Republican party, if they ever get the control of this Government, will only discharge those Democrats from office who are found to be either dishonest or incompetent to perform their duties. When that time arrives, and our Republican friends practice what they preach, I shall be inclined to view with more favor this gratuitous lecture. The evidence in regard to Mr. Heiskell, if it proves anything, proves that he was a plain, honest, unpretending man, not mixed up with any of the land speculations in the western country, but standing entirely aloof and independent from all connection with land speculators; and that the Secretary of War appointed him, not so much on account of political and personal friendship, but because he knew, of his own knowledge, that he was an honest man, and well qualified to attend to the duties of his appointment.

It would seem, Mr. Speaker, that this exhibition of party malice would have satisfied our Republican friends upon that committee; but not content with this, they have descended to even a lower depth of party meanness by instilling into their report comments upon a letter addressed by a Vermont Democrat, formerly a member of Congress, to the Secretary of War, in which he sets up a claim that, on account of old party services, and on account of the peculiar position of the country in which he resides, he is entitled to make a good bargain out of the sale of Fort Snelling; and the committee, after insinuating in their report that the Secretary of War acknowledged the justice of his claim, and coincided with him in his opinion, illustrate the injustice of the charge by admitting that no answer was ever made to this letter, or to many others of a similar character. Why then, I ask, incorporate this into the body of their report? A few attacks of this kind are enough to mark the whole report as nothing but a miserable electioneering political document, unworthy of the consideration of a deliberative body.

I do not know who would have been regarded by the committee as suitable persons to have conducted the sale; but, judging from the tenor of their report, I presume they would have selected two western land speculators, who would have divided the reservation up into lots and squares; who would have flooded the country with paper maps, showing the lots all numbered, and the streets all graded, with many magnificent buildings already erected, and many others in process of construction, with a note at the bottom, stating that it is expected the county seat will soon be removed to this new city, by which means, some weak brethren might have been deceived, a high price obtained for the land, and many honest people sorely cheated. I do not think that is the way for this Government to do business.

A large portion of this report seems to be taken up with a history of the transactions between the parties interested in the purchase; what Mr. Mather was doing, what Mr. Schell was doing, and what Dr. Graham was thinking about. But not one particle or scintilla of evidence is produced to show that the Secretary of War, or either one of the commissioners had the most remote idea in the world that any living man except Mr. Steele was interested in the purchase, or that any combination was formed; and yet insinuations are thrown out all through this report that the Secretary of War might himself have been personally interested in the purchase.

"I know there is no charge of that kind openly made, but my translation of the report is, 'although we do not charge the Secretary of War with being personally interested in the sale, yet circumstances look very suspicious.' I say, sir, that a bold charge of this kind, based upon no evidence whatever, is a gross outrage; an outrage upon the Secretary of War—an outrage upon the dignity of this House. But I will not dwell upon this point of the case further. The question as to whether the commissioners were qualified to perform the duties devolved upon them by their appointment, can best be determined by the result.

The committee state in their fourth resolution that provisions for and management of the sale were so negligently, carelessly, and injudiciously made as to induce successful combination against the Government, exclude all competition, and bring loss on the Government. Now, is that charge true? For if it is not, the charge of incompetency on the part of the commissioners, falls to the ground. If the reservation sold for all it was worth, the commissioners did their duty, and their whole duty. If they had sold it for more than it was worth, somebody would have been cheated, and the Government would have been a swindler. The evidence in regard to this point of the case however seems to be very conflicting, but the report of the committee shows that the weight of evidence is very decidedly and conclusively to sustain the position that the Government received for the property every cent that it was worth.

I know that some gentlemen have testified that they would have given much more for it; but it must be remembered that all these magnificent offers were made after the sale, when it was well known that they could not possibly be entertained. It is a very easy thing for a man to make a large offer for a piece of property when he knows that his proposition cannot possibly be accepted, for he is entirely safe in making the offer, whether he has the means to pay or not. Why, sir, I have purchased property myself which had been exposed to public sale for years at a given price, without finding a purchaser; and yet just as soon as I had purchased it at that very price, the seller would be besieged with inquiries, "why did you sell that property so low? I would have given you fifty per cent. more for it;" others would offer one hundred per cent. advance; but I take it the offers of men, under such circumstances, would be entitled to little weight in establishing the true value of the property.

There are men residing in my own town, men of intelligence, wealth, and influence, men interested in, and well acquainted with, the value of western lands, who have examined this Fort Snelling reservation, and have given it to me as their united opinion, that the Government realized for this property all that it was worth, and that they would not be willing to take it from the purchasers at the price paid. I have as much confidence in the judgment of these men as I have in the judgment of any land speculators in the western country.

The idea of this reservation being the site of a large and flourishing city, situated as it is within a few miles of St. Paul and St. Anthony, cities already established, is too ridiculous to deserve a moment's consideration. It is too far off ever to become a part of either of these cities, and yet too near to both of them to become even a village.

I know that a speculative fever may be gotten up, and town lots sold, and that large prices may be realized; but somebody will be sure to be cheated, and Fort Snelling will only be a tolerably decent farm after all. In my judgment, the Government obtained for this property all that it was worth; and it had no business to take any more, even if it could get it. It is no part of the business of the Government to be speculating in lands, or to seek to make money by deceiving people; and, whatever may be said of this Fort Snelling reservation, you never can convince the people of this country that ordinary farming land in a new State, two thousand miles away from the sea-coast, is worth more than ten or twelve dollars per acre. If, then, this property sold for all it was worth, the commissioners did their duty, and are not liable to the charge of being incompetent or unqualified to perform the duties of their office.

But, sir, I do not care to dwell longer upon this case. I think I have said enough to satisfy our friends on this side of the House, that the Government realized for this land every cent that it was really worth. I think I have said enough to satisfy them that their report is nothing but a miserable electioneering political document, intended to disgrace, in the eyes of the people of the country, one of the chief executive officers of the Government, and, as such, should receive the condemnation of every honest man.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that it is very easy to raise the cry of bribery and corruption, and to start the idea that there is great iniquity in the administration of the Government; but it will require something more than such a party report as this to satisfy the minds of the people. From the commencement of this Congress down to the present hour, scarcely a day has passed that the Administration has not been assailed by gentlemen upon the other side of the House. The President has been accused of buying up members with promises of offices to their relations and friends. The Secretary of War has been accused of buying them up with promises of contracts for horses and mules. All the chief officers of the Government have been assailed—some in one way, and some in another. The language of the Opposition has been, "there is none of you that doeth good; no, not one."

I think, Mr. Speaker, it is high time that this kind of argument should be abandoned, and that we, the Representatives of the people, should be willing to accord, by courtesy, to the highest officers of the greatest nation upon earth, at least as much as is accorded by law to the meanest criminals at the bar—the right of being considered innocent until they are proved guilty.

And now, sir, when the Republicans on the other side of the House get control of this Government, which disaster I pray Heaven to avert, if, during their brief reign, they will only give us as honest and as faithful officers as we have given them during almost the entire period of our country's history, I, for one, shall rest content, and shall console myself with the reflection that the country will be safe, even though such a party may be in power.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, in the short time I shall trespass upon the patience of the House, I shall not stop to notice the panegyrics pronounced upon the Secretary of War by his friends. The course of the gentlemen who have spoken in his defense reminds me of what is often seen in criminal courts, when the advocate, throwing aside his brief, appeals to the jury in behalf of his client because of his former virtues and noble character as a man. It is the official conduct of the Secretary of War, and not his private character or past life, that is now passing under scrutiny. When the facts of delinquency of conduct stand upon the record, the criminal at the bar cannot plead against those facts that he has before lived an irreproachable life. If the facts be proven in the record, then the condemnation of the jury passes, and private character or past life cannot be pleaded in bar of judgment. Arnold himself, up to the night of his arrest by Paulding, Van Wert, and Williams, could have referred to some of the most brilliant achievements upon the bloodiest battlefields of the Revolution in proof of his valor and heroism, as one of the noblest patriots of his country.

What are the facts in this case, and how do they affect the Secretary of War? is the only question involved. It is the motive and manner of this sale that we complain of; and I agree with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Bishop] that it is a minor consideration what was the amount received for the property. That is not the important consideration. It is to be considered in determining whether the transaction was conducted fairly or not; and goes only to the integrity of the motive for it. Whenever an executive officer of this Government shall so conduct the affairs of his office, as by collusion, or in any other way, secretly, to give one citizen an advantage over another, in their dealings with the Government, it is a maladministration of his office. That is this case. It is not necessary that there should be an advantage accruing to himself; nor is it necessary, in order to justly deserve the condemnation of the people, that he should personally receive filthy lucre. It is not necessary that he should receive any personal advantage in order to make him amenable to an outraged public sentiment. If he so manages the affairs of the Government intrusted to him, as knowingly to give undue and unfair advantage to one citizen over another, he is then subject to the condemnation of the people. What are the facts in this case? During the pendency of the Army bill in the Senate, last session, the following amendment was proposed by Mr. Weller:

"That the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1819, entitled 'An act authorizing the sale of certain military sites,' be, and they are hereby, extended to military sites, or to such parts thereof, which are or may become useless for military purposes."

When this amendment was offered Mr. BRIGHT said:

"I should like to inquire if there is any provision for a public sale?"

"Mr. WELLER. Those sold under the act of 1819 were sold at auction; but it has been decided that that act was retrospective, and did not apply to any military sites established after the passage of the law. Since that time, of course, many military posts have become wholly useless to the Government; and this amendment is to sell them.

"Mr. BRIGHT. At public, or private sale?"

"Mr. WELLER. At public sale."

"The amendment was agreed to."—Congressional Globe, vol. 34, page 1046.

That is the whole record of the proceedings in both Houses on that amendment attached to one of the regular appropriation bills in almost the last hours of the session. It was the understanding of those who put the provision into the bill, that there was to be a public sale. Was not the Secretary of War bound to take notice of this intention of the law-making power? The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Bishop] says that the law clothed the Secretary with power to sell in any way he pleased, either at public or private sale. Grant that it did. Would that give him the right to sell at secret sale? This sale was neither a public nor a private one. It comes under the designation of neither. A private sale is where property is sold on offers of purchasers, accepting such offer as the seller thinks best, but with knowledge to purchasers that the property is for sale. But when no one in a whole community knows that a piece of property is to be sold, and it is sold, that is not a private but a secret sale; and that was this sale. It is for this that the Secretary of War is arraigned. Instead of allowing all citizens who desired to purchase the property, to compete for it, it was sold without any knowledge in the community that there was to be a sale.

What was the law revived by this amendment to the Army bill at the last session? The law of 3d March, 1819, thus revived, is in these words:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, under the direction of the President of the United States, to cause to be sold such military sites belonging to the United States as may have been found to become useless for military purposes; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the payment of the consideration agreed for into the Treasury of the United States, to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments, conveying and transferring the same in fee; and the jurisdiction, which had been specially ceded for military purposes to the United States by a State over such site or sites, shall thereafter cease."—Statutes at Large, vol. 3, page 520.

The sales which were made under that law were, as Mr. Weller stated in answer to the question of Mr. BRIGHT, public sales. The law revived by the amendment of the last session provided for the sale of—what? Such military sites as had become useless for military purposes. Under the construction of this law, given by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. Bishop,] the Secretary could sell any of your military reservations anywhere that he deemed useless. The gentleman thought the Secretary somewhat of a second Jackson, because of his indomitable will, that would receive no counsel or advice from any quarter, and because he disposes of the public property at his own caprice, even against the advice and written report of General Jesup, indorsed by General Scott. I take it that these generals have a slight knowledge of the military wants of the country, although they may not be as competent, perhaps, to judge of the uselessness of military reserves as the gentleman from Connecticut, who devoted much of his time to an effort to prove that this military reservation was no longer needed by the Government.

Under the law, the Secretary could not sell any reservation except such as had become useless for military purposes; but by the doctrine laid down on the other side, he could, and can now, sell any reservation anywhere that he deems useless, no matter what might be the opinion of the most competent military judges as to their importance for national protection or defense. Even if the Secretary of War is made the judge of whether any reservation could be dispensed with, he is responsible for the exercise of a sound judgment, and if he sells to the prejudice of the public service it is a plain and palpable violation of the spirit of the law. But the same censure would not, of course, be visited on an error of judgment as for a willful neglect of duty.

Now, was the reserve at Fort Snelling necessary for the Government? If so, the Secretary had no right to sell it. On the 15th of April, 1857, a proposition was submitted to the Secretary of War, by Mr. Rice of Minnesota, for the purchase of Fort Snelling. That was three months before the sale. The Secretary of War submitted the proposition to General Jesup. In his report to the Secretary of War, on this proposition, page 155 of the committee's report, he says:

"If this policy is to be adopted, and it is certainly the true policy, not a foot of the site of Fort Snelling can be spared without weakening the defense of the frontier."

Here is an officer who has served the country almost the allotted period of man's life, in high military positions, the officer who had this department of our military service under his inspection, reports officially to the Secretary of War that not one foot of this reservation could be spared without weakening the defense of the frontier. This was on the 15th of April, 1857; and yet, immediately following this, the Secretary of War sends Major Eastman to make a survey of that reservation. For what purpose? To make a survey, as Major Eastman supposed at the time, to ascertain the quality of the land, its value, &c., in order to fix the price at which it should be sold. But before any report on this subject is made, and before the Secretary of War ever hears from the surveyor, he dispatches another agent, named Heiskell, who meets Eastman in Minnesota. They meet together, and the last agent says he has authority to sell the reservation in any way he pleases, public or private. These two agents agree to make the sale—and how? They agree to sell it under the instructions of the Secretary of War, notwithstanding the report from the Quartermaster General, that not one foot of the reservation could be spared without weakening the defense of the frontier—an opinion in which he was sustained by Colonel Thomas, by General Churchill, and by other officers—concurred in by General Scott, the first military name of the age.

Colonel Thomas, senior officer of General Scott's staff, and acting as inspector general, when he visited Fort Snelling says, in his testimony, page 135:

"Question 460. You say you see no reason to change your views as expressed to the general-in-chief as to the propriety of retaining Fort Snelling as a place of military supply. Do you mean by that that it would be desirable for the Government to repossess itself of Fort Snelling?"

"Answer. I think so."

"Question 461. How much do you think the Government could afford to pay for it to repossess itself of the property?"

"Answer. It is only valuable as a station for troops to send out upon an emergency, and as a supply for posts at a distance. It is important, as you have there all the supplies and the means of transportation."

"Question 462. Would it be of more value to the Government than the Government received for it?"

"Answer. I think so."

"Question 464. Do you think the Government could, with propriety, and as a matter of economy, purchase back such portions of the property as you have specified as being necessary, for the amount paid for all, if they could not buy it for less?"

"Answer. Yes; I think so."

General Churchill, in his testimony, page 282, says:

"Question 1755. Were you, or any of the officers connected with your department, consulted as to the propriety of selling that reserve?"

"Answer. I was not."

"Question 1756. Had you been consulted, would you have advised a disposal of it?"

"Answer. I would not."

Major J. G. Martin, assistant quartermaster general in the Army, and who had been stationed at Fort Snelling for two years, in his testimony, page 355, says:

"Question 2358, (by Mr. BURNETT, resuming.) Would you give it as your opinion that Fort Snelling ought to have been retained as a military depot?"

"Answer. Yes, sir."

Perhaps the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BISHOP] would say that these men thus connected with the Army did not know what the wants of the country were in a military point of view. The Secretary of War ascertained from no human being that this was a useless reservation before he ordered it to be sold; but on the contrary, he sold it in direct opposition to the opinion of some of the most experienced officers in the Army. That is our first complaint. It was his duty to ascertain from the commandant of the position, or some other competent person, whether the reservation could be spared from the military defenses of the country. This he did not do. This is the first act for which we arraign him. Next, for ordering a sale in express opposition to the opinions of those who had the subject in charge, and who would be supposed to know most about it. And thirdly, we arraign him because after he had determined to sell, instead of giving all citizens an opportunity to buy this property which belonged to the General Government, and in the sale of which every one had a right to be a competitor, he sold it at secret sale to one man, and he the first to whom it was offered, and at the first interview; and the community knew nothing of the sale until after its completion, and were unable to obtain any information as to the sale previous to its taking place, though they applied to the Secretary for it. The honorable member from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] had written to the Secretary of War two months before this sale, inquiring if this reservation was to be sold, and an ex-member of Congress from Vermont (Mr. Dillingham) had also written to make a similar inquiry. But the Secretary of War was so busy that they, like every one else, save these favored parties, could get no answer till after the sale was completed. That is the evidence as testified to by Mr. SMITH and Mr. Dillingham.

Now, I ask my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. BISHOP], and his side of the House, if there is not good reason for scrutiny by the Representatives of the people into such acts of the executive officers of the Government? Under our form of government, it is the first and highest duty incumbent on the Representatives of the people to watch, with jealous care, the conduct of the executive officers of the Government. It was one of the maxims of the sage of Monticello, that "the price of liberty is eternal vigilance;" and it is not for the representatives of popular liberty to defend or vindicate an executive officer in the clear and flagrant violation of the laws of the country, because, perchance, he may have maintained a noble character in the history of the past. I have nothing to do with the private character of the Secretary of War, or his past history. His conduct in this transaction, and that alone, is on trial; and, if wrong, it is not to be screened by any of the elements of character which his friends may imagine he possesses kindred to those of Andrew Jackson.

Now, I need not take up the time of the House, or weary their patience by any further references to this testimony as to the importance of this post as a military reservation. All the military men examined by the committee sustain the one idea that Fort Snelling is important to the country, and could not be abandoned as a military post at present without detriment to the defense of the frontier. Yet the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] told us that a military commission, sent by the Secretary of War, reports that this reserve is not needed. When was that commission organized? After the committee had made its investigation, and reported. The Secretary of War, it seems, unwilling to risk his case on the evidence taken by the committee, at his own instance orders a military commission to visit Fort Snelling, and report as to its utility as a military post. A superior officer commands his subalterns to make a report in a case affecting his own reputation, and the character of the service; and they go and perform his bidding, and there I leave their report. They were sent after this evidence was taken, and the report made. If the Secretary of War deemed it necessary to have the opinion of military men as to whether this reservation was important to the military defense of the country, why did he not get their opinion before he ordered the sale? Why did he wait till an investigating committee of Congress took testimony and made its report to Congress? Was it to ascertain the facts as to whether this reserve was useless in order to govern his action in ordering the sale? or was it for his defense against the testimony impeaching his conduct? Why have a commission to determine whether the reservation was useless after the same was sold?

But, sir, how was the sale made? Major Eastman, one of the agents who sold it, says, in his testimony before the committee, page 89:

"Question 1. Please to state all the facts and circumstances within your knowledge touching the recent sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling."

"Answer. In April last I received verbal instructions from the Secretary of War to proceed to Fort Snelling and make a survey of the place." * * * * "He stated that after I had finished the survey he would send an agent out there to sell it. I proceeded to the place, and went to work immediately. After I had the survey nearly completed, an agent arrived and reported to me, and, at the same time, I received the appointment as agent myself to act with him." * * * * "The instructions were to sell it at public sale or private sale, as the agents thought best for the public interest, either in small lots or as a whole. After we had consulted on the matter, we came to the conclusion that it would be better for the Government to sell it at private sale."

"We determined to sell it at private sale, that being the best for the Government, and before doing it we determined to make an estimate of what we thought to be a fair price or a good price. We fixed the price at $90,000. After we had gone that far, the question arose as to whom we should first offer it to, and we determined to offer it to Mr. Steele, for these reasons: he had lived there for about twenty years, he had built him a house, and, I believe, had possession of all the private property there." * * * * "We thought it no more than justice that we should give him the refusal of it. We did so; but he thought the price we had fixed was too high, and offered a less sum. We told him that we could not take less than that amount. He then accepted it, and made an agreement with us, which was to give $90,000, $30,000 of which was to be paid on the 10th of July, I think, $30,000 on the 10th of July following, and $30,000 on the 10th of the July next succeeding."

"Question 37, (by Mr. MORRIS.) If you had been the private owner of that property and had desired to sell it, would you have mentioned it to but one individual, and have sold it to him upon your first interview with him?"

"Answer. No, sir; if I had been my own private property I should have managed it entirely differently."

What are the reasons given for selling at private sale, or rather at secret sale? For if there is any significance in words between "secret" and "private," the former applies to this case. Now, what is the reason given by these agents why they sold at secret sale, instead of giving notice to the community? They say there would have been a combination to prevent the land from selling for as much as they could get at a secret sale.

When asked who told them there would be a combination, Heiskell says Major Eastman told him, and Major Eastman says Heiskell told him; and when you find out from both who told them, it is Dr. Graham who mixed with the people as they say. Dr. Graham, by his own account, went to the Secretary of War in this city, stated he was going to Minnesota to make some investments, and asked if the Secretary had anything for him to do; and the Secretary says "nothing, unless it be the selling of Fort Snelling." But the Doctor preferred to be a purchaser, rather than a commissioner for the selling of the reserve. Before he leaves the city he forms a company with Mather to buy Fort Snelling, and it is this company, thus formed, composed of Graham, Mather, and Schell; and when they go to Minnesota they take in Frank Steele, that makes the purchase. How did Dr. Graham know that this reservation was to be sold thus privately?

There is no positive evidence that shows that he did know it. But the evidence shows that they make this arrangement for its purchase here in Washington, and Mather gets appointed a commissioner to go to Fort Ripley, and draws the contract for the agents to sell to Steele, and then returns to Washington to see that the sale is confirmed. Dr. Graham says he was going to Minnesota to make investments, and that is the reason he asked the Secretary of War the question he did. The evidence shows that he had no money to put into this company, or, at least, that he did not put in any, but that Mather and Schell advanced all the money, and that Dr. Graham's interest in it was to be repaid to them in salary, and for his services, although they paid nobody else any salary or for any services. Well, what was done? As soon as it is determined by the agents to sell at secret sale, or private sale, as they call it, they offer the property to Frank Steele before letting any one else know that it is for sale; and the only reason given for this course is, because he lived there, and had an interest in the reserve, by reason of living on it. He had no legal rights there, of course, for he was on the reserve only by the sufferance of the Government. It is true that Steele had a house on the reserve, and was living there; but so had McKenzie. McKenzie's property was worth fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, while Steele's was not worth more than ten thousand dollars, at the highest estimate, and part of the witnesses put it at six or eight thousand dollars.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. McKenzie was living in St. Louis. He lived there then, and does now.

Mr. GROW. I speak from the testimony. I cannot take the word of any member, however good it may be. The evidence is that McKenzie was living on the reserve, and had a store, a hotel, and other property there.

Mr. BURNETT. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not intend to do injustice; and I will say to him, that the proof shows that McKenzie lived in St. Louis, was not on the ground, and that Henry M. Rice was his agent.

Mr. GROW. Do you say he had not an interest there?

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. Justice to myself requires that I should make a statement, as I interrupted the gentleman when he was alluding to Mr. McKenzie. Kenneth McKenzie resides in St. Louis, and has done so for many years. He was interested in property on that reserve.

Mr. GROW. Exactly.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. But before this sale took place, Mr. Steele had acquired the whole interest of McKenzie.

Mr. GROW. I am not arguing on technicalities. It is claimed that this offer was made to Steele, because he had a greater interest in the reserve than any one else, and it will not do for the gentleman to raise the technicality that McKenzie was not there in person. I believe that is true, and that the statement of the gentlemen from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] and from Kentucky, [Mr. BURNETT], as to the whereabouts of his person, is correct. I do not care where he was in person. The point is, what was his interest in this reserve. The evidence is, that Steele agreed to pay McKenzie $15,000 for his interest there, which is almost twice as much as Steele's interest alone.

Now, why was this one man selected, and the sale made to him, when no other citizen knew that the property was for sale, or could find out anything about it from the Secretary of War, even on formal application, until the sale was completed? It is for this conduct that we arraign the Secretary of War. It is for the mode and manner of the sale. So far as this point is concerned, we care not whether the Government got the full value of the property or not. A wrong was done to other citizens, who wished, or might have been disposed, to purchase the property, by the course of the Secretary of War and his agents, in selecting this one man, and permitting him to buy it, without the knowledge of any one else except his confederates.

As to McKenzie's interest, a friend calls my attention to a portion of the testimony, which I will read. This is a part of an agreement signed by Franklin Steele, Archibald Graham, and John C. Mather, on page 456 of the report of the testimony:

"The said Steele is also further authorized to arrange with Kenneth McKenzie for his claim; and, if he requires one hundred and sixty acres of land; (and in no case is it to exceed that amount,) he is to be confined to what is known as the Baker claim; and should the said Steele deem it advisable, he is authorized, instead of deeding him the land aforesaid, to pay him, for the relinquishment of his entire claim, a sum not exceeding $15,000."

This was after the sale. The agents, in their negotiation with Steele, stipulated with him to pay McKenzie; and it was understood by them that Steele was to purchase McKenzie's interest.

Here is further testimony on the subject, which I read from page 91:

"Question 10, (by Mr. FAULKNER.) Did you afford any opportunity for competition at private sale?

"Answer. No, sir. After we had determined to sell it at private sale, we thought it best, for the reasons I have given, to offer it to this gentleman. If he had refused, we should probably then have gone to the next man who owned property on the reserve, who was a Mr. McKenzie. He owned a hotel there, &c."

That is the testimony of Major Eastman, one of the commissioners. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BISHOP] wished that gentlemen would have a little common sense. I call his attention to this point, and let us see what he considers common sense. Would the gentleman sell property of his own by giving notice to but one person that he wanted to sell it, and sell it to him at the first interview and upon the first offer? This witness says that Steele offered $75,000, but they wanted $15,000 more, and he agreed to give it, and they sold it to him. Now, where was the common sense in this transaction? The facts of the case stand thus: The Secretary of War has authority to sell only such reservations as are useful for military purposes. That is all the authority which the law gives him. Without taking the opinion of military men as to whether the reserve is needed or not, he orders its sale, and he orders its sale in such a manner that but one man and his associates in the purchase, knows of it, and he purchases the property at the first offer. The House can draw its own deductions from these facts. It is not my purpose to draw the inferences legitimately deducible from the facts disclosed in this testimony. Each member can draw them for himself. The citizens of the country, pursuing a lawful business, have been wronged by the mode and manner of this sale. It is of that that we complain, and for that that blame rests upon the Secretary of War. Whether he did it corruptly or not, is of no consequence except as to the amount of reprobation which the act deserves. He violated the law of Congress in selling public property needed for public use. He trampled down the rights of the citizens of the country, and that, too, under the sanction of the President of the United States, by depriving them of equal opportunities in a fair business transaction.

The gentleman from Connecticut complains that this side of the House has before, during this session, arraigned the President and executive officers. Sir, when the time comes that the Representatives of the people hesitate to arraign any executive officer of the Government for a perversion of his powers under the Constitution, we shall be at the verge of the downfall of the Republic. When the Executive demands of the Representative of the people allegiance to him instead of to the constituency which elected him, and brings party power and Administration patronage to overcome his scruples or to convince his judgment, it is time that a warning voice was heard from the tribunal of the people. It is the duty of the Representative who is true and loyal to those who sent him here, and to the convictions of his heart, to arraign any Executive who demands of the Representative, as has been done by the present Executive, allegiance to himself, instead of the people whom he ought to represent.

There is but one other point, Mr. Speaker, to which I desire to refer, and that is as to the value of the land; though, in my view of this case, that is of but little consequence, except so far as it goes to show whether this transaction was an underhanded and fraudulent one or not. If the property sold for much less than its value, the sale being thus secret, it would be still more open to the suspicion that there was improper collusion between the power which ordered the sale and the men who purchased the property. It is in that view alone, that the amount received for the property, compared with its real value, becomes of great consequence. It is important, so far as it is a circumstance to fix the character of the transaction, whether it was fair and manly, or whether there was collusion for improper purposes.

Now, as to the value of the property, I shall cite but few witnesses, and those from both military and civil life, in order that we may have the opinions of each. I read first from the testimony of Captain James H. Simpson, (page 387,) who is a captain of the corps of topographical engineers, in the United States Army, and had been in charge of the Government roads, in Minnesota, from 1851 to 1856, and was stationed at St. Paul, a few miles from the fort. I read a part of his testimony, as to the value of this reservation:

"Question 2597. Had you any interview with either of the commissioners who were sent there for the purpose of selling that reservation?

"Answer. Not previous to the sale, for I was not up at the fort; but subsequent to the sale I saw Major Eastman and had some conversation about it.

"Question 2598. What was it?

"Answer. He admitted that the sale had taken place, and he thought the Government had received a fair price for the land. I told him he could not talk in that way to me, a person who had lived five years in Minnesota, and who knew more about the value of land there than he did.

"Question 2603. What, in your opinion, was the value of that tract of land by the acre, taking it as a whole, in June, 1857?

"Answer. If it had been put up in small parcels, I think some portions of it would have brought $200 per acre, and the lowest price realized for any of it would have been, I think, about twenty dollars an acre."

To this same point I read from the testimony of Mr. M. C. Smith, who has resided at Minneapolis, a few miles up the river from the fort, for the past three years, and whose business is dealing in land; page 238, is the following testimony:

"Question 1341. Are you acquainted with this reservation, the character of its soil, the number of acres it contains, and so forth?

"Answer. Yes, sir; pretty definitely, I think. I do not think the exact number of acres is known. I have heard it more generally estimated at eight thousand acres. Many think it will overrun ten thousand.

"Question 1342. Taking into consideration the character of the soil, its location, and everything, what was the reservation worth per acre for agricultural purposes at the time of the sale?

"Answer. Considered exclusively for agricultural purposes, I should think it would average about twenty-five dollars per acre."

Page 239:

"Question 1349. Do you regard the site of Fort Snelling as an eligible point for the location of a city or town?

"Answer. I do.

"Question 1350. What would you say that tract of land was worth, taking into consideration its advantages as a town site at that time?

"Answer. I should not put it under four hundred thousand dollars. I think it was worth not far from that."

This witness seems to be an intelligent man and well acquainted with the value of property in the neighborhood.

I now read from the testimony of Hon. ROBERT SMITH, a member of this House, who speaks from personal acquaintance of the value of the property. I read from page 146 of the report:

"Question 519. Did you make an examination in June for the purpose of purchasing the property in the whole or in part?

"Answer. Since 1848 I had been from one to four times a year in that region. I had, from the fact of my living in the West, and having rather a mania for land, examined that reservation always when I was up there. I know the country there almost as well as I do from my dwelling house to the post office in my town. When I wrote the Secretary of War, I wrote after having maturely reflected on the subject, and I say there what I believe. I would have been willing to have gone to the extent of the money I could raise in buying that property at the price which I stated in my letter. I would have sold property at cash prices, to be appraised by disinterested persons, to have raised the money to have purchased the property at four times the rate at which it was sold; that is, at four times eleven dollars per acre, for which I have been informed it sold; for I will say to the committee that I do not know to-day the price the property was sold for.

"Question 520. The property sold for $90,000. Do you mean that you would have been willing to have paid four times that amount?

"Answer. Yes, sir; I would have gone to the 'extent of my pile,' to use a western phrase, to have purchased it at four times $90,000. If it is not traveling out of the record, I will say to the committee, as sincerely as I ever made a remark in my life, that I think I could have sold that property last spring, if, when the act passed last March, I had been commissioned, with one or two other good, discreet, sensible men; we could have cut up the property, and sold it for half a million dollars, making the last payment within the time I am informed the last payment is to be made by the present purchasers."

He repeats the statement in a subsequent portion of his testimony, that he would have sold property in Illinois, at cash prices, to be appraised by three disinterested persons, and have purchased the reservation at four times the price for which it was sold.

So far, then, as the value of this property is concerned, I will not stop to read more testimony on that point. I think, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Bisnor] remarked, in his case, I have cited enough to satisfy this side of the House, and, I trust, all the fair-minded men on that side, that the price received was entirely inadequate. The testimony shows conclusively that if the fact of the intention of the Government to sell the property had been known, and persons desiring to purchase had been allowed to put in bids for the property, in whole or in part, a much larger price would have been realized than was received for it.

But it is argued that if the property had been exposed at public sale, there would have been combinations to prevent the property from being sold for a fair price.

If the commissioners had advertised for sealed proposals, to be accepted or rejected by the commissioners, how could there have been combinations so as to defeat a fair sale? It seems to me, that mode, if no other, would have been a common-sense course to have been pursued; but the Secretary must show his indomitable will by placing the sale of this property into the hands of inexperienced persons, to say the least, and have it sold against the opinions of some of the most competent judges of its value to the defenses of the country. He must not be influenced by the opinions of others who would be likely to have more knowledge upon the subject than himself; he must show his indomitable will by selling this property at a secret sale, and allowing it thus to be sold at one fourth its value. Sir, if this conduct constitutes greatness, and is Jackson-like, then it is very easy to make General Jacksons in these days.

But, Mr. Speaker, as was well said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Daves,] this testimony is as conclusive as you could expect to obtain to prove improper conduct under such circumstances. If there was a fraudulent collusion, you must, from the necessity of the case, prove it from circumstantial evidence. No man, in office or out, is likely to stand before the world his own accuser. You must prove his corruption or improper conduct by incidents and circumstances, which, taken in connection with each other, make up the case. It is impossible to do it in any other way. Sir, take this whole testimony together, and it shows in the first place that the reservation was necessary for the purposes of the Government, and therefore ought not to have been sold, for it was not within the scope of the law; next, it shows that the Secretary ordered it to be sold in such a way that it could only be purchased by two or three men to the exclusion of all other citizens who might desire to buy. That fact alone proves a violation of law by the Secretary, and therefore official misconduct. All citizens of the country are to be treated alike by the executive officers of the Government; and if advantages are given to one, or to any class over another by the deliberate action of the officer, it is a breach of official duty. This reservation was sold by the Secretary, so that no other persons, save the purchasers, had any knowledge that it was to be sold, and failed to obtain that knowledge, even on application to the Secretary; and when other persons of equal responsibility, if they had been informed of the sale, would have given a larger price for it, on equally advantageous terms for the Government. In my judgment it would be difficult to prove a clearer case of official misconduct on the part of an officer of the Government, unless you could show, by positive proof, that he had received a pecuniary or other valuable consideration for his official acts.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I desire to say a few words upon the question now pending before the House. Before I proceed to comment upon the evidence in this case I must, and this House must, certainly come to the conclusion that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] has introduced a new rule for the construction of law, while commenting upon the subject of the amendment to the Army appropriation bill of the last Congress, and the debate which occurred in the Senate upon that amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania argues that because Colonel Weller, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who proposed the amendment, stated in debate that this reservation was to be sold at public auction, therefore the law must be construed as if the words "at public sale" were inserted therein. It is the first time I have known a construction of the statutes of the country to depend upon the debates of the law-making power. The debates of the legislative body have been quoted sometimes for the purpose of construing a law, if there was ambiguity in it; and perhaps the gentleman might derive some benefit from the statement of Colonel Weller, if such were the fact now.

But, sir, the statute in this case is positive and imperative, authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of such military sites as have become, or may hereafter become, useless. It therefore vested in the Secretary of War power to dispose of such military sites in the manner he might deem proper and prudent. If he chose to sell at private sale, he had full authority to do so. If he chose to invite propositions at public sale, the authority to do so was fully conferred upon him. It has sometimes so turned out in the history of the country that the sale of military reservations, or other portions of the land of the United States, can best be made on better terms at private sale than it can be at public sale. We have the example of that in the sale of a portion of the Fort Snelling reservation, when it was offered at public auction two or three years ago, and none of it brought more than $1 25 per acre. At the time of the reduction of this reserve, a portion of the land was advertised for sale. At the sale, the very combination took place by which some twenty or thirty thousand acres passed into the hands of citizens of this country at the price of $1 25 per acre. Therefore I say that it was with these facts before the Congress of the United States at the time this amendment was put upon the Army bill, that it was deemed wise policy to leave it to the Secretary of War to dispose of the property either at public or private sale.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are in this question but two points to be made: first, was Fort Snelling useless as a military post. If it was useless, then the Secretary of War had full authority to sell; but if it was needed for the military defense of the country, or even as a depot for supplies, then I am willing to admit that it ought not to have been sold. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] cited the opinion of military men on this question, but in his citations he has not quoted correctly the opinions given. In replying to the testimony of General Jesup, he reads from the indorsement made by him on an application a year ago for the sale of that property. General Jesup then gives it as his opinion that if troops are to be concentrated in large bodies, Fort Snelling may be needed for military purposes; but if another system is to be pursued and the troops are to be sent upon the frontier for the purpose of giving protection to the frontier settlements, then Fort Snelling is not needed for the military defense of the country. I desire to refer to the testimony of General Jesup, that there may be no mistake in reference to it; for General Jesup has given his opinion on this subject on two different occasions.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, to make out his case, read as follows:

"If this policy is to be adopted, and it is certainly the true policy, not a foot of the site of Fort Snelling can be spared without weakening the defense of the frontier."

Again, in 1856, when application was made for the sale of this Fort Snelling reservation, he delivers this opinion:

"The site is no longer of any value as a position for defense. Its only value now is as a depot of supplies for the frontier posts in advance of it."

He was speaking of it here as a depot, as a place of deposit of stores to be sent forward to posts still further on the frontier. The opinion of General Scott is, that it is no longer needed for military defense, and he states that it is of little or no value as a depot for supplies. I ask you whether you are to take the opinion of military men on this subject? I am willing to rest the case upon the opinion delivered by military men. You will find that the majority of those who have expressed an opinion on the subject, decide that it is not needed as a post of defense or as a military depot.

But let us see the location of that reserve? It is situated at the confluence of the Minnesota and the Mississippi rivers, and is more than one hundred miles from the frontier. It is in the very midst of a population of more than thirty thousand souls, embraced within the radius of six miles.

Mr. GROW. Is there not, in the gentleman's State, a military reservation upon the borders of St. Louis?

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. Yes, sir; and as a post of military defense it is useless. It is of no service whatever, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is aware of it; it is a place where troops are concentrated to be sent forward to the frontier. They are sometimes brought down the Missouri river, and stationed at Jefferson barracks until they can be sent to other positions of the country; they are sometimes placed there for drill and discipline. I would be willing to dispose of it unless it should be agreed to be retained as a national foundry or manufacturing arsenal. The system of keeping useless military reservations is a system which has been condemned by Congress over and over again. Why do you want troops stationed within the borders of Missouri for the purpose of defending her citizens from the attacks of Indians? Ought the soldiers to be placed within the line of settlements, or ought they not to be in advance of the line of settlements? I pretend to no military skill; but it is my opinion that they ought to be in advance of settlements. Then if the Indians should be disposed to make an attack, and should go to the settlements to rob and murder, information would reach the post, and the troops would be enabled to cut them off before they could return.

Officers become attached to these posts in the populous parts of the country, where they can have society, and all the conveniences of life, and always remonstrate with the Secretary of War against breaking them up. It is for their own convenience and for their own comfort that they remonstrate against the abandonment of a post within the line of settlements. I have no doubt, if the opinion of military men were obtained, that it would be found that Fort Leavenworth is not necessary as a post of military defense. Settlers have gone one hundred miles beyond it. Many military men, I know, only look upon it as a depot for supplies to be sent forward to the various military posts upon the plains and upon the routes of emigration to the Pacific. It is a place, too, where supplies can be got cheap, and the troops are brought to winter, thus saving the cost of the transportation of supplies to them.

Can any gentleman rise in his place and say that Fort Snelling was needed for the military defense of the settlers of the State of Minnesota? There is the military post of Fort Ridgely, one hundred miles west of it, and Fort Ripley, one hundred and twenty miles to the north of Fort Snelling. These two forts are the proper places for the troops to be stationed, instead of at a fort in the heart of a population of thirty thousand.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] adverted to the fact that a board of Army officers was convened for the purpose of forming an opinion whether this was needed as a military post for defense, or as a depot? and he took occasion to remark that that board of officers was convened immediately after the report was made to the House in this case. That is true; and yet the order had gone forth prior to that time that these officers should visit Fort Snelling, examine that post, and give their opinion on this question. Why was that resorted to? From the fact that certain officers of the Army had, in their testimony before the committee, declared that, in their opinion, it ought to be retained longer as a military post; while other officers came forward and gave their opinion, in as positive a manner, in the opposite view. That board of Army officers assembled. After an examination of that site, after taking into consideration the matter of defense and the matter of furnishing supplies to the military posts lying beyond Fort Snelling, they were unanimously of opinion that it was no longer needed for military purposes. The testimony of Captain Todd is also embraced in the report of the committee. It is true he no longer holds a commission in the Army of the United States; and, perhaps, in the opinion of some gentlemen, his may, therefore, be incompetent testimony on military affairs. This gentleman had been in the Army, and had been in command of Fort Snelling for two years and upwards; and had, therefore, an opportunity of forming an opinion of the value of that property for military purposes; and he declared it as his opinion that it is no longer needed for defense or as a depot. Colonel Thomas, however, testifies that it is needed as a military depot, and that supplies should be brought there from St. Louis, and forwarded thence to Fort Ridgely and Fort Ripley. Now, what has been the practice? While Captain Todd was in command of Fort Snelling, he testifies that the supplies for Forts Ridgely and Ripley were brought up to St. Paul, and not to Fort Snelling—only six miles distant—there landed, and sent forward to Forts Ridgely and Ripley. When you find this to have been the practice of the Government when that military post was occupied, I ask if there is any probability that a change of that practice would have taken place? The reason given why supplies were reshipped at St. Paul, is, that it was formerly considered the head of navigation for boats of large size. Supplies were deposited at St. Paul, and stored there until they were needed to be sent forward to the other posts.

I think, then, Mr. Speaker, from the testimony in the case, from the testimony given by these military men, from the position of this and the other posts, that it is conclusively shown that Fort Snelling was no longer needed for purposes of defense or as a military depot.

The only other question, then, in the case, is, was the price received by the Government for this property an adequate price? What is this military reserve? It is represented as being a tract of land situated about six miles above St. Paul, and estimated to contain six or eight thousand acres. That is the minimum and maximum of the estimate. In regard to the situation and the quality of the land, the witnesses testify variously. One witness testifies that he thinks that at least two thousand acres of it is overflowed land; land which, under the swamp-land act, would have gone to the State of Minnesota. Another witness testifies that a large portion of it is sandy. Other witnesses testify that a portion of it is in the bluff; and others, that the quality of the soil is not remarkably fine, but, on the contrary, poor; and they express the opinion that for agricultural purposes, or any other purpose whatever, the Government of the United States has received more than the land was worth. In the opinion of others, it has received its fair equivalent; but in the opinion of some half dozen witnesses who give a fictitious value to it because they think it is a good location for a town site, the Government received an inadequate price for it. They express the opinion that it could have been sold for more. But the current of the testimony of the witnesses residing in Minnesota, of those acquainted with the land, and who have examined it with respect to its value, is, that they would not give the price which Steele obliged himself to pay. They consider that he paid too much for the property, and they would not have it at the price.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a fair summary of the testimony; and if it be, I ask whether there has been anything culpable in the conduct of the Secretary of War? I ask whether he had not authority to dispose of this property as he did dispose of it? And I ask whether his agents, whom he appointed to negotiate the sale, have not obtained a fair equivalent and fair consideration for this property?

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] comments on the fact that the sale was made to Franklin Steele. Yes; and he had a good claim on it, as we say in the West. He had the strongest right which is recognized among us all in the West. It is a part of the unwritten law of the land, but nevertheless it is enforced on all occasions. He had a stronger claim to become the purchaser of that property than any other person; because, by the permission and consent of the Government, he had erected valuable improvements upon it—improvements estimated to be of greater value than thirty thousand dollars.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, says that Mr. McKenzie lived there. Mr. McKenzie did not live there, but at St. Louis, and was not the owner of the property in his own right. He became possessor of it as the administrator of Baker. It is so testified to by Steele, who also testifies that he acquired all the interest which McKenzie had in the property before making his purchase. If any witness contradicts the testimony of Steele, I have yet to learn who that witness is. All the improvements on that military reservation, at the date of the sale, belonged to Franklin Steele, and were estimated as being worth thirty or forty thousand dollars. The very hotel which had been owned by McKenzie was then owned and controlled by Steele.

Mr. BURNETT. When Steele became the purchaser of this property, under an arrangement between him and the agent of McKenzie, he supposed that he had acquired all the claim which McKenzie might have to the improvements made upon the reservation, but he was to satisfy McKenzie, the administrator of Baker, who was entitled to the claim.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. Here is the testimony to which I was referring:

"Question 1307. At what time did you purchase from McKenzie?"

"Answer. I never purchased any land from McKenzie. I bought, or agreed to buy, from him some improvements upon the reserve. It was after Major Eastman arrived there and commenced making the survey.

"Question 1308. Was this before the sale?"

"Answer. Yes, sir.

"Question 1312. How do you know that McKenzie was authorized by the War Department to settle upon it and use it for any purpose he pleased?"

"Answer. He was never authorized to settle upon it. I have not stated that he was authorized to make improvements; I stated that he was authorized to occupy the improvement which he owned by purchase. He purchased the improvement, or it came to him as the trustee, or administrator, of Mr. Baker. These improvements were there for the purpose of Indian trade."

At the time the contract was made, Steele represented that he had acquired all the interest of McKenzie, and the interest which McKenzie had in the property was as administrator of Baker, who had been permitted to settle upon the reservation.

Mr. Speaker, I remarked that I thought there were but two questions involved in this inquiry: First, had this military post become useless, either as a work of defense or as a depot for military supplies to be sent elsewhere? I have but one additional remark to make in reference to that point, and that is, that if it was maintained as a military depot, the cost of maintaining it, superadded to the interest on the value of the property, would far exceed the expense of storage at St. Paul, or of paying the salary of an officer to manage the property at St. Paul. The annual cost of maintaining this post, if one company only should be stationed at it, would be more than $27,000. The interest on the purchase money would be $5,400. The other question is, has the property been sold for an adequate price, or has the Government of the United States been the loser? Taking into consideration the liability to form combinations, and the fact that a combination had taken place at a former sale, at this very point, I think that the commissioners were justified in making the sale privately instead of publicly; and a majority of the witnesses testify that the amount received was an adequate sum, while several of them testify that it is greatly more than the property is worth. The attempt, for political purposes, as I believe, has been made to assail the Secretary of War in this transaction. As far as his conduct is concerned, I consider there is no just cause of assault on this faithful public officer. He ought not to receive the censure of the public or of this House.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to discuss the merits of the sale of Fort Snelling; but the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL] this morning, in making his speech, saw fit to assail the character, and allude sneeringly to some of the citizens of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. The gentleman read some of the names attached to petitions from the citizens of that State, which I have no doubt are disgusting and obnoxious to that gentleman, and a majority of the gentlemen upon the other side of the House, simply and solely because most of those read by him are foreign names.

Allow me to say to the gentleman, and also to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES], that they have assailed gentlemen here by name who are their peers in every walk of life, and in every position in which they may or can be placed. The gentleman from Massachusetts descended to a lower depth, as was remarked by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. BISHOP], than any other gentleman who has spoken upon that side of the question. He announced to the House that Mr.

Franklin Steele had resided on the reservation for a long time, and had had seven children born there. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Do you, sir, when that good time comes, of which your party dreams, and for which it prays, when you will have a majority in Congress, and a Republican President at the other end of the avenue, mean, by calling this matter of the children in question, to regulate the increase of humanity by act of Congress?

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman wish a reply?

Mr. CAVANAUGH. If the gentleman wishes to reply, he can do so.

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman from Minnesota understand my speech, or any portion of it, from the beginning to the end, to have reflected on Mr. Franklin Steele, because he had made his home upon that reservation, because he had resided there for twenty years, and because seven children had been born to him there? If he does, then I very much regret that he does not understand the English language better.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. The gentleman from Massachusetts alluded to Franklin Steele, and asked those gentlemen who are defending the Secretary of War by what right Steele was upon this land, and if he had a preemption right, or had filed a claim upon a reservation belonging to the United States? He stated, further, that Franklin Steele had accumulated a princely fortune whilst residing upon this reservation. Now, it may be owing to my ignorance in not being able to comprehend the English of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I certainly drew the inference from those remarks, that, in the gentleman's opinion, Franklin Steele was to blame for having accumulated a fortune, and in having children born to him on the reservation; and that the Secretary of War was to blame for selling this property to this Minnesota millionaire, when it ought to have been sold to some other individual.

Now, for the information of that gentleman, and of the House, I will say that Franklin Steele has resided in the Territory of Minnesota for the last twenty years. He went there a poor young man, unknown, unprotected, and unprotected; and by the labor of his own arm, and his own energy of character, he has made his way to fortune. And now, because this man upon the extreme frontier has risen from poverty and obscurity to wealth and station, he must be sneered at here by gentlemen from the older States. Mr. Henry M. Rice has also been lugged into this discussion. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked who John C. Mather and Augustus Schell were? The friends of those gentlemen can answer for them. I speak only for my own friends—residents and distinguished citizens of Minnesota.

I think, myself, that I need not say who Henry M. Rice is. He had the honor of a seat upon the floor of the old Hall as a representative of the Territory of Minnesota, and, in that capacity, won for himself not only a State, but a national reputation for industry, talent, and energy, a purity of character, and a manly fearlessness in the discharge of every duty he was called upon to perform. The people of Minnesota have indorsed him by sending him to the United States Senate as their first choice. The expression of approval was not confined to his own party friends. Even Republicans were compelled to vote for him in consideration of the eminent ability with which he represented that Territory while he was Delegate. Henry M. Rice, Mr. Speaker, needs no defense from me. The public records of the nation, and his past services to his State, speak for him. But there are other individuals who have been alluded to here, not so well known as the gentleman I have mentioned.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] spoke of a band of office-holders in Minnesota, and has alluded to the present Governor of that State, the Hon. Henry H. Sibley, formerly a Delegate from that Territory in this body. Now, sir, I remember very distinctly, during the last campaign in that State—and I wish to say here, that this Fort Snelling difficulty, this Fort Snelling "swindle," as it is called, is no new subject to me or the people of Minnesota—that Governor Sibley was repeatedly charged by the Republican press and orators with being a party to this transaction, a participator in the "swindle;" and it was by him pronounced false. The charge was unfounded then, and I pronounce it unfounded now. It had its origin in party malice, for a party purpose, which it failed to accomplish.

Sir, the people of Minnesota have given the lie to this contemptible falsehood, by elevating Mr. Sibley to the gubernatorial chair of that State.

Mr. GROW. The evidence shows that he was connected with it.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I say that the evidence shows no such thing.

Mr. GROW. The evidence shows that he was to have thirty acres of the reservation at the price paid for it by the purchasers.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. He was to have thirty acres of the land at the same price, because he agreed with the parties interested, after the purchase from Government had been consummated, to sustain a ferry from Fort Snelling to the south side of the Minnesota river. But, sir, I was going on to speak of the effect of this Fort Snelling "swindle" on the politics of that State. I have seen a paper—and I presume some gentleman in this Hall now has it—dated the 25th May, I think, published at St. Paul, that claims to be the leading organ of the Republican party of the State of Minnesota—a lying, vituperative, and venal press—which for the past year has been constantly engaged in vilifying the character of every prominent Democrat in the State, and every respectable Republican, too, who has had the manliness and independence to speak and act for himself. I say I have read, in such a paper, a letter addressed to the editor from a distinguished member of Congress, in which he states that the committee on the Fort Snelling swindle would report in a few days, and that he would send him a copy of the testimony. For what purpose, sir? For no other purpose than that for which it was used in the canvass last fall—to make political capital of, as a great political machine for the purpose of carrying the State against the Democratic party.

Now, a word about the reservation. I know Fort Snelling from one end to the other; I have been all over it, all around it. Gentlemen have complained here, and have undertaken to censure the Secretary of War because this reservation was sold secretly. Now, sir, what has been the history of all the public sales of military reservations? I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how much they got for Fort Winnebago, which was sold a few years ago at public auction, and which was nearly as valuable as Fort Snelling? It was sold for $5 40 per acre. I ask, again, how much did Fort Jesup, which was sold a few years ago, bring the Government? It was sold at public auction for $3 88 per acre. And I go further: after the sale of Fort Snelling, the Fort Ripley reservation, up the Mississippi river, in Minnesota, containing several thousand acres of valuable land, was sold at public auction, and brought from half a cent to ten cents per acre.

Mr. GROW. That sale was set aside.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. It was set aside because of the inadequacy of the price which it brought at public auction.

Mr. DAWES. Who sold that reservation?

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Major Eastman.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, it was sold by Major Eastman as a back-fire on the sale of Fort Snelling.

Mr. LETCHER. Does the gentleman say that Major Eastman and Mr. Heiskell sold the Fort Ripley reservation?

Mr. DAWES. No, sir. Those gentlemen sold the Fort Snelling reservation at secret sale. Major Eastman afterwards sold Fort Ripley at public auction, or at least went through the form of a sale, which was set aside in order to show that the sale of Fort Snelling was more successful.

Mr. LETCHER. Why was it set aside? Was it not on account of inadequacy of price, growing out of the mode of sale adopted?

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt in the world it was sold just as Major Eastman intended it should be sold, to accomplish the purpose I have stated.

Mr. LETCHER. I would like to know by what authority the gentleman undertakes to charge that Major Eastman has been guilty of that species of corruption in the sale of Fort Ripley? Is there a particle of evidence going to justify the charge? Is there one solitary, isolated fact stamped upon the record to sustain the charge?

Mr. DAWES. That is the inference which I draw from the testimony. The gentleman is at liberty to draw such inferences as he chooses.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not ask for inferences; I ask for facts. Here is a charge impeaching the character of Major Eastman, and I want the facts upon which it is based.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman is at liberty, and is bound, to draw just such inferences from the facts presented here as his own judgment shall require. I, sir, have the same liberty, and am responsible only for the honest exercise of that judgment. I state my own opinions, founded upon the evidence in this case.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask the gentleman if there is one particle of evidence which implicates Major Eastman, or which complicates Major Eastman, or which involves his character or conduct in the sale of Fort Ripley, in any way? If there is, I should be very glad if the gentleman would refer to it.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I believe I shall have to stop this side discussion.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the gentleman will allow the gentleman from Massachusetts to respond.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Very well.

Mr. DAWES. I have to repeat that the testimony, taken as a whole, brings the conviction upon my mind as I have stated it here. I have no doubt that the pressing necessity growing out of the circumstances of this case, which has led the Secretary to fortify himself, even after this report had been made here in this House, by a board of Army officers, also led to the sale of Fort Ripley in the manner in which it was sold, which, after the form had been gone through with, was set aside for the purpose of satisfying the clamor of the public, as the only possible way of concealing the impropriety of the secret sale of Fort Snelling made to political favorites.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to state, for the information of the House, whether this back-fire of which he speaks was so managed as to exclude any person from bidding at the sale of Fort Ripley; and whether there was not a combination formed which prevented the land from selling at any higher price?

Mr. DAWES. I must refer the gentleman to his own Secretary of War for an answer to his question. It was very easy to have taken such precautions as would have prevented a combination being formed to defeat a fair sale.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GROW. I object.

Mr. HUGHES. The Republican candidate for Speaker of the next House of Representatives desires the rules to be enforced.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment; for I am satisfied that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] will take back what he has said when he understands the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania to object.

Mr. GROW. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman is in favor of getting at the truth, I hope that he will not object.

Mr. GROW. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. HUGHES. I object to the Republican candidate for Speaker, making any speech out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I consider the remark made by the gentleman from Massachusetts as entirely gratuitous. I do not believe that he has the slightest foundation for making it. I know there is nothing in the record upon which to base it. If the Secretary of War gets a fair price for a piece of land, whether at public or private sale, of course it will not suit the Republicans, and they must impute fraud in the transaction. They constantly cry "fraud! fraud!" Perhaps it may be that we shall forget the corruption exposed on the part of the other side at the last session.

Here was the Fort Ripley reservation. That was sold at public auction after due advertisement in the public papers, and it sold from a half cent up to ten cents per acre. Neither sale, however, and neither position, satisfies these gentlemen, who seem not to be willing to be satisfied. Do they want a public sale? As I have said, they have had it at Fort Ripley. Do they want a private and secret sale? They have had it at Fort Snelling. The honorable Mr. Becker, who was elected a member and entitled to a seat on the floor of this House, from the State of Minnesota, in a remark before the committee, embraces the whole thing in a nutshell. He says that "there is an unwritten history of the West in these land speculations." I attended a public sale of land in Iowa. I did not own an acre there, and I did not buy any. I saw farming land run up to $190 75 per acre. Why? For the purpose of plastering it over next morning with land warrants bought in the city of New York at eighty cents per acre. Gentlemen from the West know of these combinations, and I say that no officer, even though he be as pure as an archangel, can avoid and destroy these combinations in any other way than by withdrawing the whole parcel of land from sale, which he has no authority to do.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GROW. I object to any interruption.

Mr. HUGHES. I only got up to draw the fire of the Republican candidate for Speaker.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] made some allusions this morning to the people of Minnesota, and especially to the people of St. Paul. I will tell him that I live one hundred and fifteen miles from St. Paul, and have no interest in the growth or prosperity of that city, save a pride that every man should feel in the welfare of every portion of his State. He said that the people there supposed that was "the great hub round which the world revolved." He sneered at them. I will tell him that there is more life and energy and progress in that one city of the State of Minnesota than there is in the entire fossil State he represents upon this floor. Look back at St. Paul ten years ago! Then it was a mere trading station, surrounded with thousands of vagabond and savage Indians, and with here and there a birch canoe, a "dug-out," or a stray steamer upon the river's side. Now it is a city of fifteen thousand inhabitants, compactly and elegantly built. There, sir, religion has erected her altars; there, too, have art, science and literature their votaries; education, refinement, and all the best characteristics of the older cities of the Union are to be found there.

Commerce, too, with its busy and ever active hands and energy, has built its temples upon the banks of that mighty river, which, nineteen hundred miles below, empties its waters into the Atlantic. Is there nothing in all this, sir, of which the people of St. Paul may not feel justly proud?

Only ten miles above are the twin sisters, Minneapolis and St. Anthony, joined together by a work of art that the gentleman cannot find an equal for in his own State. Those cities have ten thousand inhabitants. He will find there, too, the finest water power upon God's broad earth, which, by the energy of Minnesotians, has been made useful in mechanical industry in driving the busy wheels of the mills, shops, and factories at the falls of St. Anthony.

You will find there, also, the University of Minnesota, a superstructure of which even the State of Vermont might feel justly proud.

We are a laboring, a living people there, and we believe we are just as good as are to be found elsewhere in the Union. Improvements and enterprise and progress are not confined to the places I have mentioned. On the Mississippi, up the valley of the Minnesota, in the interior, north and south, are thriving cities, towns, and villages; splendid farms, cultivated fields—all the evidences of a prosperous, happy, and intelligent people. And all this, sir, has been accomplished in eight or nine years.

The gentleman says that we believe the State of Minnesota to be the greatest in the Union. Even were this true, I should not look upon it as a very serious crime. The gentleman's remarks only show the feelings of the older and fossilized States against the young and growing West. The young, the enterprising, the energetic, the men with living blood in their veins, are the founders of new States. And therefore I do not wonder at the jealousy manifested by the East, for it feels that the "scepter is departing from Judah." Sir, we may well feel proud of the progress of Minnesota. In 1849, her entire population was four thousand nine hundred and forty. Now it is nearly or quite two hundred thousand souls. In soil, climate, natural resources, and all the elements that go to make up a great and prosperous State, we are not inferior to the most favored portion of this broad Union. Again, I say, we have a right to be proud. We have wrested this country, as it were, from the very clutch of the savage. We have made it to bloom and blossom as the rose. All the substantial institutions of the older States we have in our midst, but we may lack those higher ones that wealth cannot buy. We have every means and facility for the purposes of education and the growth of the arts and sciences. We have there all the appliances of civilization and growth they have in any other State. This much I felt bound to say in reply to the gentleman from Vermont.

One word more about this Fort Snelling property, and I have done. I would like some gentleman upon the other side to state how long ago it was when the last attack was made upon the white settlements near Fort Snelling? Standing at the commandant's door, the eye can scan a circle of forty miles, and look down upon a population of thirty thousand souls.

Go a little further. Of what use was this Fort Snelling at the time of the massacre last March? Why, it was more than one hundred and fifty miles from the scene of slaughter. Would you send troops in March up the valley of the Minnesota, to stop the forays of the Indians? No, sir; but if Fort Snelling had been dismantled long ago, and if the Army had been sent to Fort Ridgely, where it properly belonged, these murders and atrocities would not have been perpetrated. Look again, to August last, when five thousand Indians bid defiance to Major Sherman and his battery. Why did not Major Sherman fight them then? Because he had to send one hundred and twenty-five miles to Fort Snelling, to bring up the men who were lying there idle for months. I know the facts, because I accompanied the troops myself from Fort Snelling up to the south bend of the Minnesota river. Fort Snelling is a very elegant appanage to very elegant gentlemen, who have a very elegant place for parade and show.

But some gentlemen say that the land is good for farming business. It has been just stated by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHILPS,] that over two thousand acres of this land are utterly worthless, and yet they say it is good for agricultural purposes. It is, as the gentleman from Massachusetts says, a level, beautiful spot; one of the most magnificent spots on the earth. But the gentleman from Vermont says that the land ought not to have been disposed of because it is wanted as a military post for the protection of the frontier of Minnesota. Now, for the last eight or ten years the people of Minnesota have not called on the United States Government to protect them in anything. They are abundantly able to protect themselves. It is absurd to say that Fort Snelling is to keep the Winnebagoes in subjection. Seventeen hundred of these Indians reside in the valley of the Minnesota, ninety-five miles above Fort Snelling, where they are quietly passing their time on their reservation.

Were it not, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of being used as an electioneering document, this report would never have been made. And I say further, that I believe this committee would never have been created, had it not been for a feeling of disappointment which certain gentlemen entertained because they did not have a slice of this reservation.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman, as it has been charged in hiring presses that my course was dictated by disappointment in not becoming the purchaser of this reservation, whether he alludes to me in that connection?

Mr. HUGHES. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] to object.

Mr. GROW. I only object when there is a want of courtesy.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I object out of courtesy to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. I am only now speaking as to the course of some of the leaders of the Republican party in my own State.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The gentleman from Illinois rose to a personal explanation.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota to say that his remark applied to persons in his own State. Is that so?

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Yes; and to gentlemen who have spoken here. After the sale was made, distinguished and leading members of the Republican party in that State used it as a cat's-paw to pull their hot political chestnuts out of the ashes. Now, so far as Minnesota is concerned, and her people, this is a transaction between the Secretary of War and one of Minnesota's most respectable citizens.

I will say, in conclusion, as I said in the beginning, that the gentlemen whose names have been dragged into this controversy by the gentleman from Vermont and the gentleman from Massachusetts, are the peers of either of those gentlemen, and the peers of any gentleman on this floor.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy much of the time of the House in this discussion. I confess I was a little pained to hear the gentleman from Minnesota in a maiden speech, take upon himself to say that he believed that this report made by the majority of the committee appointed by you, sir, was made for the purpose of accomplishing partisan objects and for no other purpose. I trust that when he has a little more experience, he will be satisfied that whatever may be his private opinion about the action of any of the committees of this House, or about any member of the House, he will learn that it is not consistent with decorum in debate, for him to impute improper motives of this kind to any committee or any member.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go into any details of the evidence in this case, but I desire to present what I regard as the controlling points and considerations which ought to govern this House in the decision of the case. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] in his very able speech of this morning, (if it had only been applicable to the question before the House,) that the amount for which this Fort Snelling reservation was sold is a matter of comparatively secondary importance. I agree, too, that the only thing that is essentially worthy of the consideration of the House, and worthy the attention of the country, is the integrity of the functionaries in the administration of the laws. I regard this question as very important for that reason, and really I do not regard it as of importance for any other reason.

I will say, at the outset, that I do not believe that the evidence in this case shows that the Secretary of War, in person, has been guilty of any overt act of fraud in the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation. I will say, however, to the gentleman from Virginia, in answer to his complaint that the committee have not exonerated the Secretary of War expressly from blame, that I do regard the associations with which he is surrounded, and the circumstances connected with the sale, as throwing such a suspicion over the whole transaction that I cannot say that I am satisfied that he is free from all complicity with it. As a juror in the box, I would return the Scotch verdict of "not proven."

But, Mr. Speaker, there are other parties besides the Secretary of War connected with it. All persons who are intrusted by the Government with the execution of its laws, with places of trust and power, are responsible to the constituted authorities of the country, and to the people, for the integrity with which they discharge their several duties.

Now, I do believe that the proofs presented to this House by this committee are sufficient to satisfy the mind of any reasonable man that there was a fraudulent combination between the agents of the Government and the purchaser of the Fort Snelling reservation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this transaction cannot be examined fairly, the conduct of these parties cannot be investigated intelligently, without looking back a little, and seeing the springs and motives of human action, and the action of political parties.

Sir, you know, and this House knows, that for thirty years past this Government has been administered upon the principle that "to the victors belong the spoils," and that all the offices and emoluments of the Government are to be distributed as rewards for party services. You will view this transaction, then, from that stand-point. You will start there, and see what this transaction means. What follows? Having started out upon that maxim, as I said on a former occasion, you are all the time under an increasing necessity to increase your expenditures, and to multiply jobs, in order to enhance the value of the rewards that are to be dispensed for partisan services. I say that that is the natural and inevitable result of the principle upon which the Government is administered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is this case? The Government was the owner of some eight thousand acres of land at the junction of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers; as beautiful a spot, according to the evidence of all the witnesses, as the sun ever shone upon, and the best site in the whole Northwest for a great commercial metropolis of that growing region. They do say, it is true, in that connection, that perhaps it will not occupy this position in the future, because other cities have got the start of it. But that is its natural position; that is what its natural position would entitle it to claim. Well, sir, the question is as to the sale of this reservation, amounting, it is said, to some eight thousand acres; and it is marvelous that we do not know how much there is. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says, the Secretary of War sent an agent to Fort Snelling to survey the land and subdivide it, and yet that surveyor who went there does not know the number of acres. One would have supposed that the first thing he would do would be to run the exterior lines, and ascertain how much land there was there. But he came back; and we are now here discussing, as a controverted question of fact, the number of acres, and we differ to the extent of two thousand acres as to the actual number of acres contained in that reservation. That is a marvelous circumstance.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I understand Major Eastman to say that he had run the exterior boundaries, and there are about seven thousand five hundred acres.

Mr. STANTON. He says distinctly that he does not know the number.

Mr. FAULKNER. He says expressly that after the survey, he found there were seven thousand five hundred acres there, and the one thousand acres was irreclaimable swamp.

Mr. STANTON. He does not ascertain that by calculations. That is what I complain of. He makes his survey; and instead of making an estimate from that survey, he makes a guess, and comes, perhaps, within five hundred or one thousand acres of the whole amount.

[Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled the following bills; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1859;

An act to vest the title to a certain warrant for land, in George N. Gordon; and

An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes.]

Mr. STANTON. It is not strange that as settlement advanced beyond the locality of Fort Snelling, and it became probable that the Government would abandon it in a few years, persons in the neighborhood should have been looking to the time when it would be brought into market, and when they would have an opportunity to make investments in it; and accordingly you see that in the year 1856, Mr. Rice, in behalf of Mr. Steele, the present purchaser, applied to the Secretary of War to know whether it would be brought into market or not. The then Secretary of War, Mr. Davis, applied to his Quartermaster General, and took the advice of his subordinate, and in conformity with that advice, informed Mr. Rice that the reservation was not for sale. Acting upon the supposition that it was to be retained for some years, the Government spent about ten thousand dollars upon it, during the year 1856, for the purpose of repairs and of keeping it in a proper condition to be used for military purposes.

Well, sir, on the 4th of March, 1857, this provision authorizing the sale was put into a general appropriation bill. It then became the duty of the Secretary of War to manage and control the sales, to prescribe the mode of the sale, and to appoint the agents by whom it was to be conducted.

Now, sir, my own judgment, looking to the whole matter, is, that the Secretary of War has entirely misjudged the capacity and qualifications of the agents that he appointed to sell this property; and he has done so for the reason that he has acted upon the principle that these, as well as all the other offices of the Government, were mere spoils, to be distributed for the benefit of political partisans; and hence he called up his old quondam friend, Mr. Heiskell, from the State of Virginia, to go into Minnesota to make this sale.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what were the evident considerations that operated upon the mind of the Secretary to induce him to make this selection? You know, sir, and every gentleman here knows, that it was not because he regarded him as the best qualified by a knowledge of the value of lands in that locality, by experience in business of this description, or by his general intelligence upon matters of this character. It was not for that reason that he was selected. But you find, from the testimony of Mr. Heiskell himself, that he was selected because he had gone through a political campaign with the Secretary of War; they had fought that campaign together; they had been ancient cronies in Virginia; and, according to Mr. Heiskell's own statement, he was expecting, at the hands of the Secretary, on the first opportunity, as a reward for his partisan services, some office—and no trifling one at that—which he regarded as due from the Secretary for personal and political considerations. "I do not want," said he, "any twopenny office; I do not want any small sixpenny office; I want something that will pay about four or five thousand dollars." Well, the Secretary writes to him that he has not got anything of that magnitude just at the present writing; but in the course of a little time the Secretary writes to him that he has these forts for sale, and that he can have that job.

Now, do not you see, Mr. Speaker—does not every member here see—that the Secretary has started from a wrong stand-point in the selection of an agent to make this sale? He consulted his personal friendships, his political relations, and all the influences which personal and political associations bring to bear upon him, instead of having only regard to the qualifications of the man selected by him for this important trust. Is not that so?

There are some other extraordinary circumstances about this matter, but I do not propose to go into any details. I find that Dr. Graham of Virginia, an intimate acquaintance of the Secretary of War, calls on him and proposes to go West to make investments.

As has already been said, I do not know what he had to invest. It seems that he did not invest anything except his personal services to manage property. But, sir, at the same time the Secretary was appointing Mr. Heiskell as agent of the Government to sell the Fort Snelling reservation, he was appointing John C. Mather, of New York, as agent to sell Fort Ripley—a very prudent and economical arrangement upon the part of Mr. Mather, while he was going West to purchase this property, to get the appointment to sell another reservation, and, with his eight dollars per day and mileage, to pay expenses. But you will bear in mind that the gentleman who conducted that sale was a political friend of the President, and a political and personal friend of the Secretary of War; and when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] undertakes to charge us with being influenced with party considerations in this matter, I do not allude to it for the purpose of awakening party prejudice, but as a circumstance from which you may infer that there has been some other motive than a single eye to the public good. Sir, I claim, at the hands of this House, credit for sincerity when I say that I shall endeavor to discharge my duty, as far as I can, without being influenced by party considerations. Gentlemen will remember that in the last Congress I did not allow party considerations to govern my conduct when my own political friends were arraigned before this House; and they will remember that, during the present session I have not, in the discharge of my duty as a member of a somewhat similar committee, sought to protect my political friends from exposure or condemnation. I therefore claim the right to speak when I believe that political opponents have been guilty of frauds upon the Government; to speak out fairly and fully, without having an imputation cast upon my sincerity. I admit that I am subject to party influences and party prejudices which operate upon other men.

But, Mr. Speaker, here are Mather, Schell, and Dr. Graham; two of them go out there substantially and practically in company with Mr. Heiskell. One may have gone a day before, or a week before, the other; but, for all practical purposes, they went out together. They went there about the same time; they were together there, and conversed about these matters. They remained there about the same length of time.

Now, sir, I pray you, what sort of service did Dr. Graham render for this $5,000 a year? Mr. Steele lived there, and understood the management of such property certainly much better than Dr. Graham. And what sort of service could Dr. Graham bring to bear to earn this $5,000 a year? It passes my comprehension entirely, if this whole transaction was fair and aboveboard.

Well, sir, these parties met there. Fort Snelling was to be sold in such manner as the commissioners should prescribe, at public sale or at private sale. If they intended to make a private sale, they ought to have had one of two objects in view: either to secure the largest amount of purchase-money to the Government, or to sell it in such a manner as would aid the largest number of people who might desire to be engaged in the purchase.

Now, sir, I hold that the first thing to be considered in such a sale is, the settlement of the public domain; and that, if the Government has a fixed price for it, the largest number of people who will cultivate it with their own hands should be permitted to become purchasers. I would not sell eight or ten thousand acres to any man, for him to cut up and make a speculation on. If there was a speculation in it, I would extend it to as many hardy sons of toil as possible, and give each one his share in the speculation, if they gave the Government price for it. I say these commissioners should have disposed of it at public sale, and distributed it among actual settlers, or they should have sold it to the man who would give the most money for it, and they should have taken the means to ascertain who would give the most for it. I say, therefore, that, as shrewd and sagacious agents of the Government, if the object had been to effect the sale on the best terms, the commissioners would not have withheld all knowledge of the fact that the property was for sale from every one except Franklin Steele. That is a circumstance to my mind totally incapable of explanation. There is no sane man, there is no man out of a lunatic asylum, in this Union, who would manage the sale of property in that way. If my friend from Virginia wanted to sell his farm, he would not go to his neighbor, and immediately tell him, "I will take so much for my farm," without inquiring whether he could not get $1,000 more from somebody else.

Now, sir, I pray you, why was it not given out in speech, if the gentleman could not publish it in the newspapers? Why was it concealed from everybody at Fort Snelling and St. Paul and in all that neighborhood, that these gentlemen had the Fort Snelling reservation for sale, either in subdivisions or in the aggregate to whoever would give the highest amount of purchase money? Why was not that done? I tell you the fact that that question cannot be answered stamps the transaction as fraudulent. There is no help for it; there is no escape from it; there is no answer for it, consistent with common honesty. There is no man who has read this evidence who does not know what the real reason was. John C. Mather, a citizen of New York, now occupying a position as Senator of that State and had before held an official position in the State; Richard Schell, a brother of the collector of New York, a man of great political influence, and in the possession of large funds; and another gentleman, a prominent politician, residing at Lexington, Virginia—these were to be favored, and that is why, sir, I say the testimony makes that impression upon the mind of every man. Now, sir, that in my judgment, is enough to condemn this sale. It ought to be set aside for collusion between the agents of the Government and the purchasers. Sir, it is a pretext—I do not mean it in any offensive sense—but I say it is a mere pretext that Franklin Steele was entitled to purchase this property, because he lived upon it.

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Graw] has said, Mr. McKenzie had a larger interest in that reservation than Mr. Steele had. If that was the consideration, then there were others who had claims upon them for preference. You cannot get rid of that by saying that Mr. Steele had said that he had made an arrangement to buy that interest. Look at the testimony of Mr. Heiskell. Look at the testimony of Mr. Rice. What do they say about it? That Mr. Heiskell, Mr. Steele, Mr. Rice, as agents of Mr. McKenzie, discussed the question of the latter's interest. They met for the purpose of discussing it, and they quarreled over it. They called each other hard names. The dispute waxed warm. Thereupon Mr. Rice and Mr. Steele retired apart, where they had a private conversation about how this thing should be fixed up. Mr. Steele then agreed to give Mr. McKenzie $15,000 for his interest or improvements.

There is another thing. If these commissioners intended to act up to the spirit and letter of the preemption law in this case, Mr. Steele had no right to have more than one hundred and sixty acres. They gave him the exclusive right to purchase some eight thousand acres. There was no reason for giving this preference to Mr. Steele. I do not care, for the purposes of my argument, whether Mr. Steele gave full value for the property or not. The only view in which the value of it is essentially important is, that it is a circumstance to show the fraud; that is all. But, sir, the real question here is, whether, in the administration of the Government, you will justify public functionaries, in using the trust reposed in them by the people, to exclude those who differ from them in political opinion from any of the benefits of the public land? I should be glad to know if some Black Republican, as the gentleman from Minnesota gracefully styles the members upon this side, who was willing to give $100,000 for that land, was not entitled to it? Why should not Mr. Heiskell and Mr. Eastman sell it to a Black Republican for $100,000? That was not a part of the programme. Let it be agreed, for the purposes of the argument, that it is admissible; that you may make a secret sale; that sellers and purchasers may combine for the purpose of throwing immense speculations into the hands of political partisans: I would be glad to know if the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House will be content to acquiesce in personal discriminations made among themselves; and that a few favored specimens of Democracy, such as Mr. Mather, Mr. Steele, and Dr. Graham, shall have the pick of speculations of this sort to the exclusion of the Democracy of the Northwest? Is not that thing worth thinking about?

There is a fact which has been adverted to, which bears harder upon the Secretary of War than any other, perhaps, in the case, and it ought not to be omitted. That is, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] and an ex-member of Congress from Vermont, early in April, wrote to the Secretary of War to know whether Fort Snelling was for sale, and if so, when and how? No answer was received to any one of these letters.

Mr. FAULKNER. Where does the gentleman get that fact? According to the Secretary of War, the answers were sent.

Mr. STANTON. But they were never received, and no copies of them seem to be kept in the War Department. I understand it to be one of the fixed rules of the Departments of Government, that a copy of every official letter shall be preserved. But there is no such thing in the War Department as copies of these answers.

Mr. FAULKNER. Permit me to state a fact. The answer was directed by the Secretary of War to be made by his chief clerk, and upon all those original letters, there is an indorsement, in the hand-writing of the clerk, that they were answered. Now, we have no complaint from any source, and the gentleman is without any authority in stating that answers were not received by all the parties, except the honorable member from Illinois, [Mr. SMITH.] He did not receive his answer. Why it was, we do not know. But there is no proof, no allegation, that the answers were not received by the other parties to whom letters were sent.

Mr. STANTON. I accept the gentleman's statement, and it is with something to the Secretary of War in this view, that he handed the letters to his chief clerk and directed him to answer them, which, I take it from the facts in the case, he did not do. It may be that the Secretary supposed that he did answer them. Let him have that credit. But the idea that two letters to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] should have miscarried—

Mr. BURNETT. He got one of them.

Mr. STANTON. Here is property of the description I have mentioned. I have no doubt that in twenty-five years there will be twenty-five thousand inhabitants upon that reserve, and that it will be worth millions of dollars. I have no doubt that there is an immense speculation in it. No other reason can be urged why these gentlemen should be so exceedingly desirous to purchase it; and there is no earthly excuse for the manner in which that sale was made. It is not enough for gentlemen to tell me that the sale at public auction may be defeated by combination. I know very well that the residue of Fort Snelling was sold under orders and rules prescribed by the laws and regulations of the General Land Office. The proof is, I believe, that there were two settlers upon every quarter section of it, and of course it was sold subject to the preemption law.

Mr. FAULKNER. There were upwards of five thousand acres sold at public auction in the Stillwater district, and not an acre produced more than $1 25 an acre, and no part of it was preempted.

Mr. STANTON. That is the general rule. I have no doubt that, if lands are set up at public auction in the West, without any guards to protect the Government against combinations, that generally they would be sold at the minimum price. I think that is the probability. But does not the gentleman from Virginia know that there is a long distance between such a sale as that and a secret sale, studiously, laboriously, and successfully concealed from the world? That is the point I make. You might have sold it at public auction, fixing the minimum price or reserving a bid to the officer of the Government; there could have been no difficulty about that. You might have sold it according to the precedent set by Judge Burchard in the sale of the reservation at Chicago, by receiving written bids, so that there could be no favoritism.

Mr. Speaker, if this sale was an honest sale; if the Government got all that this land is worth; if there was no fraudulent purpose in making it in the manner they did, still it is a description of sale which is so exceedingly liable to abuse, which is so liable to result in party favoritism and fraud, that it ought not to be tolerated for a moment. Gentlemen here do not pretend that it is a wholesome practice. They say they would not recommend such a sale as that. Then, I pray you, why not hold it as it is upon its face, fraudulent, and set it aside?

Mr. Speaker, if I had this purchase on trial before an honest jury of twelve farmers in any State of the Union, I would get a verdict of fraud, as to this sale, and the judgment of the court that it was void. I have no doubt of it. My experience as a lawyer for twenty-four years, has always satisfied me that whenever there is a case presented, there are always some leading ear-marks about it which indicate unmistakably its true character. You always know whether a transaction is honest or dishonest from its leading features, from the facts which stand out boldly on the face of the transaction; and I tell you that this sale has all the marks of favoritism and all the marks of fraud that can be found in any case that was ever investigated in any court in Christendom. It was sold by political partisans to political partisans. It was sold in secret. It was sold by an agent of the Government appointed to make one sale to an agent of the Government appointed to make another sale. It was sold by special friends, who received their appointment as a reward for party fidelity and party friendship. It has all those marks of fraud which stamp it, in my judgment, with infamy, and this House ought to rescind it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with attention, I must say with some surprise and great regret, to the remarks of the gentleman upon the other side of the House upon this question. It is a remarkable fact that all of their speeches to-day manifest that they have not regarded the testimony. Detached portions of it have been culled by them, and repeated here.

Whether intentional or not, it has the effect of making a false impression upon the country.

And here, sir, in the offset, I must congratulate the House upon the fact that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON], the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. GROW], and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES], have become conservators of the public morals; that they are now keen to detect wrong and expose fraud and corruption; for it will be recollected that during the last Congress—I dislike to refer to the past, but the bad spirit which animated these gentlemen in their remarks to-day justifies the reference. I say it will be recollected, for it is not so long as to be forgotten, that when fraud and corruption were charged in this body last Congress, the investigation proved these grave and odious crimes to rest on none other than members of the gentlemen's own party. I can account for the zeal of the gentlemen now, and attribute it to that motive of human action which teaches misery to love company. I tell them, however, that they had better direct their zeal to some just object of official scrutiny, and not engage in the vain endeavor to detect something in this transaction justifying their indignant and virtuous clamor.

Let us, Mr. Speaker, refer to the history of this sale, so far as the Secretary of War is connected with it. I am willing to rest the case upon that history, and appeal to the judgment of every candid man, I care not to what party he belongs if he will discard party prejudice, if there is anything in the conduct of the Secretary of War in it, separated from that of every other party to it, which will justify the least breath of suspicion affecting his integrity as a public agent, or his honor as a private citizen? There is nothing in the testimony which can be tortured, by any mode of inference, remote or direct, into the least degree of anything that is wrong in the official action of that distinguished functionary. Let us look at the authority under which he acted. The act of 1819 authorized the Secretary of War to sell such of the military sites as had become useless for military purposes. The Attorney General decided that his right to sell was limited under the law to sites acquired previous to its enactment. On the 3d of March, 1857, Congress passed a law extending the act of 1819 to such sites as had since become useless, or might thereafter become so. The discretion, then, was clearly vested in him, of determining when they became useless, and of selling them when they did. One of the very objects of the act of 1857, was to effect the sale of this very Fort Snelling site.

By a reference to the evidence of Mr. Rice, who was then the Delegate from Minnesota, he introduced a special bill for the sale of Fort Snelling. He consulted with those favorable to the measure, and it was deemed best to put a general provision in an appropriation bill, which would provide for the sale of all military sites which were useless, which general provision would embrace Fort Snelling. Fort Snelling had then become worthless for military purposes; its sale was then deemed due to a just regard for the public interests, and that sale was one of the very objects of the act of 1857. It is, then, clear that the Secretary of War was vested with the authority of determining when a military site became useless for military purposes, and of selling it when he had so determined.

Gentlemen endeavor to throw some suspicion upon the manner in which this official judgment vested in him by law was exercised, and to discredit the idea of their judgment being properly and legitimately used in this transaction, by insinuating that combinations existed between Graham, Mather, the commissioner, the Secretary of War, and everybody else who acted either as seller, commissioner, or purchaser in this transaction. I will here say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES], that if he has any sense of justice, he ought to strike from his speech that portion of it where he says that it was determined by the Secretary of War, on consultation with Mather, and after conversation with Eastman, that this sale was to take place.

This charge was also made by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL], while the fact is shown by the record, clearly and conclusively, that he had determined to sell it before he had an interview with either of them. Why did he determine to sell it? He did so because he had been authorized, by the act of 3d March, 1857, to sell all military sites useless for military purposes, and he had determined Fort Snelling to be one of that character. His attention had been clearly directed to it by the history of the legislation on the subject. He gave the matter his consideration; and, exercising the discretion vested in him under the law, made the sale. Other gentlemen have gone on and made a statement as to the interview between Dr. Graham and the Secretary of War, and that between Mr. Heiskell and that functionary. The character of these interviews justifies none of their insinuated suspicions; indeed, they are hardly worth alluding to in the discussion of this subject. I desire to direct the attention of gentlemen on the other side to Major Eastman's testimony. He says that in the beginning of April the Secretary of War gave him instructions to go to the site and survey it, and that he would send an agent there to sell it.

It is, then, clear that the Secretary of War had determined to make this sale before any interview was had between him and any other person. It is shown by the record of this case, from the beginning to the end.

What else? While I must do the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] the credit of saying (because, as a general thing, I believe) that he is the fairest man among the Opposition upon this floor, I was the more surprised at the qualifications with which he accompanied the statement of his belief that fraud was not proved upon the Secretary of War in this transaction. He did not, with his usual boldness, march up like a man and say even that he believed there was fraud, and that the Secretary of War was a party to it, but he leaves the country to infer the truth of the charges of fraud, by saying that, if upon a jury, he would feel bound to bring in a Scotch verdict of "not proven."

This is an unfair way of dealing with this question. It leaves an inference which no candid mind will, on an examination of the testimony, concede that it justifies.

Let us now look at the instructions given by the Secretary of War to these agents; and I ask if there is a man in this country who could have guarded the interests of the country more securely than he has in this sale? Those instructions were of the fullest nature, and provided all the safeguards necessary to protect the public interest against combinations in the Territory and against collusion, on the part of the agents, with the purchasers. By those instructions, what were those commissioners to do? They were to cut up and divide that reservation into forty-acre lots, and to sell it either in whole or in part, after public advertisement, or by private sale. It directs, furthermore, in accordance with the suggestions of the former distinguished Secretary of War, (Jefferson Davis,) and of the Quartermaster General, General Jesup, that they shall not sell it below a certain minimum price. The Secretary tells them to ascertain whether there are parties living on the reserve who are equally entitled to a preemption right; and whether improvements have been placed there by the authority of the Government. He further instructs them to ascertain the value of the public improvements upon it, and whether the reserve is longer needed for military purposes. This is the substance of the instructions; and I appeal to the fairness of gentlemen upon the Republican side of the Chamber to say whether those instructions of the Secretary of War did not embrace everything that a sagacious and prudent statesman would have suggested to guard the interests of the Government? Was there anything left undone in those instructions that he ought to have done? I cannot for my life see that a single thing was omitted.

Such is the history of the connection of the Secretary of War with the sale previous to its disposal. If gentlemen will read the report of the commissioners, they will find that every aspect of the Secretary of War's instructions was noticed by them and regarded. The Secretary received their report on the 17th of June; and submitted it to the President on the same day. It was approved by the President on the same day; and afterwards, on the 2d day of July, he confirms the sale.

This is the entire history of the connection of the Secretary of War with the matter; and I ask, is there a single fact elicited which has not been detailed by me? I appeal to the House, if there is anything in all this, so far as that distinguished functionary of the Government is concerned, upon which you can say that he has been guilty of fraud, corruption, or want of sagacity in the discharge of his duties? In my judgment there is nothing.

Now, sir, let it not be understood that I charge gentlemen with motives which they do not avow. The members who made this majority report have been polite and courteous to me during all of our intercourse upon this investigation. I speak of the gentlemen from Vermont and Indiana, [Mr. MORRILL and Mr. PETTIT.] They will bear me witness that there never was an investigation made in connection with this Government, more searching in its character than that of this select committee. I went upon it with impressions upon my mind unfavorable to that sale; and why? On account of the publications which had been made in the partisan newspapers of the country, I was impressed with the belief that there was something wrong about it. I determined, as a member of the committee, to make a searching and rigid investigation of all the facts; and the gentlemen making the majority report will bear me witness that my colleague [Mr. FAULKNER] and myself allowed them to take their own course in the investigation, without asking the least restriction of their very extensive license. They went into the affairs of the witnesses themselves, and into matters which had nothing to do with the subject of investigation; but we did not demur to it. We interposed no objection, but left them free to pursue their own wishes.

Let me, then, tell the gentlemen who made the majority report why I complain of it. I understood them as agreeing with the entire committee that there was nothing in the transaction which showed fraud and corruption, or want of integrity, in that officer. But those gentlemen had not, I like to have said, the manliness to make the charge openly; anyhow, they did not, for some cause, I know not what, do it in their report; but they insinuate it under the guise of a grave official error.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not suppose the gentleman from Kentucky intends to do us any injustice, and I wish to recall to his mind precisely the position which we occupied. It was this: that the private character of the Secretary of War was not on trial; that it was his public act which was on trial; and when this particular matter was discussed in committee, the gentleman will remember that my words were:

"While I do not think that any of the money has gone into the pocket of the Secretary, yet I do think he was guilty of gross personal and political partiality in the sale."

Mr. BURNETT. You did not come up and make the charge of fraud, because that is a specific accusation which could have been met, and that we were prepared to meet and refute. Yet, by innuendo and insinuation, the majority charge that there was collusion between the commissioners and the purchasers, and by inference rest a charge upon the Secretary of War that he was a party to it. If these gentlemen had believed that the Secretary of War was guilty of any conduct which showed a want of integrity upon his part, or that he had been guilty of any official conduct which did not become him as an executive officer of this Government, they ought to have said so. Instead of doing that, their report is characterized by a diversion upon collateral facts; and in some instances they mistook the testimony—not intentionally, I trust—and they parade before this House and the country such matters as that Mr. Commissioner Heiskell said that "he had been a hard student of newspapers," and also a conversation between Heiskell and Secretary Floyd, all for the purpose of converting the familiar conversations between the Secretary and the commissioner, who was his old and tried friend, into a means of creating a suspicion that something, not exactly right, was at the bottom of this social intercourse.

Mr. PETTIT. With the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky, I desire to say a word.

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly, if I have done the gentleman injustice. I do not want to do any gentleman injustice.

Mr. PETTIT. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] also referred to improper quotations of the testimony. I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will indicate wherein improper quotations have been made.

Mr. BURNETT. I will say to the gentleman that here are three gross misquotations of the testimony. I have not time to stop to go into that matter now, however.

But I want to call attention to another fact connected with this report. After making these statements, instead of taking up the matters which we were charged to investigate by the resolution of the House, there is an evident attempt, on the part of the majority, to mislead the public mind from the acts of the officers charged with this sale, and the conduct of the Secretary of War in connection with it, by bringing into their report the actions of the purchasers of the property; and they not only do that, but they undertake to connect the Secretary of War with the conduct of witnesses who have testified in this case. Now, if there had been anything improper on the part of the Secretary of War; if he had been guilty of any act, in his connection with this matter, that stamped his conduct as an officer with fraud or corruption of any sort, the gentlemen ought to have made the charge specifically, so that the House and the country might have known what it was.

It will be impossible for me, Mr. Speaker, in the course of one hour, to notice all the matters involved in this investigation; but I want to call the attention of the House to the reasons which controlled the agents of the Government in making the sale in the manner in which it was made, and I think if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] will give me his attention, he will see that so far as the interests of the public Treasury were concerned, the mode of sale adopted by those agents was the only one by which anything could be realized. If you will examine the evidence of Mr. Rice, now a Senator from the State of Minnesota; of Mr. Becker, who was elected to a seat upon this floor, and of other witnesses, you will find that they prove that there is a systematic organization in the neighborhood of this site, formed for the express purpose of preventing any lands owned by the Government being sold for more than the minimum price of $1 25 an acre. This fact is fully established by the testimony of those gentlemen, and refutes the idea that at a public sale the property would have brought as much as it did. Another fact justifying this mode of sale is this: gentlemen can find not one single instance in the whole history of land sales by this Government where they have sold for as good a price as this, except in the case of the sale made by Judge Burchard, I believe, within the corporate limits of the city of Chicago, where the immense value of town lots in so growing a city necessarily appreciated greatly the value of the property, and where the large competition for city lots prevents combination. The evidence discloses the fact that in all other sales of military reservations made by the Government, there have always been combinations which prevented a fair price being obtained.

If you will raise a committee, and make an investigation in regard to a former sale of a portion of this reservation, I think you would discover some facts which will disclose the results of these combinations to which I have alluded, and indorse the action of the agents of the Government in making this sale.

In 1852, this reservation was reduced, and immediately afterwards it was understood that some twenty-odd thousand acres of the land were to be sold. A combination was then formed by which that land was to be bought up at $1 25 an acre. But they did not stop at that; they went upon the lands on the east side of the river, and squatted; there were as many as two claims upon every quarter section, and these men agreed among themselves that they were to buy that land and hold it, and that certain individuals were to bid it off at $1 25 an acre. An act of Congress was afterwards passed, giving settlers the right to preëmpt on the east side of the river, and they took that land at $1 25 an acre, under the preëmption laws. But there were still five thousand acres of this land unsold, in what is known as the Stillwater district. I want the House to bear in mind that, according to the testimony, there was upon that land perhaps the best water power in the Union, and it included what is now the city of Minneapolis.

Now, sir, how was that land sold? It was sold at public auction. There was no charge of corruption or fraud on the part of the agents who sold it; and how was it sold? The proof in this record shows—I speak from the record and intend to confine myself to it—that the beneficiaries of this sale made contracts with the parties upon the land, in direct and express violation of law; they made contracts as to who were to bid that land off, and by which the parties were to have the benefit of their preëmptions, and the claim was proved up and they got possession of the land, having purchased the preëmptors' claim before the sale was made. That land is situated, as I have said before, in the Stillwater district, and includes a valuable water power, and what is now a portion of the town of Minneapolis.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. The lands in Minneapolis were sold at the Minneapolis land office. The lands on the east side of the river were sold at Stillwater. I was not there at the time, but I am conversant with the facts.

Mr. BURNETT. Some of these lands were worth $1,000 an acre, and some selling for $6,000 and $10,000 an acre, whilst, by a combination between the parties, when sold at public auction, the Government received for it but $1 25 an acre. This fact shows the wisdom of the course in resorting to private instead of public sale in disposing of the balance of the reserve. I wish to say that I agree with my colleague on the committee, [Mr. FAULKNER,] in his report, in disapproving of sales of this character. I hold that as a general rule, the lands of the General Government ought to be sold in such a manner and in such quantities as to afford to every man a fair chance of buying them. But there is everything in this transaction that would make it a just exception to such a rule.

Now, let us look at it, and see whether the commissioners acted wisely and discreetly, under the circumstances, in selling the lands in the manner they did. The gentleman from Indiana says, in his majority report, that Mr. Heiskell did not understand the preëmption laws, did not understand the laws under which he was acting, and thought that Steele was entitled to a thousand acres of land.

Now, I say to the gentleman that there is not one particle of testimony in this record to support any such assertion, and they do injustice to Mr. Heiskell in this, as in another quotation from the testimony. He says, in his testimony, that Steele was not legally entitled to preëmption, and that McKenzie had no legal right to preëmption. He places it upon the ground that these men, having gone there and made valuable improvements with the permission and under the authority of the Government, were equitably entitled to preëmption rights, and that such rights ought to be allowed them; and so say I. Because of this sound opinion Mr. Heiskell is held up to the public scrutiny as a man who did not know what he was about.

Well, now, sir, let us look at the qualifications of Mr. Heiskell. He was not an ignorant man. It is true, he had been "a hard student of the newspapers;" but, sir, if some gentlemen on this floor had studied the newspapers a little more, they might know more.

Mr. PETTIT. Will the gentleman allow me to refer him to the evidence?

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman will have his hour hereafter.

Mr. PETTIT. I only wish to refer the gentleman to the evidence now to give him an opportunity to reply to it.

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir; I cannot yield. I say there is no man in this House who will take the evidence and read it, who will not find a satisfactory reason given by Mr. Heiskell for his conduct in this sale. When he is asked why he disposed of the property at private sale, what reason does he give? Why, sir, that nearly all public property which has been disposed of at public auction has been sold at a very low rate, in consequence of combinations formed; that not many years before, when a reduction of this reservation took place, the most valuable part of it was sold at public auction for $1 25 per acre; that according to all precedent, as soon as the fact had been made public that the reservation was to be brought into market, men would have gone on it and squatted, and then would have procured the passage of an act by Congress allowing them preëmption rights. He knew that an organization existed there for the purpose of preventing the lands of the Government from being sold at more than $1 25 per acre. He tells you that citizens of Minnesota, along the river, in the hotels, and everywhere, said that there were combinations formed. Mr. Rice, a gentleman of high standing and character, in whom the people of Minnesota have reposed their confidence by electing him to the United States Senate, told him there were combinations already formed; that if the land was exposed to public sale there would be combinations which would prevent it bringing more than $1 25 per acre. Mr. Heiskell tells you that he was told by the Secretary of War to get a good price for the property, and that he went there with a determination to do it.

These were the just reasons which operated upon this unjustly abused commissioner; and now I ask the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT,] with this testimony before him, with the history of all the land sales of this country, with the precedent of the sale of the most valuable portion of this very reservation only a very few years ago at public auction for only $1 25 an acre, was Mr. Heiskell not justified in the course he pursued? What do the witnesses say upon the point? They all concur in telling you that this reservation was sold for a better price than any on record, with the single exception of the small one in the city of Chicago, sold by Judge Burchard, to which I have already referred. These, sir, were the motives which operated upon the commissioner to sell this land at private sale.

But, sir, the gentleman states in the report that Major Eastman did not know the difference between a private and a public sale. Here is another case in which he does not quote the evidence correctly. In answer to the interrogatory why he did not advertise this property, he replied, that if he had advertised it, it would not have been a private sale—an answer that any sensible man would have given.

There is another matter to which I desire to call the gentleman's attention, though I will not enter into discussion with regard to it. The gentleman speaks of the character of Dr. Graham, of Mr. Mather, and of Mr. Steele. I have no personal acquaintance with any of those gentlemen, except that made during this investigation; but I believe they are all esteemed by their own neighbors. Mr. Mather has held distinguished official positions in the State of New York; Dr. Graham has occupied a high official position—I believe that of commissioner of public works in Virginia; Mr. Steele has been regarded as one of Minnesota's best citizens. They are all gentlemen of high respectability, and it is not my purpose, nor is it necessary for me, to enter into any defense of them; nor has it anything whatever to do with the question which this House has under consideration.

But let us look at another part of this transaction. The majority report takes the position that the contingency under which the Secretary of War was authorized to make sale of the reservation had not arisen; that it was longer needed for military purposes. Upon this point I take issue with them. They undertake to show that it was longer needed, by stating that the Secretary of War still occupies it with troops. I have already shown that he had the legal discretion vested in him to sell it under the law.

The gentleman contrasts in connection with this matter the opinion of Colonel Davis and General Jesup, with those of Secretary Floyd. Sir, the gentleman does not do justice to the present Secretary by the quotation he makes. General Jesup basis his opinion that Fort Snelling ought not be sold upon a peculiar view of the military policy of the Government. He says, that if it is the policy of the Government to collect troops in large numbers at interior posts and send them to the frontier as they are wanted, that Fort Snelling ought to have been retained, and that he thinks this policy would have a better effect upon the Indian tribes. The policy of the Government had been directly the reverse. The policy had been to establish military posts upon the frontier. General Davis recommended the retention of Fort Snelling in the event of the policy being adopted to collect large bodies of troops at particular points, to be thence distributed to the frontier as occasion might demand. General Jesup says that if that is not to be the course of the Government, then Fort Snelling can only be valuable as a military depot, and for that purpose only one hundred and fifty acres, with the improvements, would be needed. His opinion is made with so many qualifications, that as testimony it is not worth a jot against the validity of this sale; but anyhow it proves, that under the settled military policy of the country, it was useless.

Mr. Speaker, where is Fort Snelling? This everybody can answer for himself. The gentleman from Minnesota says that standing upon that reservation one can look upon the smoke curling from the chimney tops of the dwellings of twenty thousand people. The whole proof in the case shows that the fort is at the center of population in the Territory. And, sir, there is but one single military man, Major Martin, who is of opinion that it is now required for military defense. The concurrent testimony of Army officers is, that as a post of defense, it is useless. Its retention for military purposes is limited by all of them to the idea of a depot of supplies. Look at Fort Ripley, which is far beyond towards the frontier. That was abandoned as a military post until last summer, when troops were stationed there to operate against the hostilities of Ink-pa-du-tah's band. There was a post at Fort Ridgely, one hundred miles beyond. These gentlemen, however, insist that Fort Snelling should be retained as a depot to supply the two forts upon the frontier which I have just mentioned. The testimony is that never at any time have either of them been supplied from Fort Snelling. Captain Thom, when questioned in the matter, makes a statement of his belief that they had been supplied from Fort Snelling. If the majority, when making their report, had looked a little further they would have seen that when I interrogated him he stated that he had no knowledge of those forts being supplied from Fort Snelling. Colonel Lee, who was commandant at the fort, said that no such supplies were sent to Fort Ripley, or Fort Ridgely, at any time between 1851 and 1854.

After all, this is a question of economy: shall the Government retain this property at an annual cost of many thousands of dollars for the purpose of transshipping supplies? Is it the better and more prudent course to make but one shipment from the sources of supply? Shall the Government remove supplies from the St. Louis posts to the storehouses of Fort Snelling, and then ship them again for forts upon the frontier? Is that economical when they can be directly shipped to those posts? It is a question which appeals to the common sense of every man; it requires no military skill to determine it; it is purely a commercial one, and I would rather have the opinion of a shrewd business man in the premises than the opinion of all the military men in the country.

Let us look at the question in another point of view. The officers at Fort Snelling were opposed to the sale and it was natural that they should be. They had a beautiful place of residence, they had the most comfortable quarters, and a superabundance of stores for their subsistence. There they were living upon the fat of the land, without anything under God's heaven to do. Society was near at hand in a city populous, and furnishing all the luxuries of life. They of course did not want to surrender such quarters and such comforts for the hardships and trials of a frontier station. That is the secret of the whole affair, and I will venture to say that it is the secret of every remonstrance made against the sale of the military reservations heretofore.

We have in addition to the testimony taken by the committee, the report of a board of the most distinguished officers in the country, of whom General Harney was the president. These men answer all the points, in favor of the view that this reservation was no longer needed for the military purposes of the Government.

Then I would ask members, upon all sides, whether, with all these facts before them, the contingency did not arise in which the Secretary of War was authorized to sell this reservation? If it was no longer needed as a post of military defense, then the Secretary of War, under the law, had the control of its disposal; and if, in compliance with the demands of his duty, he did cause its sale, can any action of this House invalidate or set aside that sale? It was purely an executive act. The Secretary of War had the power conferred upon him to do what he has done. The sale was made. Have we the right to set it aside? If there is any question about it, it is purely a judicial question.

Mr. Speaker, I have called the attention of the House to this sale from its inception to its perfection. I have shown the reasons why the Government made the sale in the manner in which it was made. I have shown that the contingency had arrived in which the Secretary of War was vested with discretionary power to make the sale.

The next question is, was the price adequate? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] says that it was not. On this subject there is a difference of opinion. It is shown that it is the best sale of a military reservation ever made, save and except the one in Chicago, to which I have already referred. Was the price fair and adequate? I do not regard this as a question of importance, but I wish to show that this transaction, stripped of everything that does not properly attach to it, has nothing in it to which blame can be ascribed by any man. The witnesses who speak as to the value of the property differ; but when we go to what those say who are most familiar with it, we find that they testify that the Government got all that it was worth, if not more.

What is the testimony of those seven gentlemen from St. Paul, referred to by the gentleman from Vermont? They all tell you that they know this land, and have known it for years; and that it sold for more money than it was worth, and for more than the purchaser can now get for it. What does Mr. Rice tell you? He is a man who knows the property well. He tells you he has land lying alongside of it which he offered for ten dollars an acre, and that he could not get that.

What else does this testimony show? The great majority of the witnesses express the opinion that these purchasers could not sell that reservation for the money they agreed to pay for it. Now let us look at the equitable right which these parties had to become the purchasers. The commissioners say they had no legal right of preemption. So say I. But had they an equitable right? Mr. Steele went on the reservation twenty years ago, as the sutler of the Army. He made his improvements there, as the testimony shows, by the authority of the Government, by the authority of the commanding officer at the post. What else is shown? That McKenzie also made his improvements there by the authority of the Government; that these ferry-houses were erected, and these ferries established there, by its express authority.

Now the question is this: whether, when the Government comes to sell this reservation, these parties who have thus made their improvements under its authority were not equitably entitled to protection, and whether, if they do not become the purchasers, the Government would not have become equitably bound to compensate them for their improvements? No man who speaks of these improvements puts them at less than $30,000. The gentleman from Indiana, in his report, says that Mr. Heiskell speaks of them as worth $50,000. Now, he is again mistaken. My friends ought to adopt the Christian maxim of forgiving those who speak evil of them; and ought not to bear malice. Mr. Heiskell merely stated it as his opinion that if they had sold this land, and denied to Steele the right to buy, and if he had come before Congress, his Republican friends would have voted him $50,000 for his improvements.

Mr. CLAY. I would like to know whether any act of Congress gave authority to this sutler to put these buildings there?

Mr. BURNETT. By act of Congress, this reservation is set apart for military purposes. The Secretary of War had the power to give authority for the erection of these buildings, and their erection was authorized by the commanding officer. Some of them were necessary, to enable the sutler properly to discharge his duty as sutler of the post.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand my colleague to say that the commanding officer of a military post has a right to grant a preemption right to a sutler?

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir: I do not take any such position; but I say that where the subordinates of the Government, with the consent of the Secretary of War, authorize A, B, or C, engaged in discharging official duties at the point, to build a house on a military reservation belonging to this Government, when you come to sell the land and deprive the man of the value of his improvements, he has the equitable and just right to be compensated for them.

The value of the improvements, added to the price paid for the land, makes the cost $120,000. A portion of the property has been sold, the gentleman from Indiana says, at the rate of $180,000. Now, sir, Mr. Steele speaks, I believe, of building warehouses, and of grading, &c., to the amount of between fourteen and fifteen thousand dollars. Is there anything, then, made in the profit which should startle the country, or make gentlemen hold up their hands in holy horror and talk about fraud and collusion? Both Judge DOUGLAS and Mr. STUART, the Senator from Michigan, unite with the weight of testimony and say the amount paid for the land was adequate; and those who know the land best, say that it is sold for more than it is worth.

In addition to the number of witnesses who say that the property sold for its full value, we have the statement of three hundred and sixty-six men who reside there, and whose respectability cannot and will not be questioned by the gentlemen on the other side. They give it as their opinion that this land sold for more than it was worth; that eleven dollars an acre was a fair price for it. And with all these facts before us, I ask whether there is any reason for attaching blame either to the Secretary of War, or to the agents of the Government who were authorized to sell this property?

Now, sir, let us look at the reasons which operated on the commissioners in offering this property for sale to Mr. Steele. First, he had been living there for twenty years; he had raised his family there; he had made these valuable improvements there. The commissioners knew this. They made an estimate as to the value of the property—a careful one, too, based on their own knowledge of it, and on the information derived from others; and they determined to offer it to him because he had these valuable improvements upon it, and on that account would be likely to give more for it. Is there anything wrong in that, when he paid all for it that it was worth?

Now I wish to call attention to another fact. An attempt is made to impeach the character of a gentleman—Major Eastman—without a single particle of legal testimony to base it upon. The majority undertake to show a palpable and positive contradiction of his testimony. Now, there is not a county-court lawyer, who has ever practiced, who does not know that there is no rule of law so well established as that a statement made by a party to a witness, who testifies to the purport of a mere fugitive conversation, is the weakest of all testimony. And why? Because it is easily forgotten, easily misunderstood, and never repeated as said. Now, you have here Captain Thom's statement of this conversation. I asked him the question, "Where did it occur, when, and who was present?" and he could neither fix the time, the place, nor who was present. I mean the particular place; he said it was on the reservation. In contradiction to that, you have Major Eastman's unqualified statement of what he regarded as the value of the property, that, though he had never bought a foot of land in his whole life, he had lived on the reservation for nine years, and believed it had been sold for more than it was worth. Now, if, for political or any other purposes, gentlemen are willing to take mere hearsay evidence in regard to a conversation which occurred more than a year ago, to impeach the veracity of a respectable gentleman—one who has been in the service of the country for thirty years, and who stands unimpeached as a high-toned, honorable man—then, I ask you, to what lengths will they not go?

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] who seemed to take peculiar pleasure to-day in misstating everything—not intentionally, I presume, but from not understanding what he was talking about—said that this was a scheme formed during the last Administration for the purpose of obtaining Fort Snelling. Where is there any evidence of that? Now, sir, that statement by a Representative on this floor is made, and goes out, for the purpose of poisoning the minds of the people of the country when there is not a particle of evidence to sustain it!

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BINGHAM. It was not my purpose, at the opening of the debate, to have mingled in this controversy; but the course which has been pursued by gentlemen upon the opposite side of the House constrains me, in vindication of the votes which I may give upon the final settlement of this question, to state, as briefly as possible, some of the views which I entertain of the facts connected with this transaction. Before proceeding, however, to notice those facts, I desire to take notice of some of the strange and curious propositions which have been put forth by gentlemen upon the opposite side, for the purpose, I suppose, of evading the force of the testimony which is spread out here before the House and the country.

What was the proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. BISHOP?] Why, that we were not to judge this case because we are not permitted to judge of the secret motives which move men in the performance of any act. It is strange that any man should attempt to set up a proposition of that sort, when every man who has ever read the horn-book of the profession of the law knows that the judgment as to a man's motives is not the judgment of the triers, but the judgment of the law. It is a principle that has been recognized for a thousand years by the common law and the common judgment of mankind, that men do mean and intend exactly the natural consequences of their own acts. I say, then, that we deal here with facts, and the law pronounces the judgment which we are bound merely to record here by our votes. What becomes, then, of the ingenious device of the gentleman from Connecticut, that although the facts be proved, yet the motives of the officers of the Government may have been very good, or, at all events, that it is not for us to sit in judgment upon them?

Mr. BISHOP. The gentleman will remember that that remark was made in speaking of the general habit of questioning the motives of political opponents, and not in connection with the facts in this particular case.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad to know that the gentleman will not attempt to spread that proposition of his over the official misconduct of any of the gentlemen who have been connected with this transaction; but I am sorry, on the other hand, that the gentleman saw fit so soon to forget that very benevolent proposition of his, that it is wrong to sit in judgment upon the motives of political opponents, and straightway proceed himself to judge the motives of gentlemen upon this side of the House, who have the misfortune to differ with him in regard to the facts of this transaction. I recognize the right of the gentleman to form for himself his own judgment upon those facts, and to act accordingly; but I claim for myself the right also to judge of the facts as they stand proven on this record, and to act accordingly. It had been as well, perhaps, for the reputation of some of the public officials connected with the sale of this reservation, if the gentleman had dealt with the facts as they stand proved here, and less with propositions wholly untenable and outside of the case.

There are but three points arising upon this evidence to which I wish to call the attention of the House. One is the inadequacy of the price for which this reservation was sold; another is the marked secrecy and concealment which attended the transaction from beginning to end; and the other is the flagrant and palpable violation of the written law of the land—of the written power of attorney, so to speak, under which the Secretary of War and his subordinates acted in this contract of sale. That this contract is in violation of the statute, is a point which, in my judgment, could not have escaped the notice of the astute gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] but for the fact that he seemed to be greatly interested in the reputation of his friend and neighbor, the Secretary of War. I honor him for the zeal, earnestness, force, and eloquence with which he sought to vindicate and cover the character of his friend from the suspicion of any dishonorable, or dishonest, or unworthy conduct in this transaction; and I am not prepared to say, in view of the testimony, that the Secretary of War is by any means as culpable as some of the other parties connected with this matter, or that he can be justly charged or suspected of any corrupt or dishonorable motive in the transaction.

In regard to the inadequacy of the price, whilst I do not mean to say that any court of equity, or any tribunal governed by equitable considerations, will set aside and declare void a sale merely on the ground of inadequacy of price, still I affirm it is a badge of fraud, and as such is always to be taken notice of; and I further affirm that the inadequacy of consideration in connection with the other facts proved in this case, would be held sufficient before any court of equity in the world to set aside this sale; that in view of these facts, this contract could not stand one hour in any court of equity. There was gross inadequacy of consideration in this case. The Secretary of War knew it; the agents of the Secretary of War knew it; the purchasers knew it; they had acknowledged it themselves in writing a year before the sale; that writing was upon file in the War Department, and therefore within the knowledge of the Secretary of War. With that fact written out and confessed by all the parties to the sale, gentlemen rise in their places here, and say there is no fraud proved. Inadequacy of price, I tell you, does, in itself, constitute an element of fraud, and no man will undertake to gainsay it. The general proposition is admitted, that of itself it is insufficient to invalidate and set aside a sale; but it is, notwithstanding, held to be evidence of fraud.

Now, I shall not stop to read all the proof that is detailed in this report, but I undertake to say that the weight of the evidence here before the House proves incontestably that that land on the day of the sale was worth at least twenty-five dollars an acre, whether sold in parcels or in gross. I might go further, but that is far enough for my purpose. The testimony of Eastman, one of the commissioners, is that the quantity of land is about eight thousand acres. I take it that if the land was properly surveyed it would be found that there are from one to two thousand acres more. But adopting the estimate of eight thousand acres, the land which passed by that sale was, according to the weight of this evidence, worth on that day, $200,000. It sold for $90,000, being $110,000 less than half its value. The purchaser himself, Mr. Steele, who acted for himself as well as for Mr. Mather, Mr. Schell, and Dr. Graham of Virginia, had a year before made application to the Secretary of War to sell this reservation to him, for himself and others, and was ready to purchase it at the rate of fifteen dollars per acre. That application is on file in the War Department, and is published at length in the report of the committee. Well, sir, at fifteen dollars per acre, this land would have brought $120,000.

Sir, this gentleman, having put his written proposition on file in the War Department, goes back to his place. These commissioners are appointed, and proceed to Minnesota. They disclose the fact of their appointment to no one. As soon as they arrive there, they address a polite note to Mr. Steele. They do not explain to anybody how it occurred to them to open a correspondence with Mr. Steele; they do not tell us whether they were advised before they started that Mr. Steele had a year before proposed to give what would amount to $120,000 for this same reservation; they simply state that, when Mr. Heiskell arrived there, they determined to sell the property at private sale, and addressed a note to Mr. Steele, inviting him to purchase, and asking him what he would give for the property. Mr. Steele informs them that he would give $75,000; and, after a private dicker over the transaction, they conclude they will take $90,000, it being $30,000 less than Mr. Steele proposed only a year before to give for the very same property. It will not do for Mr. Steele, or any gentleman speaking in behalf of Mr. Steele, to say that it was not their intention, in this transaction, to cheat the Government?

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him whether, as a lawyer, he will say that the effect of the proposition of Mr. Steele, sent to Secretary Davis, to purchase this property, was not for $75,000 in gross? Is not that the legal and only common-sense view you can take of that proposition?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, sir, the proposition was to pay fifteen dollars per acre for it. It is true he states that he supposed the land would amount to about five thousand acres, at which the sum total would be $75,000; but his proposition was distinctly to pay fifteen dollars per acre, and I say that the legal as well as common-sense construction of the proposition would have required him to pay fifteen dollars per acre for all the land included in this reservation.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to ask the gentleman whether this proposition was made to Secretary Floyd or Secretary Davis?

Mr. BINGHAM. In answer to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HUGHES,] I remark that the proposition of Steele, before referred to, was made by letter, dated April 23, 1856, addressed to the then Secretary of War, (Mr. Davis.) But, sir, that letter was on file in the Department, and a copy of it was furnished by the present Secretary of War (Mr. Floyd) to the committee. That letter contains, amongst other things, these words:

"The undersigned, for himself and others, propose to pay, and hereby offer, the honorable Secretary of War, for the lands included in the Fort Snelling reservation, fifteen dollars per acre."—House Report No. 351, page 413.

Now, sir, as I remarked before, if there was nothing else about this transaction, this, of itself, coupled with the fact that this same Mr. Steele purchased this land at $30,000 less than he had offered, is sufficient to stamp it as fraudulent. According to the confession of Mr. Steele himself, they had agreed to give $120,000 if it could not be obtained for less; and they did get it for $30,000 less than Steele had offered the year before. Sir, the whole transaction is marked with that degree of secrecy which only attends gross frauds; it has none of the characteristics of an honest, bona fide sale, either of a private or a public sale. In this record you find that letters of Mr. Smith, Mr. Sherburne, and Mr. Dillingham, two of them written in April, and the other in May, 1857, were addressed to the Secretary of War, informing him, among other things, that many persons were desiring to purchase portions of this reservation; that they themselves desired to purchase portions of it, and were particularly anxious to know of the Secretary of War whether the reservation was to be sold; when it was to be sold, and how it was to be sold. Well, sir, what answer did they ever get to these letters? Can anybody tell? No, sir; not even the Secretary of War is able to give us light upon these points.

I have observed the statement, on this subject, of the Secretary of War, to which his friend, the honorable gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] referred, wherein he says that, from the indorsement upon the letter in the Department of the Hon. Mr. SMITH, "the character of the replies to the other letters may be inferred." You cannot infer, from that indorsement, whether he informed these parties how or when this land was to be sold. I regret to observe that this indorsement on SMITH's letter is scarcely intelligible as an answer to his inquiries, and is not sufficient for the purposes of this investigation. How were these letters replied to? When were they replied to? You will observe that they all bear date before the sale of the reservation, about the time that the Secretary of War had made up his mind to sell the reservation, and about the time his friend, Dr. Graham of Virginia, called upon him in the month of April, 1857. The Secretary of War does not undertake to inform us whether, in the replies that were made to these men, he stated when the reservation would be sold, by whom it would be sold, the terms on which it would be sold, or anything about it. He simply tells us that the letters were replied to, as may be inferred from the following indorsement on Mr. SMITH's letter:

"Have it carefully surveyed first; divided into lots of forty acres each. The object to obtain the largest amount for the Government, and give all who desire an opportunity to purchase."—Report, page 410. Letter of Secretary of War to the Committee.

How could any man infer from this when this land was to be sold, by whom it was to be sold, and how it was to be sold—whether by public or private sale? Who could infer from this that Eastman and Heiskell were authorized to sell in May, 1857? that they were on the ground, and would sell in the most secret way the whole tract by addressing a private note to the man whom they preferred as the purchaser?

Now, sir, there is blame here which ought not to attach to the Secretary of War, but which does attach to his subordinates in the Department, or to some of them. This failure to give the information desired, this concealment in the premises, no matter to whom it attaches, goes far to invalidate this sale. There is enough in this transaction to affect all the parties immediately connected with it—the purchasers and the commissioners. In my judgment, the whole transaction, so far as they are concerned, is marked all over with fraud. Here is this Dr. Graham, who called at the War Department for the purpose of talking, in a friendly way, with the Secretary of War. It turns out that he was not so much concerned about paying his compliments to the honorable Secretary as in looking after the spoils—"the five loaves and two fishes." He was there to look after a job, to use his own words, "to pay expenses." "Well, sir," says he, "what can be done for me?" The Secretary of War replies that they are going to sell the Fort Snelling reservation, and offered, or suggested, to the Doctor the agency to sell it. The Doctor was tempted by the Secretary's offer to take charge of the sale. He resisted the temptation! But he resisted it, and declined the proffered agency for the reason, as he swears, that he "preferred to be a purchaser"—a speculator in the matter. The Doctor swears that he did not tell him (the Secretary) that. Why conceal it? He knows, and knew at an early day, that others had been intrusted with the delicate duty of selling this reservation. In pursuit of the property, he went to Minnesota the last of April, 1857. Having full knowledge on the subject while Eastman and Heiskell, the commissioners, were there, the Doctor was frequently there also, "confering with Steele as to the purchase." (Report, page 104, Graham's testimony.) And, according to the testimony, they agreed to become the purchasers at less than one third of its value. Such a man is not to receive much quarter in any tribunal where either law or equity is regarded. The testimony we have is testimony out of his own mouth. It is not heresy; it is his own confession.

The Secretary of War may have appointed, and doubtless did appoint, Messrs. Heiskell and Eastman in good faith. It is due to him, as well as to myself, that I should state that his instructions contain not a word that authorizes or suggests to these commissioners the concealment of the intention to sell. Most carefully did they conceal that fact. They concealed the fact both here and while they were in the Territory. Both are pressed for the reason of that concealment, and both make futile attempts to answer it. They would not trust anybody with the secret, fearful of these combinations, and that competition would prevent a sale of the property at its value. They studiously conceal the fact that they are about to sell; but Dr. Graham knew all the time that the property was to be sold. He knew all the time that this correspondence was going on, that Mr. Steele was to get this property for himself, Dr. Graham, Schell, and Mather. God only knows how much interest (if any) these two gentlemen, Mr. Heiskell and Major Eastman, have had in it. They were very kind and very partial, certainly, to Mr. Steele and Dr. Graham. It turns out that one of the purchasers, Mr. Mather, was at that time in the employment of the War Department, for the survey of Fort Ripley, and was out there on pay at the time he was engaged in this combination with his two confederates to cheat the Government, secretly to purchase at $90,000 this reservation which, I undertake to say, is worth $500,000 in the hands of any man who has the sense to manage it.

Unhappily for the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BURNETT,] there is in the terms of this agreement of sale a gross violation of the law. This written agreement is so clearly in conflict with the law, that no gentleman can fail to see it when his attention is called to it. What is your Secretary of War but the agent to carry out, in that Department of the Government, the law as recorded upon the statute-book? What is the act of 1819, and what is the amendatory act of 1857, extending the provisions of the act of 1819 to other reservations? The Secretary of War was authorized, in pursuance of these acts, and not otherwise, to sell these public reservations. Will any gentleman rise in his place and say that the Government of the United States, and the people of the United States, through their Representatives in Congress, are not as much principals in this transaction as between their agents as a man is a principal to the agent whom he constitutes his agent by his letter of attorney? Will any gentleman say that this letter of attorney to the Secretary of War, this statute, is any less revocable than a letter of attorney between man and man? Will any gentleman undertake to say here that if A gives a general power of attorney, with clauses of revocation therein, to sell, that he cannot revoke it at any time before the property passes? Here, the act of 1819 authorized the Secretary of War to sell certain national reservations of land. Because the Congress of 1819 enacted that law, which was extended to this reservation by the act of 1857, does it prevent this Congress from passing a repeal? The act is as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, under the direction of the President of the United States, to cause to be sold such military sites belonging to the United States as may have been found or become useless for military purposes. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the payment of the consideration agreed for, into the Treasury of the United States, to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments, conveying and transferring the same in fee, and the jurisdiction which had been specially ceded for military purposes to the United States by a State over such site, or sites, shall hereafter cease."

Now the act of 1857 in no manner changes the general provisions of the act of 1819, as a limitation on the powers of the Secretary of War. What is this limitation? It is simply that upon the payment of the consideration agreed upon into the Treasury of the United States, he may make and execute a deed in fee simple for the land so sold. Now what is the contract in this case? The contract is set out at length at page 52 of the report, and, after describing the property, it goes on to provide "For and in consideration of the above, the party of the second party agrees, &c., to pay to the United States Government, or authorized agent or agents, the sum of $90,000 one third of the said sum on the 10th July next, and the residue in two equal annual payments thereafter. Possession of said lands and improvements to be given as soon as the Secretary of War can dispense with it for military purposes, and a deed given when the first payment aforesaid is made, and satisfactory security for the deferred payments given."

The deed is to be given when the first installment is paid—to wit, on the 10th day of July, 1858, and approved security is given for the deferred payments at one and two years: that is not according to the letter or spirit of the statute. Those parties were bound to take notice of that provision of the general law, and when they set their hands to that contract they were bound to take notice that their contract was in violation of the law. I say that contract could not be enforced in any court of equity in the world, and for that reason I say it ought not to be regarded here, and ought to be set aside. Why? Because it is in violation of the law, and is of itself an evidence of intention upon the part of those gentlemen to defraud the Government. Why were they in such hot haste to get the title transferred to them in violation of law? Of course so that they could divide the land up, and parcel it out to A, B, and C for a valuable consideration, in order that these new purchasers might come in afterwards when a question might be raised as to the title, and say that they were innocent purchasers without notice of any fraud in the transaction. It is as clear evidence of fraud as was ever brought into a court of justice. If you choose to drop the term "fraud," still the fact stands that because this contract is in violation of the spirit and letter of the law, it is invalid and ought to be set aside.

The title to this property, I understand, has not yet passed. By the terms of the contract, however, it may pass any day, and if you give this transaction your approval, most likely it will pass. I want to know what excuse gentlemen will make before their constituents and to the country for voting down the propositions made by the majority of the committee, one of which, and the most material of which, is the fifth and last one, and which does not touch the Secretary of War? I have no desire or purpose to cast any aspersion upon his character. What excuse can gentlemen give, in view of the fact that this contract is in violation of the law of the land, for voting down that proposition declaring the contract void? I would go a step further, and repeal the authority to convey, now existing in the Secretary of War, by virtue of the act of 1819, and the amendatory act of 1857, so far as this reservation is concerned. I would go further, sir, and provide for refunding this $30,000 to the parties, and if they are dissatisfied, let them seek their remedy where best they can find it. I submit that this House owes it to itself, to fair dealing, to the country, and to the violated law of the land, to treat this case in that way. It is not necessary, as I said before, that this House shall find any specific or implied accusation against the Secretary of War. It is sufficient to find that this last resolution of the committee is true, which does not reflect upon the conduct of the Secretary of War. What is that proposition? It is this:

"5. That John C. Mather, agent of the Department of War for the examination and sale of the Fort Ripley reservation, after having already joined a combination for the purchase of the Fort Snelling reservation, acted, in making such purchase, in violation of his official duty, and against the known policy of the Government, and that, as to him and Richard Schell, represented by him as agent, and Steele and Graham, who were complicated in the sale with him, with a full knowledge of this official character, the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation was at the time and is now void."

I ask any gentleman to say what objection there is, upon the proof as it now stands, to find this proposition true, and declare that fact, and having declared it, to follow it out by repealing the power of the Secretary to confer the title in this case, and providing for paying back this $30,000 to the purchasers, and let them go their way rejoicing? What objection can there be to such a course? It will not do for gentlemen to get up any sort of special pleading, and say that this contract is void only in part. I say it is a proposition which will not be disputed by any lawyer, that the contract being void in a material part is void in toto, that it is invalid and contrary to law, and that it could not be specifically executed by any court of law.

I know that the Government of the United States is not liable to be sued; but if it were, those purchasers could not have this contract enforced in court. Let justice be done, and let this fraud be rebuked; let those who perpetrated it be told at once that they shall take nothing by it, that it shall yield them neither profit nor honor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. It was not my purpose to have said anything in connection with this question; but I have heard here, to-day, from several gentlemen upon the other side of the House, the grossest imputations upon the honesty, integrity, and character of one of my own constituents, and I would be doing injustice to my representative character, as well as to him, if I permitted them to pass by unnoticed.

Let me say to the gentleman who last addressed the House, [Mr. BINGHAM,] and to other gentlemen upon that side who have undertaken to charge that Dr. Graham had combined with other persons for the purpose of plundering the Government, that they know nothing of his character as a man, and it strikes me they know very little of what is disclosed by the evidence, or such a charge would not have been preferred in this discussion. The evidence taken by the committee, and reported to the House, justifies no such imputations.

Sir, on the score of character, on the score of intelligence, on the score of respectable standing in the community in which he was born and has lived for fifty years, he is the full peer of any man on the other side of the House—of those gentlemen who have indulged in these assaults upon him. His standing and position in our community, personally, socially, and professionally, are deservedly high, and there is no man in whose character and conduct less can be found to warrant such imputations and such aspersions. Sir, is there anything in this evidence to justify it? What single witness comes forward to testify to any one fact which shows misconduct on his part; which shows that he has attempted to plunder the Government, or to secure to himself, in any way, advantages to which he is not entitled? The gentleman who last addressed the House, [Mr. BINGHAM,] (while he did not say so in express terms,) intimated pretty broadly that Dr. Graham went there, and, by collusion with the agents of the Government, Heiskell and Eastman, obtained the advantages which he was in pursuit of. The evidence shows that this statement is entirely unfounded; for if you will look to the 105th page of this record, you will find that the question is propounded to him distinctly:

"Question 154. Did you seek to exercise any influence in producing the result upon the part of the commissioners, by which they subjected this property to a private instead of a public sale?"

"Answer. I do not recollect that I had any conversation with the commissioners upon the subject of the sale until after it was over. The negotiation with the commissioners was carried on by Mr. Steele."

With that question and answer upon the record, one gentleman rises and makes the charge, and others follow and repeat it, that he went to Minnesota with a full knowledge acquired from Governor Floyd, in this city, and that he used that knowledge for the purpose of operating on the commissioners, and inducing them to subject this property to private sale. Now, I put it to these gentlemen to say how they can excuse themselves to their own consciences for this act of injustice? The facts upon the record establish the reverse, and yet gentlemen continue to charge that he was there exercising this improper influence over the commissioners. There is not a particle of testimony to justify the charge. The record palpably, positively, directly, unequivocally, and emphatically disproves it.

There is still another point, Mr. Speaker, in this connection. It has been intimated here that there was collusion between Governor Floyd and Dr. Graham, and that Governor Floyd was aware of Dr. Graham's purpose in going to Minnesota; and that when Dr. Graham called upon the Secretary, he did so not with a view to get business that would pay his expenses to the Territory at that time; but that he called there to ascertain whether, to use the language of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM,] he could not get part of the five loaves and two fishes, in the shape of the Fort Snelling purchase. Now, let us see whether anything occurred between Dr. Graham and the Secretary of War, which justifies this imputation. On the 104th page I find the following questions and answers:

"Question 151. Do you know whether the Secretary of War had any knowledge, or information of any kind, of the existence of the company of which you were the head?"

"Answer. I do not. He certainly had none from me."

"Question 152. Will you state to the committee who constituted the company of which you were the agent?"

"Answer. As far as I know the company, they are John C. Mather, Steele, Schell, and myself."

These questions and answers show that Dr. Graham did not communicate his purpose in visiting Minnesota to the Secretary of War; that he kept it confined to his own breast, not even hinting at it; and yet the inference is sought to be deduced that he and the Secretary of War were combining for a purpose then a few months ahead! Sir, it is absurd; and I will say nothing more about it.

Now, sir, there is another thing. It has been charged here, in this debate, that, after Dr. Graham and Heiskell reached Minnesota, communications passed between the parties, by which it was known that Dr. Graham was interested with Steele in the purchase. Look at page 108, and see what the testimony is there:

"Question 192, (by the chairman.) Did or did not Major Eastman or Mr. Heiskell, or either of them, know that you and these other parties in New York were interested with Mr. Steele before the purchase was made?"

"Answer. They never knew it from me."

"Question 193, (by the chairman.) Did you learn from either, or both of them, in any conversation you had with them, that the fact had been communicated to them that you were interested in the purchase, provided Steele made it?"

"Answer. I did not."

There is the direct answer to the question on that point, but it is persistently argued here that these parties were directly in communication with the agents, and that the evidence of that communication furnished the proof of the fraud. I insist that the evidence shows nothing of the sort. I called upon the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to furnish one solitary fact which went to show that Major Eastman was in complicity with Dr. Graham; and if there was, I asked him to name the place in the record, and to name the witness who proved the fact. The gentleman declined to name the witness, and said that he had a right to draw his own inference from what was recorded.

Mr. DAWES. I call the gentleman's attention to Dr. Graham's answer to the 366th question, on page 123, and I ask him, in connection with it, to give me his opinion as to what made Dr. Graham insist on getting possession of the instructions given to these commissioners before the sale. The question is this, Mr. Speaker:

"Question 366. Did you know the instructions of the Government to the commissioners before the sale?"

"Answer. I think I did."

"Question 357. Did you know that the instructions limited the extent of Steele's settlement on the land to one hundred and sixty acres?"

"Answer. I think I did."

That was before the sale, and he says he went out to Fort Snelling in company with the commissioner who took these instructions out there.

Mr. LETCHER. Precisely so. He went out there with him; but does the gentleman seek in that way to get rid of my question?

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. LETCHER. Stop a moment; you have charged, distinctly and unequivocally, that Major Eastman made this communication to Doctor Graham.

Mr. DAWES. I have made no such charge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LETCHER. Did you not charge that he was in complicity with him?

Mr. DAWES. I made no such charge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LETCHER. What did you charge upon him?

Mr. DAWES. To what time do you allude?

Mr. LETCHER. When you and I had the colloquy this morning.

Mr. DAWES. I charged Major Eastman then, that after public clamor was raised about this secret sale, and it was attempted to justify it, as a protection against combinations, he went up to Fort Ripley and sold, at public auction, without any protection against combinations, all the Fort Ripley reservation for the purpose, as I said, of setting up a back-fire.

Mr. LETCHER. Precisely so—for the purpose of setting up the back-fire, to protect himself from the inference of complicity with Doctor Graham. And, now, when the gentleman interrupts me, he does not pretend that he can find, upon this record, in the testimony of any one witness who has been examined, a particle of evidence of any communication between Doctor Graham and Major Eastman, prior to the sale.

Mr. DAWES. Has the gentleman answered the question I put to him a moment ago?

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, I think I have, pretty distinctly.

Mr. DAWES. Will he be kind enough to repeat the answer to my question, which was, by what method, in his opinion, Dr. Graham acquired a knowledge of the instructions in the pockets of these commissioners before the sale?

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know, unless it was by publications in the newspapers.

Mr. DAWES. They were published in the newspapers, were they?

Mr. LETCHER. I think they were. I do not know where Dr. Graham got his information—whether he got it from Heiskell or not; but if he did get it from either of the commissioners it was the easiest thing in the world for the committee to make him say so. They had him before them under oath, and did not choose to interrogate him on the subject; and if they fell short of procuring testimony when they had every opportunity to procure it, they ought not now to infer anything against the witness which the committee were not willing to inquire into upon his examination.

It is somewhat remarkable that all these gentlemen set out with a declaration that nothing is proven against the Secretary of War, which shows either personal or official impropriety; but yet they cannot get through a half dozen sentences in the way of a speech, before they charge that this trouble is the result of a fixed purpose, on his part, to enrich his friends, at the expense of the Government. Some gentlemen have gone on to say that the Secretary of War acts upon the principle that the spoils of office belong to his friends, and that he set apart this amount of the spoils for these four particular friends.

A word in regard to that. It strikes me that it comes with a very bad grace from gentlemen on the other side of the House to condemn a party for standing by its friends. I have noticed on every occasion, whenever there was an officer to be elected, so devoted were they to their own nominees, even when they were powerless to elect them, that they refused to vote for Democrats who were bound to be elected, and against whom there was no personal objection. If their party prejudices were as weak as they now pretend, while ours are so strong, what was their objection to voting for Mr. ORR, as Speaker of the House? On what occasion have they not stood by their party friends? Place their party in power to-morrow; give them the control of the Administration; give them the President of the nation, and does any gentleman on the other side of the House pretend that he would not, in the selection of officers for his Administration, confine that selection to his own party friends wherever such could be found? Go to the different State governments; let the gentleman from Massachusetts go to his own State, where even the judicial robe does not protect a man from being struck down by his opponents for a scrupulous regard to his oath in the discharge of his official duty. I imagine he approves of the removal of Judge Loring. It is generally approved throughout his State. And yet the gentleman who represents a State where a judicial officer is stricken down for an honest discharge of his duty, comes here and talks about parties being controlled by "spoils." I imagine the spoils of Judge Loring's position went to feed some member of the Republican party, after he was stricken down.

The same state of things exists in all the State governments under Republican control. In all these States, the party in power confers the offices upon its friends. And not only is it so with this party, but it is so with private individuals. If you want to employ an agent for any purpose, and you have a friend and an enemy, I imagine that, all other things being equal, you will employ your political friend for that particular purpose in preference to an opponent. Gentlemen say that our party acts upon the principle that the spoils are to go for the support of its friends. I ask if there is a solitary one of the gentlemen upon the other side, who have spoken to-day, who would not appoint his own party friends to office in preference to his political opponents?

Mr. DAWES. Nobody said they would not.

Mr. LETCHER. Then what did gentlemen mean, when they got up here and talked about the Democratic party taking care of its friends and rewarding them with office? [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman alludes to me, I said no such thing. I said it was the common doctrine of all parties.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] set out distinctly with that proposition, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] who last addressed the House, maintained it also. But it seems the gentleman from Massachusetts was more considerate; as it had not been very long since Judge Loring was executed, he concluded not to tread on that delicate ground. [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. As the gentleman has alluded to me, I beg leave to say that I said nothing about parties.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, but you did say something about "the spoils."

Mr. BINGHAM. I did say that the gentleman's particular friend went to the Secretary of War—as he was honest enough to testify—to look after the spoils.

Mr. LETCHER. I had supposed that a gentleman who so much concerned about the spoils would have had a very poor opinion of any one who enjoyed any part of them; but it seems that his horror of the doctrine grows out of the fact that he is himself without a teat. [Laughter.]

But, besides all this, it strikes me that the majority of the committee read us an exceedingly long homily, and a pretty strong one, upon that subject. I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTIT] to that branch of the subject. If I should ever live to see his party in power, I have no doubt I shall find him here in Washington—if he be still in Congress—protesting against his President removing Democrats from office to put in men of his own party. He will have to do it, if he practices what he preaches.

The gentleman from Ohio, who was last up, undertook to comment upon the letter of Mr. Steele, written on the 23d of April, 1856, and said that the letter contained a proposition that he would pay fifteen dollars an acre for the land, no matter how much there was of it. Now, let us look at that letter and see if it is possible for any gentleman who has any regard for the meaning of language to put that construction upon it. I will read the whole of it. It is as follows:

Proposition of Franklin Steele.

WASHINGTON CITY, April 23, 1856.

The undersigned, for himself and others, propose to pay, and hereby offer, the honorable Secretary of War for the lands included in the Fort Snelling reservation, fifteen dollars per acre.

Said purchase to include all improvements on said reservation; the United States to have, free of charge, the use of the fort and all other buildings belonging to the Government, including ——— acres of land, so long as, in the opinion of the War Department, they shall be required for military purposes; said fort, buildings, improvements, and land so reserved to be under the full and entire control of the Department during said term.

The reservation, including the overflowed lands, amounting to about five thousand acres, at fifteen dollars per acre, will amount to $75,000.

The undersigned, for himself and others, also propose to take it at the above estimate, and pay therefore, the sum of $75,000; payment for the whole to be made at once, if the proposition is accepted.

FRANKLIN STEELE.

Now, I submit that the plain meaning of that proposition is that he would give fifteen dollars an acre for the land, if it was limited to his estimate of five thousand acres. Mr. Steele is a man of intelligence, as the gentleman knows; and if his construction of the proposition was right, he would have said that he resented the alternative proposition, and was ready to comply with either of the propositions that might be accepted. But, sir, this case has proceeded, it seems to me, from beginning to end, upon an improper construction of the letter before us. Mr. Steele made but a single proposition, namely: that, estimating the quantity of land at five thousand acres, he would pay fifteen dollars per acre—making up the specified sum of $75,000.

There is another thing in this connection. When this contract had been made, and when they had returned to the Secretary of War with it, the evidence on record shows that it was submitted to the President of the United States on the 17th day of June last, and that it was "approved," as certified by the Secretary of War, on the 2d day of July following. It thus appears that the President was consulted; and, if I am not misinformed, the Cabinet were consulted before this contract was approved; and will the gentlemen on the other side undertake to say that there was complicity upon the part of the President and members of the Cabinet in what they are pleased to call a fraud? It was a most extraordinary course of proceeding, if it be true, that the Secretary of War had made up his mind to disregard the will of this House, and the law of the land, for the purpose of extending favors to his friends; that he should have then laid the whole matter before the President and Cabinet for their approval.

But did he disregard the law? Had not he, as the officer in charge of the military Department of this Government, the right to decide whether the reservation was no longer needed for military purposes? I apprehend there will be no dispute about that. I apprehend there will be no difficulty about his power in that respect. I apprehend that no gentleman will say that he has not the power to determine that any reservation in the country is no longer needed for military purposes, and that it shall be abandoned, the troops withdrawn and placed at some other point. If he has this power, then, how will it be argued that under the provision of 1857, authorizing him to sell such reservations as were no longer needed, he had not the absolute power to dispose of this reservation, and to order its sale? How else can it be? And the same paragraph declares that he shall prescribe the mode and manner of the sale. What restriction, I ask gentlemen, is placed upon him in the exercise of his judgment, in the execution of the law as to the manner of sale?

It seems to me, then, that the conclusion may be fairly drawn, from the evidence which is before us, that the Secretary of War acted within the law, and that he exercised his power with prudent discretion; that he did nothing in the way of confirming the sale, until he had taken the advice of those with whom he is associated—with the President and Cabinet. But not content with assailing the Secretary of War, gentlemen come forward and attack the private character and integrity of the commissioners. Now, sir, I have known Major Eastman from the time I first came to Congress. My acquaintance commenced with him in this way: a portion of his family (a brother-in-law) resides in my own town, and when I came here, I brought a letter of introduction from him to Major Eastman. I have seen him frequently since, and have always heard him well spoken of. Everybody who knows him speaks well of him as a man of integrity, as an officer of the Army. For the last thirty years he has rendered valuable service to the country, and never, until this day, have I heard anybody undertake to assail his character, and affix to it a brand of disgrace. Major Eastman has resided in this city, when he has not been away on duty, for many years, and it is easy for gentlemen to ascertain what character he bears here. They can make any examination they please, and I venture to say they will find that this is the first time in his life, not now a short one, that any assault has been made upon his character as a man, or his honor and integrity as an officer. Gentlemen on the other side of the House, and particularly the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON], who first addressed the House, said that these things were to be inferred from the record. Now, sir, what is there on the record to establish an inference of fraud? Nothing whatever. Gentlemen have acted in violation of the universally recognized principle that fraud is never to be presumed—it must be clearly proven.

Well, sir, there is another thing that is entirely consistent with the whole course of action that gentlemen on the other side of the House have seen proper to adopt from the commencement of this proceeding. They have referred to a sale which took place in Chicago many years ago, for the purpose of exciting prejudice in this case. Well, sir, what does that case prove? Does it make out any case against Secretary Floyd? It has nothing whatever to do with this case. What concern is it to the House in the consideration of this subject? And, sir, the gentleman from Illinois this morning undertook, for the purpose of still further exciting prejudice against Governor Floyd, to connect this matter with another investigation about the purchase of a fortification site at Willett's Point. Why, sir, what matters it to us, in the consideration of this case, what was done in that investigation? Had it any legitimate connection with this investigation in any way? None, whatever; and why then did the gentleman ask that the decision of this case should be suspended until it is seen what can be made out of the other case, unless it is to carry out a determination to make out such a case against the Secretary of War as will justify them in condemning him. I insist that they shall confine themselves to the facts which are proved, as shown by the record; and if these facts are not sufficient to warrant the conclusion that these parties are guilty, then I think I have a right to demand here that they shall acquit them. They are gentlemen of respectability. They are gentlemen of character and standing. They are gentlemen who have never been the objects of suspicion before. They are gentlemen whose neighbors and friends and acquaintances will be astonished to hear the terms of denunciation which have been applied to them by gentlemen on the other side, who know nothing of them personally, and know nothing of their standing at home.

When a question of this sort is to be dealt with, gentlemen who deprecate assaults in debate by one member upon another, ought to be careful to withhold their censure from individuals who have not a right to be heard here in defense of themselves; they ought at least to do that justice to outsiders in a little stricter measure, which they might not accord in as full measure to those who are here to defend themselves. I ask no favors in behalf of these gentlemen. I ask only that they shall be judged by their acts, by their lives, by their character; and by them they will stand or fall. Of one thing I am satisfied, they will be sustained where they are known, and where the evidence is read, whatever may be the partisan verdict of the other side of this House.

Mr. HUGHES obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would prefer as well to follow the gentleman as to precede him, with the remarks I desire to make.

Mr. HUGHES. I yield the floor to the gentleman, and will take my chances afterward.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I regard it as unfortunate, in a case like this, where so much is at stake, that there should have been exhibited in this Hall anything at all like party feeling. I have not had an opportunity to bestow upon this record as much examination as it deserves, although I have read critically the reports of both branches of the committee, and the testimony of the principal witnesses who have deposed in this case. As I do not belong either to the Republican or the Democratic party, I feel that I may be credited by the House, when I say that I entered upon the consideration of this case without any party aim or purpose. I came to it, I confess, with a feeling of personal partiality for the gentleman who plays the most conspicuous part in this transaction, although he belongs to another political party than that to which I am attached; but I would not throw a gauze over any fault committed by the Secretary of War, nor would I conceal, in the slightest degree, the impression that this testimony has made upon my mind. I act in this matter as nearly as I can, exactly as if I were a sworn juror in the box. I will not give to the Secretary of War that mincing modicum of a verdict proposed to be dealt out to him by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON,] to wit, that the matter charged is "not proved;" on the contrary, sir, looking over the whole testimony in this case, I see no fact upon which to rest a charge of corruption against the Secretary, and I freely pronounce his acquittal of that.

In the first place, what is the law under which this officer acted? He acted under the law of 1819, modified by the law of 1857. When did he form his official determination to act on the subject-matter of selling Fort Snelling? The proof is clear and uncontradicted that when he gave his verbal order to Major Eastman, early in April, 1857, for the survey of that reservation, he informed that officer at the same time that he intended to send an agent there to sell it. When he gave this verbal statement of his official determination to his subaltern officer, he had not seen any of the parties who are complicated in the subsequent stages of this transaction. It was his duty, as Secretary of War, to determine whether he would sell. He formed that determination alone, and without aid from Mr. Mather, Mr. Schell, Mr. Graham, Mr. Heiskell, or anybody else.

How, then, can any gentleman, acting upon the testimony only, so far as this act of the Secretary is concerned, attach the censure of corruption to his determination to sell? I find him not surrounded by any persons when he announced his decision, uninfluenced by any of these confederates. There is not a scintilla of proof that, up to that time, anybody had talked to him of the matter. Having the instruction to survey the reservation into forty-acre tracts, Major Eastman left Washington early in April for the theater of his duty. The Secretary gave his instructions to Eastman and Heiskell on the 25th of May. I have examined these instructions. They gave to the agents the right to sell at public auction, on public advertisement, and in small lots to suit purchasers, or to sell the whole together. With that instruction I can find no fault, unless I choose to be hypercritical, and to find fault that the Secretary of War, after he had formed his determination to sell, should have left any latitude of discretion at all in his agents. I am not disposed to go so far. Had I been the Secretary of War, I should have probably felt disposed to do just what he did. Not being myself personally acquainted with the locality or personally cognizant of what ought to belong to the transaction, having confidence in the men whom I had selected, I would have reposed in them at least the discretion to determine whether they would sell in gross or in detail, because the question, at last, is limited to that.

In forming an opinion upon this transaction, I am bound to regard only the evidence in the case. Mr. Heiskell has been brought to the book; so have Mr. Schell, Mr. Mather, Dr. Graham, and Major Eastman. Our committee has not only examined and cross-examined them, but after a cross-examination, carried out in all its details, to suit the fancies of the interrogators, these persons have, at different times, been brought back to the stand, in order to be reexamined. Their testimony speaks but one voice upon the point whether the Secretary was a party to any combination; they all swear positively to the fact, that there was no combination between any one of them and the Secretary of War. They all, in the most emphatic terms, acquit the Secretary of War, of all knowledge of any combination that they may have had with one another.

Now, sir, permit me to do the majority of the committee the justice to say, that after the most critical investigation of their report, I have not found in it any point on which gentlemen on the opposite side of the House can charge them with an intention to impute corruption to the Secretary of War. Had they intended to impute anything against the integrity of the Secretary of War, I suppose that, as men, as statesmen, as legislators, they would have spoken it out in phrase unmistakable. So far from their doing so, as I read their report, they have studiously guarded themselves against going a single point beyond the testimony; and there is nothing in the report of the majority of the committee at which any friend of the Secretary of War has the right to take offense. I do not think that the Secretary of War is entirely blameless. I think he acted improvidently in the transaction. I believe he acted honestly in it, but I think he acted improvidently. One of the greatest errors that he committed in the transaction was in his instructions to the commissioners to establish the minimum price of the land at $7 50, when he had in his own office a bid for it at fifteen dollars an acre. Judges who open sales always start the minimum price at the bid which has been made.

The Secretary of War had not been more than a month in office. There is a possibility that he had not read this correspondence in regard to Fort Snelling. If he had not, yet fixed the minimum at $7 50, that would only verify my idea that he had been very improvident about it. I do not see anything, however, in this which enables me, as a gentleman, to touch his integrity. There are some little circumstances all through this case at which a captious man might start. As, for instance, that his tastes should have lead him into western Virginia, to select Mr. Heiskell, on the 25th of May, and to the city of New York to select Mr. Mather, on the 26th of May, and that he should not have been provident enough to have guarded his country against the charge of double mileage for two sets of agents, one of whom was to go to Fort Snelling and the other to Fort Ripley—that he should have selected them from different quarters of the Confederacy, and started them to the same neighborhood to do the same sort of business. But I would not assail his integrity for a fault like that, especially when all these persons who have been brought to the book have sworn that he knew nothing at all about their combinations. Nor would I impeach the Secretary of War on account of the very curious operations of Dr. Graham.

Dr. Graham testifies that at the time of his first coming to Washington, a combination was already formed; but he swears emphatically to the fact that when he informed the Secretary of War that he was going west, for the purpose of making some investments, and wanted to know if the Secretary had anything for him to do that would pay his expenses, the Secretary told him he had nothing there except to sell Fort Snelling, or some old forts; and that, on this hint, he came in his own mind to the conclusion that if Fort Snelling was to be sold, he would rather be a speculator in the sale than an agent to sell. He says, in his testimony, that he did not tell the Secretary of War what was passing in his own mind. He declined becoming the agent of the Secretary, but found Mr. Mather, who was here with the same object in view. They very readily formed a combination—Mr. Mather agreeing to let Dr. Graham in—but it is a curious feature in this case, that this gentleman who intended to speculate, does not seem to have advanced any money for the speculation. His talents are very manifest, for he gets a ninth of the property without advancing a cent towards the purchase, and besides, obtains for himself, with an astuteness that must be peculiar, a salary of $5,000 to manage other people's business.

Mr. Mather was brought to the stand. "Mr. Mather, how came you to know anything about this Fort Snelling property being for sale?" He answers, "I do not know where I heard it; probably I saw it in an act of the last Congress." Now, sir, there is where the New York company started. It was in the mousing of a New York speculator among the acts of Congress, to see where a penny might be turned. Seeing that a favorite reservation was to be sold, he came to Washington to learn how he should set about the speculation, and opportunely met Dr. Graham, with whom he combined at once! He had previously agreed in conversation with Mr. Schell that something might turn up under this law; and like Micawber, he came here to wait to see whether "something would turn up." Having agreed with the Virginian, (Graham), he started him off to Minnesota to attach Franklin Steele, a man of property who was living on the land, and had some equity. Steele is soon secured, and then Graham and Mather return to Washington, and find Mr. Heiskell, the agent, just ready to start out to Minnesota. They determine to escort him. Heiskell may be a very smart sheriff in his part of Virginia, yet why did Governor Floyd send down to Virginia to pick up this "old boy?" I answer myself the question without any difficulty. Governor Floyd is a Virginian too; Heiskell was his countryman, his personal friend, and had been his political associate; and the Governor felt like "doing something for him." The practice of the Governor's school of politics did not forbid him from gratifying his personal partiality in distributing his share of public patronage. The sentiment belongs to every-day life. The indulgence of it may convict the Secretary of improvidence; but at the same time it does honor to his heart.

I do not intend to strain myself for the purpose of getting anything against a man who may have acted, and I verily believe, has acted, honestly in this transaction. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to pass a resolution as broad as the friends of Mr. Floyd may choose to make it, that we have found nothing at all in this investigation to attach suspicion to his integrity as a public officer. But, nevertheless, I am not willing to carry out the sale. I believe he has exceeded his powers—I have no doubt about it. You are to read these two acts together.

The act of 1857 enacts that the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1819, shall be extended to all military sites, and so forth. What are those provisions?

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the payment of the consideration agreed for into the Treasury of the United States, to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments, and so forth."

Now, sir, the point at which I strike this sale is, that neither the Secretary of War, nor his agents, had any right—even if the contingency had happened on which he might sell—to sell the property of this Government upon a credit. The provision of the act of 1819 is in close analogy with all our laws in regard to the sale of the real estate of the Government, and they had no right to make a sale upon time. Before they could execute a contract with any purchaser, the consideration was to be paid into the Treasury. But here was a contract to sell this property for $90,000, $30,000 to be paid down, and the balance at one and two years without interest, and without security. Such a transaction has been ratified, upon mature deliberation, by the President; but I have no hesitation in saying, here, in my place, as a member of Congress, that it is in violation of the law of 1819; that the agents of the Government exceeded the authority vested in the Secretary of War by that act; that the sale ought not to be ratified and confirmed; and that a patent ought not to issue upon that sale.

What bounds the discretion of this executive officer, under this act, if he has the full liberty claimed for him here to-day? May he, upon his mere executive responsibility, sell, for instance, the million dollars' worth of public reservation in the vicinity of St. Louis, upon terms of payment extended through fifty years? And if he does that, is there no power in this Government, while that law remains upon the statute-book, to arrest him in transitu, while his contract is yet executory? I think that our remedy is to be found in the reading of the law: that the limitation upon his discretion is, that the consideration must be paid into the Treasury; and that, therefore, when his agent undertakes to sell upon time, he is outside of the law, and his act is void.

I am not disposed to discuss very minutely the course of Mr. Mather and Mr. Schell. A great many of the witnesses think they have not acquired any advantage. My own opinion, based upon the testimony, is that they have acquired a very great advantage—a piece of property which the Hon. Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, says he would have "spread his pile" for—would have given $400,000 for.

Why, it is Mr. SMITH's idea that the site is not of such great value for agricultural purposes; but, as a town site, that it would have been worth four times as much as it was sold for. Some three or four witnesses put a valuation upon it as a town site at three or four hundred thousand dollars. Gentlemen may reply that these are speculative prices. Sir, whether speculative or not, land is worth what it will command in money in the market. The amount which it will bring in money, whether for speculative purposes or not, is its market value; and it was the business of the Secretary of War, or rather of his agents, to have looked to its market value. I have no doubt at all that they made a good sale, considering it only as a piece of land to be used for agricultural purposes. I have no doubt at all that they made a very bad sale, considering it as a town site; and I have no doubt that, if they had not sold it in the way they did, the amount received would have been much larger.

With regard to the proposition, whether it ought to have been reserved still further as a military site, I am constrained to differ with my friend from Indiana, who thinks it ought to have been reserved. I, of course, advance this opinion as against that of General Jesup, who is a military man of high reputation, with great diffidence; but, sir, had I been the Secretary of War, I would have disposed of this property; for I do not believe it ought to be maintained there, either as a military position or as a depot for provisions. I think it ought to have been disposed of. I cannot understand how, lying, as it does, in the center of thirty or forty thousand people, with settlements extending fifty or one hundred miles back of it, a necessity can exist for retaining it as a military position. It lies at the confluence of two streams, both of which are navigable a considerable distance beyond that point, and a vessel, laden with provisions, can go to the point of consumption to distribute cargo.

I see by the statements of some of these witnesses that the fortification is situated upon a high hill, and that transportation up to it is difficult. It is also true that transportation around the falls is somewhat difficult. But, sir, my determination, as an executive officer, would have been controlled by the consideration that it could not be a matter of economy to the Department to keep men there all the year for the purpose of guarding stores. It would be more economical to transport the provisions and supplies directly to the points where they are required. But, while I think the Secretary might well have sold, I do not think the sale which was in fact made is valid, because the contract retains the property indefinitely for military purposes; and because the sale was made on credit; because the sale was secret; and because I think there was collusion among those who claim to be the beneficiaries under the contract to prevent an open sale, whether public or private. I have thus, in brief terms, and in a very discursive manner, presented some of the impressions which this affair has produced upon my mind. I feel that the reputations of public officers should not be assailed unjustly. I think there is no man in the House who, in the absence of proof sustaining a charge against the Secretary of War, should allow party prejudice to sway his mind for a moment. I feel that I am above it. I am sure, also, that whenever I shall have descended to a point where the private reputation of a political adversary, when I am acting here under oath, cannot be intrusted to me for a judicial canvass of a transaction in which it may be involved, I will no longer be worthy a seat in this House.

Mr. HUGHES. I propose to detain the House only for a very short time. On the 4th day of January last, a select committee was raised to inquire into the facts of the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation. The book which I hold in my hand, [holding up the report,] is the result of the labors of that committee. I believe that this book, and this investigation, have cost this Government about twenty thousand dollars. We are now called upon, at the close of this session, when every moment is valuable, and when we are pressed with large arrears of public business, which has accumulated upon our hands, to pass upon the propositions which this committee have submitted to the House as the result of their investigations. It seems to me that gentlemen on the other side of the House, who have participated in this discussion, have been much more zealous in urging the passage of these resolutions than in the transaction of the practical legislative business of the country; and it is a question for this House to consider, whether the results of this investigation are a sufficient equivalent for the time and public money which have been spent upon it.

I must say, sir, that, after having listened somewhat attentively to all the gentlemen who have spoken upon this question, I am strongly inclined to coincide in the views of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. BISHOP,] who addressed the House some time ago, that this whole matter looks more to its influence upon the partisan politics of the country than to any legitimate action by the House, or by Congress.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] if that land had been offered at public sale, would not the capitalists upon the ground have entered into combination to have it sold for much less than it would bring at private sale? Is it not the gentleman's opinion, judging from the past land sales, that that would have been the case?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. The gentleman has as good a chance to judge of that as I have; but, as he has asked my opinion, I will say that, from the testimony in the case, a combination would have been inevitable. The Secretary of War, however, by proper regulations, as in the Chicago case, might have evaded that, where there was an inadequacy of price, and kept the title in the hands of the Government.

Mr. HUGHES. Where did this Fort Snelling matter originate? My opinion is that it originated in the newspapers, because I saw it there long before this Congress convened, where most of the other investigations which have caused the raising of select committees, and the profuse expenditure of the public money, have started; and where has it been carried on? In the public newspapers, and there, sir, it is to end. When this report was presented to the House proposing to arraign a member of the Cabinet before Congress and the country, where he had been arraigned previously through the columns of the newspapers, his accusers in the case came into this Hall and proposed that the whole subject should be postponed until the next session of Congress.

Mr. SHAW, of Illinois. To whom does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HUGHES. I refer to the Republicans; and if the gentleman has any sympathy with them, I refer to him.

Mr. SHAW, of Illinois. I have taken no part in this matter. I thought the gentleman referred to my colleague, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. HUGHES. How did he vote on the postponement?

Mr. SHAW, of Illinois. He voted against it; and, sir, let me say to the gentleman, that my colleague has the reputation of being a good Democrat where he is known.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not talking about Democracy or Republicanism; I am talking about the question that is before the House; and the gentleman has been asleep, indeed, if he has ignored the fact that the Secretary of War has been arraigned before the country by the Republican party, and that the Administration and Democratic party have been arraigned in consequence of the alleged mismanagement of this Fort Snelling sale. I say that when the labors of this committee were completed and their report was presented to this House, a proposition was made and supported by a large majority of that party, as will be seen by reference to the Journal, for a postponement of this matter until the next session of Congress. In the intermediate time it could have been used in the elections of the country.

I repeat, that I submit the question to the House and the country whether, if there had been anything in this matter, it would not have been pressed, and earnestly pressed, to an adverse decision? Undoubtedly it would. But the proposition was made to postpone it, and the vote was taken by yeas and nays. A majority of this House decided not to postpone it. Of whom did that majority consist? It consisted of the personal and political friends of the Secretary of War, who demanded not only an investigation, but an early decision. And today, sir, when this matter was again called up, being the special order, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. GROW,] who has spoken upon this floor, and pronounced his judgment upon the testimony, came forward and moved a further postponement. I allude to these circumstances to show that those who originated this investigation, that those who have carried it on, that those who have carried it into the newspapers of the country, that those who are advocating an adverse decision of this question, seem more desirous to postpone the matter, in order to carry it into the elections of the country, than to bring it to a decision by a vote of the House. Whether that comports with the principles of justice or not, is easily determined.

Now, sir, I propose to call the attention of the House to the propositions submitted by this committee for our action. I conceive that it is not necessary to go beyond those propositions to demonstrate the whole character of this proceeding from beginning to end. Who authorized the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation? Was it the act of the Cabinet? Was it the act of the Administration? Was it the act of the Secretary of War? No, sir; it was the act of Congress. I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTIT] who, we are informed by the Indiana newspapers has taken a leading part in this proceeding, voted for that law? Congress authorized the sale of this reservation, and invested the Secretary of War with full power and discretion to make it. In pursuance of that authority he acted. Now, in making that sale he either made an honest bargain, or a corrupt bargain. If he acted corruptly, he is amenable to Congress for it. If he made a bad bargain, and acted honestly, it is a question which will admit of considerable discussion and doubt, whether or not, he is answerable to this House.

But, the position I take is this: that the majority of this committee, after having thoroughly investigated this subject, taken unlimited range in the examination of witnesses, and having reported their testimony to this House, have reported propositions which, upon their face, show that there is no foundation for arraigning the Secretary of War, and no just foundation for this investigation, which has cost the Government $20,000. The majority of that committee report a series of resolutions, and propose that this House shall pass them. The first of these resolutions is as follows:

"Resolved, 1. That the sale of the military post of Fort Snelling and so much of the reservation attached to it as was necessary for military purposes, made on the 8th day of June, 1857, under the authority of the Secretary of War, the same being then and now retained under the authority of that Department because necessary for military purposes, was without authority of law."

Well, sir, that is a legal proposition. What would the passage of this resolution by the House amount to? Will it rescind the sale? Will it have the effect of a judicial decision? Not at all, sir. It is an important declaration of opinion, but an idle declaration, because this House alone has no jurisdiction over the matter. The authority of the Secretary of War to make this sale was derived from an act of Congress in which both branches of the national Legislature participated, and which had the approbation of the President. If it was proposed to repeal that law, the committee, instead of reporting this resolution, should have reported a bill or joint resolution. Is it to be presumed that the committee did not know that? By no means. The conclusive presumption is that they did know it. Then, why have they not taken that course? The fact that they have not reported to the House a measure for its action, which would have some effect if adopted, is a conclusive answer to all which they may say upon this floor in regard to this transaction.

The second resolution is as follows:

"That said sale was made by the Secretary of War notwithstanding his knowledge of the official opinions of his predecessor, the Hon. JEFFERSON DAVIS, and of other officers in superior military command to the contrary, without consulting with, without the advice, and without the knowledge of any officer in the service of any rank, leaving the question of the retention of that post to the discretion of the commissioners appointed to make the sale, and that this action on the part of the Secretary of War was a grave official fault."

Here it is proposed that the House of Representatives shall declare by resolution that the Secretary of War who made this sale, knowing that an officer, high in rank in the Government, dis-

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 165.

approved of it, committed a grave official fault. Well, sir, if the evidence in this book will sustain any such conclusion as that, this committee was derelict in duty in not going further than simply reporting this resolution. If it is true that the Secretary of War has committed a grave official fault which is within the cognizance of this House, and if this committee has arrived at a knowledge of that fact from an investigation of the case, why did they not report a remedy for that fault? That remedy should be either a law in which the other branch of the Legislature could participate; an act rescinding the contract; or it should be a resolution of instructions proposing to put this contract in suit before the courts of the country through the proper representatives of the Federal Government—her district attorney or those otherwise authorized to represent her.

But it was a grave official fault! Sir, I recognize the right of this House, as a House, to originate specific charges against a member of the Cabinet and to impeach him. But I protest that this House has no right to record its condemnation of the official conduct of any member of the Cabinet in a form which he cannot put in issue and have subjected to a trial by his peers.

The third, fourth, and fifth resolutions are as follows:

"3. That, with a knowledge of the great value of the Fort Snelling post and reservation, and the importance of great caution and judgment in making the sale, the Secretary of War appointed as agents for the purpose unqualified, inexperienced, and incompetent men.

"4. That provision for and management of the sale were so negligently, carelessly, and injudiciously made, as to induce a successful combination against the Government, exclude all competition, and bring loss on the Government.

"5. That John C. Mather, agent of the Department of War for the examination and sale of the Fort Ripley reservation, after having already joined a combination for the purchase of the Fort Snelling reservation, acted, in making such purchase, in violation of his official duty, and against the known policy of the Government, and that, as to him and Richard Schell, represented by him as agent, and Steele and Graham, who were implicated in the sale with him, with a full knowledge of this official character, the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation was at the time and is now void."

These resolutions, I suppose, if passed, will satisfy the sense of public duty of this committee or those who originated this investigation. But what will they amount to when they are passed? Will they set aside the sale? Will they reinstate the United States in any right of which they have been defrauded in this transaction? Not at all. It will leave the matter precisely where it stood before; but the information to the public will have cost this Government $20,000.

I respectfully submit that this committee are not in earnest about this matter; I respectfully submit that no committee composed of members of this House, acting under the solemn obligations of an oath, could have arrived at any such conclusions as those expressed in these resolutions without proposing some practical measure which would have furnished a remedy against the injuries which the public had sustained in this matter. It cannot be possible that a majority of this committee could believe all these things to be true, and yet content themselves with a simple expression of opinion upon the subject. No, sir; if they were in earnest about this matter they certainly would have reported a bill to repeal the law, to rescind the sale, or at least they would have reported a resolution instructing the district attorney to put this matter in suit in the proper court, where the question of fraud between the Government and the purchasers of this land, could be tried.

Why, sir, the committee leave room for us to regard this whole matter as a stupendous joke! and I can only account for it from the fact that I have seen in the metropolitan organ of the Republican party, in my State, a statement in connection with this matter, that my colleague [Mr. PERRIN] ought to be reelected to this House. I can understand the thing very well in that view of the subject. But really, as a grave legislative procedure, calculated to rebuke and punish a high functionary, or to restore to the Government its rights, of which it may have been deprived by fraud and misconduct, the resolutions are certainly a most lame and impotent recommendation to be presented to this House. Taking this matter, then, as the committee have presented it, I respectfully submit, that whatever may have been the facts in regard to this transaction, these resolutions ought not to pass this House.

But, sir, the House has been repeatedly told, by almost every gentleman who has advocated the passage of the resolutions, that the Secretary of War is untouched by the evidence in this book. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] absolves him. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] absolves him. No member has arisen on this floor, and undertaken to say, from the testimony in this book, that the Secretary's integrity is touched by the evidence. But the gentleman from Kentucky says, he was very improvident. Well, sir, I have no doubt that there can be fifty thousand men found within the limits of this Republic who would say, every day, "if I were the Secretary of State I would, in a particular matter, have acted in a different manner. I would have acted differently from Secretary Floyd if I had been Secretary of War. If I was Secretary of the Interior I would have acted differently from Secretary Thompson. If I were Postmaster General I would have acted differently from Governor Brown." These differences of opinion are but the every-day occurrences of life. But, sir, are these differences of opinion by men not familiar with the official course and views of those occupying these high positions, and not informed as to the details of business on which they pass judgment, sufficient ground to induce a branch of the national Legislature to institute a solemn investigation, and to expend $20,000 of the public money, all to result in "a few mouthfuls of articulate air," expressed in inoperative resolutions? If you adopt these resolutions they will rescind no contract, repeal no law, rectify no fraud, reinstate the Government in none of its rights, and punish no deception. Sir, it occurs to me that since select committees are the order of the day, we have quite as much foundation for raising a select committee on the majority of this committee, as the House had for raising a select committee on the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] took a good deal of credit to himself for being especially impartial, and for being above partisan feeling and partisan influence. He alluded to the fact that in the last Congress he had voted to expel members of his own party. He omitted to state that during this Congress he had grave doubts as to the jurisdiction of the House over one of the same party implicated in the investigation of the last Congress, while his mind was perfectly clear as to the propriety of sending a man to jail under the previous question for refusing to testify in a matter over which, on the face of the record, in my opinion, the House had no jurisdiction.

He alluded also to the tariff investigation, to show that he was above any partisan bias. Now, I should not have thought of arraigning the course of the gentleman on that question, but he has challenged attention to it. I find, in reading the newspapers of the day, divers matters purporting to be the report and official action of a committee of this House. It has not yet, I believe, been published by the authority of the House. I do not know whether I can altogether impute to the gentleman a partisan bias or not. Perhaps the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVES] would aid me in solving that question. But I do not know that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] can claim any special credit before the House, in being a sympathizer with the present Governor of Massachusetts, or in manifesting extraordinary zeal in tracing home certain acts of delinquency to the partner of Governor Gardner, who was the recent competitor of the present Governor of Massachusetts for the office he now holds. But the gentleman challenged inquiry as to his course, and I think it no more than proper to indulge him in that respect.

I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to pursue this matter further. All I proposed to do was to call the attention of the House to the plain, practical question in the resolutions submitted for its action; and I say this to the House now, that if half were true which the advocates of these resolutions maintain is proven by the testimony contained in this volume, then something more than these resolutions ought to be adopted by this House. I conceive that if it were true, those who have offered these resolutions ought to have offered something more. I do not think they ought to have stopped short of the extremest measures that justice and a proper regard for public morals require. I take it that all this investigation, all this testimony, all these newspaper paragraphs, all these speeches on this floor, resulting in a few unmeaning, ineffectual, impotent resolutions, are conclusive evidence that the whole of this matter is just a proceeding of that character described by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Do you believe, Mr. Speaker, that if the Secretary of War had been inculcated by the testimony here, the gentlemen on the other side of the House would have wanted to postpone the consideration of the matter until the next session of Congress? Do you believe, sir, that they would not have been prepared to remain in session a month or six weeks longer, to bring to justice a high public functionary, who stood convicted of malfeasance in office? You do not believe it. I do not believe it. I apprehend very few members of this House believe it; and I conceive the country does not believe it. And when all the newspaper publications, all the manifestoes we have had upon this floor about the Fort Snelling investigation, and all the testimony, have resulted in the presentation of these resolutions for the action of the House, which, as legislative propositions, are absolutely harmless and void, how does it happen that all those gentlemen who sympathize with this movement were in favor of leaving it an open question until the next session of Congress? Why, sir, if it had been postponed until after the coming election, it might have answered as a hobby for some gentlemen to ride who are hard pressed, and whose constituents are tired of "freedom shrieking" and talk about Kansas, and when Congress reassembled the whole proceeding would have been permitted to die out as calmly and mildly as anything ever was hushed up in the world. But when they are brought up to the question, as they have been by the vote of the House, respect for appearances requires that a few speeches should be made, and a little zeal manifested; but the empty seats on the other side of the House show how much interest they feel in the subject, and how much confidence they have in their cause.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Why, there are as many empty seats on your side of the House as on the other.

Mr. HUGHES. You are mistaken. Now, I maintain that this House is not invested with any judicial functions in reference to this Fort Snelling sale. I maintain that the Congress of the United States is to blame, if any one is to blame, for having ordered this sale. They invested the Secretary of War with full power to make the sale; and if he has made a bad bargain it matters not, provided he has acted honestly. I do not admit that he has made a bad bargain. I have heard it insinuated more than once that the very purchasers of this tract of land, in consequence of the hard times, are urging forward this proceeding, in the hope that Congress will set aside the sale, release them from their bargain, and give them back their $90,000. I do not know whether that is true or not; but, be that as it may, the Secretary of War was invested with this discretion by act of Congress, and has exercised it honestly, as is admitted; and there is no case, not for this House—for the House has nothing to do with it—but for any court having proper jurisdiction of the subject to deal with.

The idea advanced here to-night, that inadequacy of price is a sufficient ground for setting aside a contract or sale, is a proposition at which the merest tyro in forensic learning ought to blush. Sir, I deny it. If there is any principle well established by the uniform current of judicial decisions it is that inadequacy of price is no ground for setting aside a sale or contract.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Unless it is gross.

Mr. HUGHES. No matter how gross, unless it be connected with fraud. But, when we come to look into the question of inadequacy, we find that $90,000 has been given by these parties for this tract of land.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. They have only paid $30,000 of that sum down.

Mr. HUGHES. They are responsible for the residue. The gentleman is too good a lawyer not to know that the real estate is responsible for the residue, if they do not pay it.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. The land would not be liable for the residue if an absolute title was delivered on the first payment, and security taken.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the fact in this case? Has the title been delivered?

Mr. CLARK, of New York. It has not been.

Mr. HUGHES. Then the gentleman is arguing on a state of facts which does not exist, and I submit that that is hardly fair in a case of this kind. It is well enough to argue the case on the facts as they exist. Why introduce a statement of facts that do not exist, in order to predicate an argument against the Secretary of War?

Mr. Speaker, if I, as a member of this House, had believed that the Secretary of War had been guilty of corruption in this matter, I should have felt it my duty to offer articles of impeachment against him. If I had believed, upon investigation, that he had not been guilty of corruption, I would have come into this House and said so; I would not have attempted to shoot a Parthian arrow at him—to make a charge against him which this House has no right and no power to make, and which is wholly unsupported by the testimony. I regard this as another of the operations, of which we have had several this session, to make a little capital by getting up an investigating committee, and take a little testimony.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] has reminded us of his labors in that respect, and I am disposed to give him full credit for them. He is chairman of an investigating committee, which, at an expense of some three thousand dollars, has come to the sagacious conclusion that this House ought to discharge them from the further consideration of the particular subject. They have labored hard, have had a man in prison here, and have traveled over the country taking evidence, and at last have come to the solemn conclusion that "somebody was cheated." Well, sir, if the Government can afford to pay for investigations of that kind, to send men roving over the country to take testimony of that kind, it ought not to interfere with private citizens who have invested $90,000 in Government lands, to prejudice their purchase, impair their title, and keep their capital suspended and unprofitable to them, while the attention of the whole country is attracted to what is going on.

And just here, in conclusion, allow me to say, that the Government of the United States is no dealer in real estate for profit. There is no land broker's office connected with it. When the Government wants land for military purposes, it buys it, and buys it at a high price. When it has land of that description, for which it has no use, it sells it, and generally sells it at a sacrifice. It is not an object of the Government to make any money out of land estate, and to investigate the question as to whether the land sold for as much as it was worth. You might as well undertake to investigate whether the snag boats in the Mississippi, which are purchased by the Government, at a large price, and after being used, are generally sold for a hundredth part of what they cost—I say you might as well go into an investigation as to whether those boats have been sold for as much as they are worth. There is no instance on record where real estate owned by the Government has been sold for as much as it was worth. Why, then, has this, which brought more in proportion than any other, been sought out as a solitary exception?

I should have said nothing upon this subject but for the fact that other gentlemen have undertaken to make so much out of it. One witness stated, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] remarked, that he would "spend his pile" upon this property at four times the amount it sold for. Well, sir, it may be so, but it looks very much to me like the talk of a disappointed speculator; and I believe, from all the lights before me, that disappointment upon the part of certain individuals is at the bottom of this whole affair, by which $20,000 has been spent for the purpose of black-balling the Secretary of War, and for the passage by the House of a set of inoperative, impotent resolutions; for if the resolutions reported by the committee are passed unanimously, they will amount to nothing. Sir, if the committee had believed that there had been any corruption, if they had believed that there was any dishonesty, they would have reported resolutions which would have had some practical effect. But, sir, if you pass these resolutions it will still leave the contract untouched.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARK, of New York, obtained the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask the gentleman to yield the floor for a very few minutes.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I will yield the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have no disposition to participate in this debate; but it so happens that two of the parties implicated in these proceedings—the Secretary of War and one of the witnesses—are constituents and friends of mine; it is perhaps hardly proper that I should stand by and give a silent vote, without adding my humble testimony, especially in relation to one of them, who is perhaps known to but few members of this House, and to none so well as to myself. The question has been asked to-day, in the course of this debate, why the Secretary of War selected Mr. Heiskell as one of the agents for the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation? I think I can, in all sincerity and candor, answer that question satisfactorily to every gentleman here.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Will this come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes, by general consent, it will not be deducted.

Mr. HOPKINS. My answer would be this: I am sure, from my knowledge of the parties, and from the relations which have so long existed between them, there is no man living in whose integrity the Secretary of War reposes more absolute and unqualified confidence than in that of William King Heiskell. He has known him from boyhood, and I volunteer the assertion with entire confidence, that if this Fort Snelling property had been his own private property, amongst the numbers of persons known to him in Virginia he would have selected this very man to have made sale of it. His character has been known to me for thirty years. He has occupied various public positions, and, until I heard the debate here this day, I have never heard his integrity assailed, even by his bitterest political opponents.

It was, therefore, no matter of surprise in the community in which Governor Floyd has been born and raised, that he should have selected W. K. Heiskell as one of the agents to go to Fort Snelling, and participate in the sale of this property.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of War had but recently been installed in office when this sale was ordered to be made. The law under which the sale of the property was authorized, was passed in 1857. It was therefore important for a public officer having the entire responsibility of the sale to select, as the agent of sale, a man in whom he reposed entire confidence, a person of known personal integrity and honesty. So far as the Secretary of War is concerned, I have nothing to say. His defense has fallen into other hands. Two of my colleagues [Messrs. FAULKNER and LETCHER,] have vindicated him, if indeed, the evidence reported to this House had not done that.

But, sir, I must at least tender my thanks to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON,] and the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] for having interposed to save the Secretary of War, whose immediate representative I am, from the consequences of an ex parte proceeding of this House. He has had no opportunity of confronting his accusers or cross-examining the witnesses who have testified against him; nor have the purchasers, or commissioners to sell the property. The committee have proceeded against these parties in a private committee room in this House, and they have pronounced a verdict of condemnation without giving them an opportunity of being heard.

This much, sir, I have desired to say; this much was due, both to myself and to the gentlemen implicated. I am ready to submit the question to the House, with full confidence that they will—as I think the evidence does—fully exonerate and acquit the parties implicated.

Mr. CLARK, of New York, obtained the floor.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I am ready to go on with my remarks at this time. I want to have my resolutions reported.

The Clerk reported the resolutions, as follows:

1. Resolved, That the evidence reported by the select committee as to the recent sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling has failed to exhibit any fact or circumstance impeaching the personal or official integrity of the Secretary of War.

2. Resolved, That the management of the sale by the agents authorized by the Secretary of War to conduct the same, was injudicious and improper, and resilted, by reason of its want of publicity, in the exclusion of that competition among persons desiring to purchase, which, under the circumstances, should have been permitted.

3. Resolved, That the terms of sale adopted by the agents appointed by the Secretary of War to make said sale are disapproved, for the reasons, first, that a credit unauthorized by law was given to the purchaser; and, second, that the right of possession after the sale, reserved to the Government, was calculated to prevent a fair sale at a fair price.

4. Resolved, That the evidence taken by the select committee appointed under the authority of the resolution of this House of January 4, 1858, be transmitted to the Secretary of War, to the end that, in conjunction with the Attorney General of the United States, he may adopt such measures in respect of the sale as they shall be of opinion, in view of the facts developed by such evidence, that the public interest requires.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish when the question comes up directly for the action of the House, to submit some resolutions from the minority of the select committee, as a substitute for those reported by the majority. The resolutions of the minority are not before the House at all as yet.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I wish to say what I have to say upon the resolutions which have just been read from the Clerk's desk. I will be willing to accept any modifications of my resolutions that are reasonable and in harmony with their spirit.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that the gentleman offers his resolution as a substitute for those already pending.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions of the minority are presumed to be before the House, although, in point of fact, they have not been moved. The Chair supposes that the gentleman's object can be accomplished in the morning, by moving the resolutions of the minority of the committee before the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARK] moves his proposition.

Mr. FAULKNER. With that understanding, I move that the House adjourn; the gentleman yielding to me for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon the House (at twenty minutes past eleven o'clock, p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. T. H. BOCOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretaries of State and of the Navy, with the accompanying papers, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 11th of March, 1858, requesting the President "to communicate to the Senate any information in possession of any of the Executive Departments, in relation to alleged discoveries of guano in the year 1855, and the measures taken to ascertain the correctness of the same; and also any report made to the Navy Department in relation to the discovery of guano in Jarvis and Baker's Islands, with the charts, soundings, and sailing directions for those islands;" which, on motion of Mr. SEWARD, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and a motion by him to print it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. STUART. An act has been passed at this session for the relief of George M. Gordon, with regard to the assignment of certain land warrants. Those warrants are on file among the papers in the case. He desires to use the warrants under the law. I therefore move that he have leave to withdraw his papers.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SEWARD presented papers relative to a cargo of guano received by Schuyler and Livingston, in the bark Evadne, which was libeled by the Peruvian Minister and sold, and the proceeds deposited in the United States Trust Company, to abide the decision of the court; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and a motion by Mr. SEWARD to print the papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented the petition of Claude Samory, praying the confirmation of certain land titles; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HUNTER presented papers relative to the payment of certain volunteers called into service by the Governor of Florida in 1855 and 1856; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, presented a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying that the public lands may cease to be considered a source of public revenue, and be reserved hereafter for the use of actual settlers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MASON presented the petition of Ferdinand Coxe, late secretary of legation at Brazil, praying compensation for services rendered as chargé d'affaires at that court; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ST. REGIS INDIANS.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior communicate to the Senate such information as his Department may afford concerning any right or claim of the St. Regis Indians, now residing in the State of York, to any contingent, conditional, or other interest in the lands set apart for the New York Indians in Kansas, or in the Indian Territory; and whether the Canadian portion of the St. Regis Indians has any such interest.

CHAPLAINS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following resolution; which can lie over for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to pay to the several ministers of the gospel who have officiated as chaplains at the invitation of the Senate, during the present session, the sum of fifty dollars each.

I hope the Senate will allow me to say that I offer the resolution on my own motion, without consulting any gentleman who may appear to be interested.

The resolution lies over under the rules.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Ordered, That one thousand additional copies of the report of the Secretary of State, relating to foreign regulations of commerce, received from that Department on the 4th ultimo, be printed for the use of that Department.

CANADIAN CONSUL GENERAL'S FEES.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate what fees or charges the consul general for Canada is authorized to make and receive on goods or articles imported into the United States from Canada, under what law said fee or charge is made, the annual amount thereof, and how the same is disposed of.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 557) making supplemental appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1859, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BROWN. A majority of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 451) in relation to a railway on Pennsylvania avenue, in Washington city, in the District of Columbia, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment. I beg to remark that a minority of the committee, of which I am one, do not assent to that report.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 414) to reimburse the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, a sum of money advanced towards the construction of the Little Falls bridge, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I am also instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 227) authorizing the organization of a fire department in the District of Columbia, passed by the House of Representatives, with an amendment, to report it back and say that the committee recommend a non-concurrence with the amendment of the House of Representatives; and as it is important that the subject should be acted upon now, I hope the Senate will indulge me with a vote on the amendment. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. IVERSON. I have a dozen reports to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports must be received.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. C. C. No. 81) for the relief of the heirs of William Turvin, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 238) for the relief of Richard Tarvin;

A bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts;

A bill (H. R. No. 476) for the relief of James Rumph;

A bill (H. R. No. 480) for the relief of Dr. Ferdinand O. Miller;

A bill (H. R. No. 481) for the relief of Dinah Minis;

A bill (H. R. No. 570) for the relief of Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon;

A bill (H. R. No. 571) for the relief of David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. No. 575) for the relief of Robert A. Davidge.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia; which was agreed to:

A bill (H. R. No. 452) for the relief of Dr. Thomas Antisell; and

A bill (H. R. No. 506) for the relief of the administrator of Horatio Boulton, deceased.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 486) for the relief of Alonzo and Elbridge G. Colby, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 290) for the relief of the legal representatives of George Mayo, deceased, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads having previously made a report on the same case. The papers were subsequently withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims do not feel at liberty to reverse the report of the previous committee by which the claim was adjudged.

The committee was discharged.

Mr. FITZPATRICK, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of William Hutchinson, reported it without amendment, and that it ought not to pass.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Benjamin Ward, reported a bill (S. No. 421) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Benjamin Ward; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 59) in relation to courts, and the holding of the terms thereof, in the several Territories of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John R. Bartlett, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S.

No. 422) for the relief of John R. Bartlett. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. YULEE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 572) for the relief of Lewis W. Broadwell, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 419) for the relief of John Ferguson and others, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution to allow compensation to B. L. Bogan for the services of his son in the document-room of the Senate, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print a resolution of the corporation of Georgetown, and a memorial of citizens of Georgetown, relating to re-ceding a portion of that city to the county of Washington, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print resolutions of a meeting of citizens of Georgetown relative to re-ceding a portion of that city to the county of Washington, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred a motion to print resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange Association of Washington; a motion to print the memorial of the executive board of the American Indian Aid Association; a motion to print the message of the President in relation to the accounts of Edward F. Beale; a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Navy communicating Lieutenant Craven's report of explorations of the Atrato and Truando rivers; and a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Treasury relative to frauds on the revenue committed by the commercial house of Simon De Visser and José Villarrubia, of New Orleans, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the message of the President in relation to the seizure of the American bark Panchita, on the coast of Africa, reported in favor of it, and the motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Navy relative to the pay of certain retired naval officers, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the message of the President, with the correspondence, in relation to the arrest of William Walker by Commodore Paulding, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the petition of James H. Birch, jr., and the memorial of T. D. W. Youley, with regard to certain lands in Missouri, and the accompanying papers, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There was also referred to the Committee on Printing a motion to print the petition of Perry McDonough Collins, praying compensation for commercial researches in northern Asia, and an exploration of the Amoor river. We find by the papers, that the House of Representatives some one or two months since, called for information from the State Department upon the subject, received it, and printed it. The memorial and papers show, that under an appointment of the last Administration, as a commercial agent, an office, I believe, in regard to which there is no law providing a salary or pay unless by special act, and there was none I think in this case, he made these travels and has made this report since. The committee find nothing to print but the memorial, unless they print the report made by the State Department, which has already been printed by the House of Representatives. They find that the memorial is not lengthy at all, and the committee who will investigate the subject can very well do it without printing the memorial. We report adversely to the printing of the memorial.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GWIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 420) for the relief of James Collier; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MALLORY (at the request of Mr. HAYNE, who was sick) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Jane Perry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. IVERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (No. 48) for the payment of an unexpended balance to the State of Georgia for militia services; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. IVERSON. I hope the Senate will allow this resolution to pass at this time. I do not suppose that it will give rise to any debate whatever. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HUNTER. What is the joint resolution?

Mr. IVERSON. I will state it in a moment. On the 11th of August, 1842, $175,000 was appropriated to refund to the State of Georgia amounts she had paid to her militia companies called into service in the Creek, Seminole, and Cherokee country. Out of that appropriation she has been refunded all her payments with the exception of $7,112 94, which remains in the Treasury unexpended. The State of Georgia has, since the passage of that act, paid off a number of other companies, and filed the claims in the Auditor's office; but the Auditor returns that the money cannot be applied to the payment of those companies, or to refund back to the State the amount, because the act of 1842 limited the payment to the payments that had then been made by the State. The State has subsequently paid off other companies; and the object of this joint resolution is simply to appropriate the unexpended balance of the act of 1842 to the amounts the State has paid since the passage of that law—that is all.

Mr. KING. I think this subject should be understood. The reasons for the payment may not have been the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, "Is there objection to the consideration to-day?"

Mr. KING. I think it had better lie over. I object to its consideration.

COMMANDER M. F. MAURY.

Mr. MASON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 31) authorizing Commander M. F. Maury to accept a gold medal awarded to him by the Emperor of Austria, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. It is a very short resolution, and I ask that it be put upon its passage now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which is as follows:

Resolved, &c. That Commander M. F. Maury, of the United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the great gold medal of the arts and sciences recently presented to him by his Majesty the Emperor of Austria.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TITLE TO LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. STUART. I moved to reconsider, a few days ago, the vote passing the bill (H. R. No. 300) declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases. Since that time, the committees of both Houses have agreed upon a substitute for the first section. It is very important that the bill shall be passed now, in order that the amendment may be agreed to by the House of Representatives. I entered the motion to reconsider some days ago. I wish to reconsider the bill that I may offer this substitute for the first section. It will take no more than five minutes.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I now move this substitute for the first section of the bill:

That when proof has been, or shall hereafter be filed in the Pension Office, during the lifetime of a claimant, establishing to the satisfaction of that office, his or her right to a warrant for military services, and such warrant has not been, or may not hereafter be issued until after the death of the claimant, and all such warrants as have been heretofore issued subsequent to the death of the claimant, the title of such warrant shall vest in the widow, if there be one, and if there be no widow, then in the heirs or legatees of the claimant; and all such warrants, and all other warrants issued pursuant to existing laws, shall be treated as personal chattels, and may be conveyed by assignment of such widow, heirs, or legatees, or by the legal representatives of the deceased claimant, for the use of such heirs or legatees only.

The amendment was agreed to, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTIAN INDIANS.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I desire to ask the Senate to take up and act on the reconsideration of a little bill which was objected to by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KING;] and I am sure I have his assent to take it up. It will be disposed of in a minute. I understand that the Senator withdraws his objection, but only wishes to state a fact or two in regard to it. I move that the Senate take up the motion of the Senator from New York to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 323) to confirm the sale of the reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians, was passed.

The motion to take up was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote passing the bill.

Mr. KING. A day or two after I made this motion, I asked the Senate to take up the question of reconsideration, but other business set it aside, and it was not attended to. When this bill came up I knew nothing about it, had never heard of it before, and there was no report and no statement of fact in relation to it. It came up on objection day, and I thought it had better lie over for a statement of facts. The Senator from Arkansas had a talk with me about it, and misunderstanding me or supposing that I waived my objection, he had it considered, but I did not intend to withdraw my objection—I wanted more information about it. The bill passed under those circumstances, and I moved to reconsider. Since then I have had a conversation with the Senator from Arkansas. My opinion is, that the bill ought to be reconsidered and placed upon the Calendar to take its fate upon such discussion or such exposition of the facts as shall be made in the case. I have inquired, as I stated to the gentlemen interested in it I would do, of the Delegate from Kansas about the bill; my objections to its passage were, that I had seen in the papers a good many statements about the value of these lands, and that in such transactions with the Indians, speculations are gone into for the purpose of making money rather than for any public interest. I stated to them that I would inquire of him, and be guided by his opinions. The Delegate from Kansas states to me that the Indians themselves are opposed to this sale, that the people in the vicinity are opposed to it, and that the bill ought not to pass. He stated that the price was not such as would justify him in making an imputation of any fraud in relation to the contract or transaction; but that it was less than the land was worth, and that the Indians could get more for it, and that they were unwilling to sell it. The sale was made under some arrangements, I suppose, which were not entirely legal, or they would not find it necessary to come to Congress to pass it. I think it better that the bill should be reconsidered; and that then, upon a statement of facts, it should be considered and decided by the Senate.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I understand the Senator from New York to desire some explanation from the proper committee of the facts of this case; and I will give them in as brief a manner as possible. This little band of Indians, numbering some thirty or forty souls in all—half a dozen families—occupied, by an arrangement between the United States and the Delaware Indians, four sections of land, located about five miles from the city of Fort Leavenworth.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will my friend from Arkansas pardon me for interrupting him? I know the Senator is very familiar with these subjects; but I take it for granted that the Senate will vote down the motion for reconsideration without further explanation.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I do not wish to lose the bill by the unfriendly kindness of talking when the humor of the Senate is in favor of taking the question; and I will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois, which I know he makes on a full knowledge of the facts of the case. I just ask the Senate to take the vote without any further explanation. I believe they are pretty well acquainted with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is: "Will the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed?"

Mr. KING. I had some reasons for believing that this bill should be reconsidered. My opinion is that official personages intrusted with the charge of these matters ought not to be speculators in the property of the Indians, who are, to some extent, under their care. The gentleman who was the purchaser of this land was the district attorney of Kansas Territory. He was brought into connection with these people through the position he occupied, by means of which he was enabled to acquire their confidence. The Delegate tells me that the Indians themselves are opposed to this transaction. That the value of these lands is very considerably beyond the price to be paid, I have not a doubt. I state that because of the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois, that this bill is to be passed by the Senate without any reference to the facts of the case, and without any statement of them. We all know how bills are often got through the Senate, and through both branches of the Legislature, simply by the application of persons who go about to Senators and solicit them to vote for them; and thus, without any knowledge of the facts, the bills are acted upon by the two Houses. In this mode, without investigation, and without discussion, the very worst forms of bills pass both Houses of Congress. I thought it was a matter of suspicion in this case that no report or statement of facts accompanied the bill. There have been various facts stated to me; and that there is considerable interest taken in the passage of this bill, I know from the solicitation that has been made to me to waive my objection, in such a manner as rather to confirm me in the opinion that substantial and good objection exists to it.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. Houstons] was at one time opposed to this bill—and he will make that explanation, if it is desired—on account of some objection made by a missionary there; but since that time, I understand, this particular missionary has been conciliated by an agreement to pay him $2,300. I do not see why, if that man has a right to the property, and a contract for it, he should be constrained to make these payments to outside parties, to obtain their consent to the acquisition of his rights. It would seem to me that instead of being a reason for the passage of this bill, it would rather be an objection to it. While I have no other knowledge of this case than such as has come to me incidentally and accidentally, the more I have seen of it, and the more I have heard of it, the more I have come to the belief that it is one of those land speculations in the neighborhood of Leavenworth that are not entitled to the sanction or consideration of Congress, and that the matter had better be disposed of in the usual way—by a treaty with the Indians. With this explanation, I am of course content that the Senate shall dispose of it in any way they may see proper. I have rather regretted, on account of the unpleasantness of being brought into collision with anybody, that I had incidentally said anything about the case; but entertaining these views, I felt constrained to express them, and to express my opinions against the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. My attention, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has been called to this subject, and I believe I understand it pretty thoroughly, and have examined it with some degree of care. When it was first presented to me it was by some Indian and by a missionary; and I then imbibed a very strong prejudice against the claim. I thought it was well enough to make myself acquainted with both sides, and I had an opportunity of doing so. I thought in the first instance that perhaps the Moravians, a very respectable community to whom the missionary belonged, had possessed an advantage with these few families of Christian Indians, and had erected buildings for which they wished to be remunerated. The sale was made to Mr. Isaacs by the Indians, for it was considered that they had the right of making sales. The lands had been patented to them in their individual, and not in their tribal characters, as I understand, with a right of making a disposition of them; else patents would not have been given to them. They are only a few families. The Indians represented to me at the same time that the missionary was present with them, that the white people had taken possession of their lands, that they had fired into their houses, that they had killed an Indian in the house of the chief, that their lives were threatened if they did not immediately leave the land. Mr. Isaacs who had been employed by the Indians to defend their titles, found it impossible to retain their lands for them. They had granted permission to some man for a slaughter-pen within their reservation, and the consequence was, that so soon as he got there he claimed the right of preëmption, and said the land belonged to the squatters. They have thrust themselves upon it; they have slaughtered the timber of the Indians; they have made great waste with their lands, they have taken life there, and they are threatening to drive the Indians off, and will do so, unless some power intervenes for their security, and none are there capable of doing it, because they are all interested in the common business of possessing land, right or wrong.

In this situation, the Indians proposed to make a sale of their land, and Mr. Isaacs agreed to give them all they asked at the time, which was, I think some seventeen dollars an acre, $43,000. He made a regular purchase; the papers are all in due form. He deposited, as is certified, $40,000 and some cents in the Bank of Missouri; that is there now to their credit. The Indians stated, or their interpreter for them told me, they wished to realize their money, and if they could not purchase a tribal interest with the Delawares, they desired to go back to Canada, and situate themselves there. Mr. Isaacs, as I understand, had an interview with the missionary, and the missionary agreed that if he would pay the Moravians for the price of their improvements, the cost they had been to them, they would withdraw all objection and be satisfied. After that, the missionary, who was here, and who spoke to me, went to the Mission Board in Pennsylvania, at Bethlehem, I think, and from thence addressed a letter to me, stating that if their property was secured, or they were recompensed for the outlay they had made, $2,300, they would be perfectly satisfied. Mr. Isaacs deposited his obligation. I held it in my hands. I handed it to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I believe he has it now.

This is the true state of the case. I am satisfied that these Indians will be driven off; that it was a liberal price and a bona fide transaction at the time it was made, and the question now simply is whether this sale shall be confirmed or these Indians shall be sacrificed, and the lands claimed by preëmption, so that they will be unable to litigate in regard to them, and will have to go off to the Delawares, or somewhere else, without the means of securing an abiding place on earth, and the rest of them be slaughtered by intruders. The question is whether this sale shall be ratified; whether these few families shall be benefited by the receipt of this amount of money, so as to enable them to purchase a location amongst the Delawares or return to Canada. This sale is to be confirmed under the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior, so as to secure to the Indians the realization of this contract. That is the way I understand it, and I believe I am literal in the statement I have made of the facts. I will say to my friend from New York that I really intend no collision, no controversy. I am satisfied he was actuated by the purest motives. I am sure that his prejudice was not stronger than mine was, until I examined into and investigated the case. It was referred to the Indian Committee; and I believe they were united in opinion that it was a fair, bona fide transaction, to be executed in good faith; that it was liberal at the time the land was purchased, and that no injustice was done to the Indians whatever. That is my candid opinion.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

BRITISH AGGRESSIONS.

Mr. HUNTER. I move now to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MASON. I think my colleague is rather exacting with his appropriation bill. The morning hour, by general understanding, if not by resolution, does not terminate till one o'clock. I want, and I ask his permission to do so, if I am obliged to do it, to call up the resolutions of the Committee on Foreign Relations, with reference to British aggressions on our commerce, that they may be made the order of the day for Saturday. I hope he will allow me to do that.

Mr. HUNTER. If I withdraw the motion for one, I shall have to withdraw it entirely.

Mr. MASON. If debate ensue on it, I shall have to withdraw it.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MASON. I ask that the resolutions of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in reference to British aggressions in the Gulf of Mexico, be made the special order for Saturday, for twelve o'clock, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection, if we get through with the appropriation bills, but I am opposed to making any special orders to take precedence of them.

Mr. MASON. I consider it my duty to the country, as well as to the Senate, to make this motion. If we are to adjourn on the day agreed upon, I think it is indispensable that these resolutions should be disposed of one way or the other. I will vary the time, and make it one o'clock on Saturday instead of twelve o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first question is on taking up the resolutions.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to make them the special order for one o'clock on Saturday, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Brown, Chinggis, Crittenden, Davis, Douglas, Fitz, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Houston, Iverson, Kennedy, Mason, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Siddle, Thomas of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yale—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, King, Pearce, Pugh, Seward, Simmons, Traubull, Wade, and Wilson—24.

So the motion was agreed to.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HENRY, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and resolutions:

An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes;

An act to vest the title to certain warrants for land in George M. Gordon;

A resolution to correct an error in a certain act approved May 11, 1858; and

A resolution for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay.

DAILY RECESS.

Mr. ALLEN. I propose that the daily session shall commence at ten o'clock in the morning, and close at six, for the remainder of the session. We see how little was done last evening by having a night session; and we shall get as many hours for business by the arrangement I propose as by coming in the evening.

Mr. HUNTER. I must object to that. If we meet at ten o'clock, what time will the Committee on Finance have to prepare bills? The committee have now to meet at half past nine o'clock, and it takes us until eleven o'clock to prepare business.

Mr. ALLEN. The committee can meet after six o'clock in the evening; or, as the mornings are very long, they can rise a little earlier than usual for three or four days.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is a proposition to change the rules; and, if objection be made, it cannot be done without a day's notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes it to be in order.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If objected to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution passed the other day was, that a recess should be taken for the remainder of the session until otherwise ordered by the Senate. The motion of the Senator from Rhode Island is to change it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My objection was, that it became a rule, and therefore a day's notice must be given before it could be changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. ALLEN. I think we shall do business better by the course I propose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded that the Senate meet at ten o'clock, and adjourn at six o'clock, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. STUART. That motion cannot be made to-day, except by unanimous consent. It changes the time of meeting. There must be notice given of it for one day. It changes the rules of the Senate, in that respect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Michigan be good enough to suggest what rule he refers to?

Mr. ALLEN. I propose, then, that we meet at eleven o'clock, and sit until six o'clock.

Mr. STUART. To that I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded that the Senate meet at eleven o'clock, and adjourn at six o'clock, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. I would inquire whether, under such an order as that, it would not be the duty of the Chair, when six o'clock came, to adjourn the Senate without motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would.

Mr. COLLAMER. Then our evening sessions might be broken up from this time forward through the rest of the session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be in the power of the Senate to make any order it chooses.

Mr. COLLAMER. We should have to make a new order.

Mr. BAYARD. As regards the time of adjournment, it seems to me it is a subject for the decision of the Senate depending upon the state of the business at the time the motion to adjourn is made. We should not prescribe beforehand an arbitrary hour at which to adjourn, without reference to the state of the business. We might be just on the eve of the close of a debate on a bill. I do not think any hour of adjournment ought to be fixed except by the will of the Senate on the particular day.

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw my motion; and instead of it, I move simply to rescind the order for a recess.

Mr. HUNTER. I merely wish to say, in regard to that, that I am willing to abide by the sense of the Senate, whatever it is, and in whatever mode they think they can transact the business with most comfort. My own opinion is, that it is best to take a recess; but I have no feeling about it, provided they give us time to work in committee. I object to meeting sooner than eleven.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will say from and after to-day, I think it will be better.

Mr. HOUSTON. I only wish to remark to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that perhaps the morning business will occupy time until he will have ample opportunity of attending to the business of the committee; and the Senate could go on while the committee would be in their room attending to matters. If the meeting at an earlier hour would not interfere with the committee, I make that suggestion. I really think a recess is not favorable to the progress of business. We have tried it for many years.

Mr. COLLAMER. Do I understand that the motion now is to meet at ten o'clock, and have no recess?

Mr. ALLEN. To meet at eleven o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to rescind so much of the order of the Senate as provides for a recess from four to six o'clock.

Mr. COLLAMER. That is all the order there is; and the simple question is whether we shall rescind that order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. That we must have night sessions from this time forward is perfectly certain. Now, the whole question is, shall we have them with a recess or without it? It seems to me to be perfectly clear that, by obtaining dinner at some reasonable and usual hour, we shall be much more likely properly to discharge our business at evening sessions than we shall without.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler,

Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Douglass, Durkee, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Hayne, Houston, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Kennedy, King, Pearce, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Mason, Pugh, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—23.

So the resolution directing a recess was rescinded.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed a joint resolution authorizing Commander M. F. Maury to accept a gold medal awarded to him by the Emperor of Austria; and it was signed by the Vice President.

MEXICAN PROTECTORATE.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise for the purpose of moving to take up the resolution I introduced some time since in relation to a protectorate over Mexico. In doing so I have a very few remarks to make, and I hope the Senate will consider them in the light in which I intend to present them. The introduction of my resolution was in all good faith and sincerity, believing that the necessities of Mexico were such, in connection with the frontier of the United States, and particularly the State which I have the honor in part to represent, that it was a duty upon me to initiate some measure on the subject. I saw that the disorganized situation of Mexico was well calculated to invite aggression from surrounding countries, and to provoke aspiring spirits and men who were disposed to depredate and maraud upon a feeble nation. This induced me to present the resolution for the consideration of the Senate of the United States. As I have said, it was done in all good faith, believing that it was a subject to which the attention of the nation ought to be called, both in justice to its relations to, and the distracted condition of, Mexico. It has met with disfavor in this body, I grant you, for which I have no reflections to make; but that does not impair my opinion as to the necessity of a protectorate, or at least of some action on the part of this Government.

Mr. President, we are apprised of the fact that persons are now making incursions into the Republic of Mexico, which, in its defenseless situation, is unable to repel them. Depredations, violence, and wrong, will pervade the whole frontier unless some interposition is had. Even the moral effect of taking the subject under consideration by this body would deter adventurers from going to prey on Mexico. If it were known that the eye of the United States was placed on them, persons would abstain, who would be stimulated to aggression if you withhold all expression of opinion that it is necessary for the United States to look to that country. If you do nothing, the tendency will be to encourage more adventurers in continual enterprises of wrong and robbery upon the inhabitants. Moreover, it is impossible to restrain the Indians from attacking the defenseless Mexicans; and, when you superadd the marauding parties actually invading that country, what must their condition be? It was sufficiently deplorable before, but now it is rendered intolerable.

Mr. President, if you do not take it into consideration, and refer the subject for investigation to have it looked into and reported upon by a committee of this body, or by some branch of this Government, you may rely upon it that things will become worse from day to day; and not only that, but if this nation, to whom the proposition has been presented in all good faith and sincerity, does not think proper to act in the matter, men who may have power to accomplish something, feeling stimulated by motives of humanity, may undertake such an enterprise, the necessity of which they would deprecate if the Government would only consider it in a proper point of view. I should not feel myself restrained at any age to interpose in behalf of humanity, and to arrest the cruelties on, and to stop the murders of, a defenseless people. It is a duty due to humanity; and if this nation will not exercise the functions of fraternity to a neighboring nation to whom they are under treaty obligations, and individuals should step forth who are willing to give their lives and their blood to redeem a people from thralldom and anarchy, they will not deserve the opprobrious epithet of filibusters, who invade a country for the purpose of depredating, robbing, and committing sacrilege, and burning cities. Sir, any citizen of the United States who can accomplish in this respect what the Government withholds its power from doing, or even regarding with a proper consideration, will be vindicated against the charge of marauding or filibustering.

It is with this view I announce to the Senate that I wish for an expression of this body, to say whether they will consider the subject, or will leave Mexico to float on in its downward course to ruin, or to a cataract that awaits it—to that gulf from which nothing can extricate it. I do hope that I shall at least be allowed to receive an expression of the Senate, by yeas and nays, on taking up the resolution.

Mr. HUNTER. Let the question be taken on taking it up; and if we decide against it, I hope the Senator will consider that conclusive.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will, if I get the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I simply rise to say that I hope the resolution will be taken up, and made the special order of the day at the same time with the resolutions of the Senator from Virginia. They seem to be intimately connected, and I hope they will be considered at the same time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I only wish to refer the subject to a special committee, as indicated in the resolution. A report cannot be made on it at the present session; but in the interval developments may be made, and we may have the means of acquiring information more satisfactory to this body.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clingman, Crittenden, Fitch, Hale, Houston, Johnson of Tennessee, Mallory, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Simmons, Stidell, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, and Wade—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Clark, Clay, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Green, Hamlin, Hammond, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Jones, Kennedy, King, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Thompson of Kentucky, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—32.

So the Senate refused to consider the resolution.

STATUE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. PEARCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 50) authorizing the President to designate a site for the equestrian statue of Washington, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask the Senate to put the joint resolution on its passage at once. I presume there will be no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which authorizes the President to cause the equestrian statue of George Washington, contracted for with Clark Mills, to be placed in the grounds north of the executive mansion; and also, to remove the statue of Thomas Jefferson to such other place in the public grounds as he shall think suitable.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN K. ROWAN.

Mr. POLK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 49) to correct an error in the act for the relief of Stephen R. Rowan, approved June 1, 1858; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. POLK. I hope the Senate will indulge me in passing the resolution at once. In a bill we passed a few days ago there was a mistake; "1856" was inserted in place of "1857"; and this is merely to remedy that defect. There can be no objection to the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which directs the act for the relief of Stephen R. Rowan, approved June 1, 1858, be so corrected as to read as follows:

"That the attorney of the United States of America for the southern district of Illinois be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter satisfaction of a judgment rendered by the district court of the United States for the said southern district of Illinois, at its June term, A. D.

1857, in favor of the United States of America against Stephen R. Rowan, on his paying all the costs in said case."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859.

Mr. BROWN. I move an amendment, to come in after line two hundred and six. I report it from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I thought there was an amendment noticed upon last night when we adjourned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The Senator from Tennessee submitted an amendment, which was rejected by the Senate before the adjournment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. But I submitted three propositions.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator can only offer one at a time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee submitted in form only one proposition. The Senator from Mississippi proposes the following amendment:

For painting the hand rails and iron work of said bridge $400; and the bridge is hereby placed under the protection of Georgetown, with power to regulate the speed of travel, and the passage of droves of cattle over the same, but no tolls shall be charged.

Mr. BROWN. This relates to the Little Falls bridge, which was built at a cost of $108,000 to the Government. It has been paid for, but a portion of the wood work, and all the iron work is without paint, and it is liable to rust and decay. The sum is a very small one. The Government has no one to take charge of it, and therefore the latter part of the proposition, in the judgment of the committee, was necessary, to give some sort of protection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of the surveyor general of Washington Territory shall be $3,500 a year from the commencement of the present fiscal year; and there is hereby appropriated so much as may be requisite for that purpose.

In 1855, while the appropriation bill was pending, the salary of the surveyor general of Washington Territory was $3,500, and a motion was made by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT,] I think, to increase the salary of the surveyor general of New Mexico to $4,000. Then an amendment was put on to apply that to the surveyor general of Washington. The amendment to the amendment prevailed, but the original amendment did not, and thus the surveyor general of Washington, instead of having his salary increased, got it reduced, which was not the intention of the mover at all. The matter is explained in a letter of the Delegate of the Territory. This proposition restores the salary to what it was before.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to offer an amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs:

For the contingent expenses of the Senate, to wit: For miscellaneous items, $5,500.

The object of the amendment is to cover the expense incurred in the mileage and per diem of witnesses summoned before the committee of investigation into the sale of military reserves in the vicinity of Fort Crawford.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to offer an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in all cases of judgment and decrees, in any territorial court of the United States, now rendered, or hereafter to be rendered, and from which there might be a writ of error or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, there may be prosecuted such writ of error or appeal within the time and under the other restrictions limited by law, to said Supreme Court, notwithstanding such Territory may, after such judgments and decrees, have been admitted into the Union as a State; and said Supreme Court shall, when the same is decided, direct the mandate to such court as the nature of the writ of error or appeal, in their judgment, may require.

There is an objection that this is incongruous to the bill. That is true; but it requires immediate legislation, resulting from the admission of Minnesota. It requires some provision for the appeals which may be taken from the superior court of the late Territory to the Supreme Court of the United States. Unless something be done justice may be obstructed in that new State. The provision embodied in the bill admitting the State into the Union only applied to appeals heretofore taken, but it does not apply to appeals that may be taken; and, as this provision requires immediate passage, the Committee on the Judiciary ask that it may be put on this bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I am told that the House of Representatives has very little to do; has passed all the appropriation bills; and a separate bill on this subject would doubtless pass. I am opposed to loading this bill with measures of legislation. Others will start up; and we shall never get through with it. If we can once get rid of this bill we may see light for the future; we may get along with the others; but I see no prospect at this rate of ever concluding it. There is a great deal of other legislation that doubtless would be very useful, and ought to be passed, but not on the appropriation bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN. This is only urged on the ground that it is a measure of immediate necessity. Any other useful legislation would, of course, be offered in a separate bill; but it is necessary for this new State, to prevent the obstruction of justice there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to offer an amendment to this bill, with some hope of having it passed, and partly with a view of answering some objections that were urged to an amendment of a similar character that I offered to the loan bill. I should not take this occasion to answer those objections if an opportunity had been afforded me to do so when the bill was up; but, some day or two after that bill had passed, the chairman of the Committee on Finance took occasion to assail my proposition, as I thought, with some degree of unmerited severity; and I suppose he intended some portion of his remarks to apply to me personally. He said that I had endeavored, by a cunning device, to try to largely increase the schedules, which were above the average. When I offered that amendment, I stated that my object was simply to prevent frauds by the undervaluation of imported merchandise.

Mr. HUNTER. Before the debate goes on I should like to know what the amendment is, that I may see whether it is in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am going to propose it, and I suppose it is in order; but, before I do propose it, I wish to state why it is in order. I know the question of order was raised on the other bill, but I supposed it would not be raised on this. My amendment is to prevent the undervaluation of foreign imports.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear the amendment. We have a right to hear that first.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I have a right to make some explanatory remarks before the amendment is read. I have understood, though perhaps I am not correctly informed, that the House of Representatives, at the last Congress, decided that the appropriation bills were in the nature and character of revenue bills, and must originate in that House; and therefore, the objection which was taken to my amendment to the loan bill, does not apply to it when offered to the appropriation bill which has originated in the House of Representatives. This bill is certainly subject to be amended in the form I propose. Although the objection may have lain to the amendment as applied to the loan bill, because that bill originated in the Senate; yet, if the nature of this bill is one raising revenue, it comes within the provision of the Constitution which allows us to amend such bills.

Mr. HUNTER. I must ask the decision of the Chair. If it is in order, of course I have no objection to make; but if it is not, I must object, for we are anxious to get on with the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not suppose I shall be allowed to reply, unless I am in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I must say that I do not see any ground for complaint that the honorable Senator from Rhode Island is out of order. He certainly has a right to discuss the bill; and, if there is no amendment before the Senate, the question is on the bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) Undoubtedly it is more regular for a Senator to send up his amendment before he makes any remarks on it; but the Chair knows of no rule of the Senate which would compel him to send his amendment to the desk to be read before he states the substance of it, or makes any other statement in regard to it that he chooses. The Chair does not feel himself authorized to say that a Senator must send his amendment to the desk and have it read to the Senate before he can make any comments upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I supposed I was in order, but it seems to be exceedingly difficult for any Senator to say anything on these questions, and keep within the rules of order, except the Senator from Virginia. When the river and harbor bills were up, it was perfectly in order for him to discuss the merits of this proposition that had been passed upon two or three days before. Now, I am going to vindicate myself from the charge of any scheme in the proposition I offered to protect and encourage certain departments of industry by largely increasing the duties on the higher schedules, while they were very highly increased on the lower schedules comprising articles which were employed in manufactures. In order to do this, I have drawn up a section that I wish to have put in this amendment, making a different classification of the imports—such a one as was recommended by the late Secretary of the Treasury to the last Congress, after mature reflection and deliberation, with a view of preventing undervaluations, or placing dutiable goods under schedules where they do not properly belong. I will read the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to show that the amendment I am going to offer, and in which I hope to get the assent of the Senator from Virginia, is sanctioned by him:

"In carrying into effect the tariff of 1846, considerable difficulty has been encountered under the eight schedules of that act applying different rates of duties on the merchandise embraced in each. The difficulty, instead of diminishing as the adjustment of the questions arising at the Treasury and in the courts takes place, seems to increase, owing to the ingenuity of foreign manufacturers and merchants in mingling materials and modifying fabrics, giving them new names, &c. In remodeling the tariff, I think it would be proper to retain schedule A of that act, and constitute another schedule, to embrace iron, manufactures of iron, steel, &c., and all fabrics of silk, wool, cotton, flax, or hemp, and to impose a duty on the same of twenty-five or thirty per cent."

And then he places everything else in another schedule. Now, what I propose with reference to this recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, is:

The goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, shall be put into five classes. The articles of importation included in schedules A, B, C, and D, of the existing tariff law, and all other textile fabrics subject to duty, shall be placed in class No. 1, and a duty levied thereon of — per cent.

That embraces the four schedules above the average, and which the Senator from Virginia thinks I am inclined, by my process, to largely increase the duties upon. If the Senator thinks it wise to so modify this classification, and put them all into one schedule, I have left the rate blank, in order that he may fill it himself with any rate he thinks proper. I propose this, not as a means of raising the rates of duty, but as a means of stopping frauds. I am willing to submit it to the Senator from Virginia to say what, in his judgment, should be the rates imposed on these four schedules of goods. I never have been able to see, and I doubt whether he has ever been able to see any reason for making these different schedules, excepting so far as the liquors are concerned, and they are now brought down. Whether this list shall embrace brandies and liquors, I am perfectly willing to leave that Senator to determine; but so far as the different classes of dry goods are scattered into three or four schedules differing in the rates of duty, I never could see any reason for it, and doubt whether there is any living man who can tell any. In the schedule paying fifteen per cent. now, you find all velvets of silk and cotton. What reason is there for putting silk and cotton velvets into the fifteen per cent. schedule, instead of the twenty-four per cent. one, where most of the dry goods are?

I have, then, said that the other schedules as they are now enumerated shall stand as they are, with the exception of schedules F and C, which now pay twelve and eight per centum, respectively; and I propose to put ten per centum on them, and I propose to increase schedule H from four to five per centum. The Senator accused me of trying to favor these low schedules, and to get less additional duty on those articles which are used in manufactures, and which are nearly free. Instead of that, I propose to raise them a little, in order to bring them within the decimal rule. If the Senator will admit that there is a propriety in the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury of putting these goods into one schedule, that the ingenuity of men may not be exerted to evade the duty on them, I trust that he will admit that this is a good provision; and if he fixes the duty at such a rate as, in his judgment, will give a fair revenue, he will not accuse any friend of the industry of the country with attempting indirectly to raise the rates of duty. I say he may put the rate of twenty, or twenty-five, or thirty per cent., just as he pleases.

When I offered a similar proposition last week, I urged upon the Senate that, in the present state of our revenue, there should be some means provided, at least, to stop the frauds upon it; that we should not go on borrowing money to meet the ordinary expenditures of Government without taking some action to prevent frauds, which every one, I think, who has examined the subject, will say, are now perpetrated by undervaluations to the extent of from seven to fifteen millions annually. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not throw this off by a mere technical objection as to where the bill originated, and then get rid of the force of the argument by saying that those who advocated it had some secret purpose which they were not willing to avow. I undertake to carry out any proposition I make in good faith. I stated, when I first suggested this measure, that the rates of duty to be collected on the different schedules might be fixed at such a percentage as would, in all human probability, meet the wants of the Government. I ask no more. I am perfectly willing to change the schedules, and put them all into one. The present rates imposed on them now are twenty-five and three fourths per cent. If the Senator thinks home valuation, instead of foreign valuation, would so far increase them as to get too much money, I am willing that he should put the rate at twenty per cent., if he believes that will give money enough; but these different schedules deserve the same rates so far as any incidental encouragement is given to the industry of our own country. Nobody can pretend that one class of business should have one rate and another another. If that is called equality, I do not know what inequality is. Besides, so far as the danger of undervaluation is concerned, those descriptions of goods that are least liable to undervaluation have now the largest rates of duty; but I am willing they should, and I rather think they ought all to be put in one schedule.

I will now say something as to the assertion of the Senator from Virginia about the change I propose being entirely novel. He says that, from the foundation of this Government, the foreign cost has been the basis for the dutiable value in levying the duties in this country on all dutiable imports.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not say all dutiable imports. I said that, from 1795, the ad valorem duties had been levied in that way.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course the Senator meant ad valorem duties. Was there any change in 1795 from what had previously been the course?

Mr. HUNTER. I think there was; that was my information at the Department—from 1795 down.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said that the principle I ingrafted was a new principle; that the foreign value, excluding the freight and all incidental charges, had been the uniform practice of the Government from its origin. I had previously had a conversation with him on this subject, and referred him to a report I made on a petition for the return of overpaid duties, in which I thought I had pretty clearly proved that the home valuation has always been the true rule of our laws. He said, however, that he was willing to go before the country on the position he then assumed; and to my utter surprise he used very many of the arguments that I have seen in pamphlets and newspapers in reply to that very report, to show that the freight, as part of the dutiable value, had always been excluded. Now, I will call the attention of the Senator and the Senate to the history of the modes of levying duties. I have got the first law passed on this subject in the United States, to see which of us is correct about the principle on which duties have been levied at the outset. I say that, at least for the first forty years of the history of this Government, the principle involved in the amendment I propose was nearer complied with by the early laws than the principle for which he contends. In the first act, which was passed July 4, 1789, this phraseology is used: "on all other goods, wares, and merchandise, five per centum on the value thereof at the time and place of importation." That, surely, has no reference to the foreign cost in any foreign port; it is the cost at the time and place of importation in the port of this country. I do not say that this means the market value at that place as sold in open market, which would include the duty as among the elements of value; but I think the fair construction of that law on its face would be, that it included every increment of value up to the time of entry at the port of entry. I take it, the Senator and myself do not disagree about that. If we do, I hope he will state his opinion now.

The general rates of ad valorem duties in the first bill passed in 1789 (with the single exception of a discriminating duty in favor of goods imported in American vessels and four-wheel carriages, which seem to have had an extra rate of duty on them,) were ten per cent., seven and a half per cent., and five per cent. By the way, I may say here that a very large list of specific duties was embraced in that bill. In the following month an act was passed in reference to the mode of valuation, to which I beg to call attention:

"That the ad valorem rates of duty on all goods, wares, and merchandise, at the place of importation, shall be estimated by adding twenty per cent. to the actual cost thereof if imported from the Cape of Good Hope, or from any place beyond the same; and ten per cent. on the actual cost thereof if imported from any other place or country, exclusive of all charges."

I say that that ten per cent. and twenty per cent. are items sufficient to cover the duties, and to cover the interest on the voyages, in each of these cases, which are fair charges upon the value of the importations when they are landed. The duties under that act average seven and a half per cent., and the ten per cent. additional on cost of goods imported from Europe would cover the amount of duties and the interest on the voyage, and the twenty per cent. additional on voyages from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, which then took about eighteen months, would cover the duties on those goods and the interest on their voyage. That brings the valuation to the fair cost of the goods, duty paid, in the market of importation.

In 1795, there was another clause that the Senator has referred to, not repealing, however, this ten per cent. or twenty per cent. provision, but which said this:

"That after the said last day of March, the valuation of all goods, wares, and merchandise, subject to payment of duties ad valorem, shall be made on the actual cost at the place of exportation, including all charges, commissions, outside packages, and insurance only excepted."

Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if that includes the freight? You are to include all charges except outside packages, commissions, and insurance. Does that exclude the freight? From this phraseology, as I commented before, taking the place of exportation, has resulted the blunder about freight; but there has not been a law passed since 1795 down to the present day, but what, fairly considered without prejudice, would not justly and legitimately include the freight. I hazard nothing in saying that.

The Senator from Virginia, not content with the general practice on which he relied, quoted from the decision of some court, and stated that there would be great inequalities in the ports of this country if the freight was included. He instanced that New York was more eligibly situated in reference to Liverpool than other ports, and freights would be more from Liverpool to New Orleans than from Liverpool to New York. Well, that is an argument I have seen in the newspapers; but I have yet to learn, that taking all the ports in the world, New York is any nearer to them than Charleston is. It may be nearer to some ports with which we have a great deal of commerce, but it is no nearer to many ports of the world with which we have commerce than any other of our ports. This idea results from the notion that New York is about the only port in the United States, and that Liverpool is about the only port in Europe with which we have any intercourse. I should like to know if New Orleans is not much nearer to the Island of Cuba, where we have a commerce half equal to that with England, than New York is? These arguments are used to mislead and divert the public.

I will read one other law in regard to the valuation of goods. The act of 1799 provides:

"That the ad valorem rates of duty upon goods, wares, and merchandise, at the place of importation, shall be estimated by adding twenty per cent. to the actual cost thereof, if imported from beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and ten per cent. to the actual cost thereof, if imported from any other place or country, including all charges, commissions, outside packages, and insurance only excepted."

Does that exclude the freight? So I say of every law that has passed from that time to this. No man can doubt that when you except insurance from among the dutiable charges, you mean the insurance upon the voyage of importation. It is a charge which is usually entered on the invoice book of every merchant who imports goods as among the costs and charges. This term, "costs and charges," has a meaning among accountants and is recognized in all the laws after 1799, with the single exception of two years, when the law of 1816 was in existence, which expressly excluded all these charges. Every law that I have been able to examine on the subject, and I have examined them pretty closely, states specifically what shall be excepted from the dutiable charges, and, in the earlier laws, it was commissions, outside packages, and insurance. In the act of 1795 they excepted outside packages, and there was a provision that the bottles in which wines were imported should not be excepted, but should pay the same duty as upon empty bottles. In the early times, they thought something of having the laws consistent. I have here the laws of 1789, 1790, 1795, 1816, 1818, 1828, 1832, 1833, 1842, and 1846, in reference to the valuation of goods. In every one of those acts, and in the law of 1851, under which the decisions of Judge Nelson and Judge Curtis, that have been quoted as entirely settling this question, were made, the same provision will be found. Those decisions related to the coastwise freight, as it is called. Judge Curtis said that if it was a new question, he could not perceive why freight was not a dutiable charge as well as anything else; and Judge Nelson, in his reasoning, stated that the cost of an article, at a certain place, included everything that had been paid for it up to landing at that place. If that does not include freight, I do not know what does.

I wish now to call the attention of the Senate to some of the evidences the Senator from Virginia gave of the unexampled prosperity that had resulted from low duties. In the first place, to show the prosperity of the manufacturing interest, he said that the exportations of American manufactures had increased threefold, under the low rates of duty, and that, he said, was conclusive as to their prosperity. I should like to ask you, Mr. President, if the Government of the United States should adopt a policy that destroyed the home market of the home producers, and forced them to export their whole products, would that be any evidence of their prosperity? The increase of the exports of American manufactures, instead of being an evidence of the prosperity of the manufacturers themselves, is only an evidence that the policy of the country has destroyed the value of the American market for the manufactures. This is a clear proposition. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia, if the prostration of the present year had entirely disabled the manufacturers of the United States from consuming any cotton, and had forced the cotton growers to export their entire crop of this year, would he have thought that was any evidence of prosperity?

Mr. TOOMBS. I will state to the honorable Senator from Rhode Island that I do not think this is the proper time to discuss the subject, and I do not wish to answer any question in regard to it. We are very busy with the appropriation bills, and I really think we ought to go on with them.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was in hopes I could get the Senator to aid me in putting this provision in this bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. We have but three days left.

Mr. SIMMONS. We cannot get through in that time. If I am not likely to get this proposition on the bill now, I will not waste the time of the Senate; but I desire to show, on some occasion, as briefly as possible, that there is nothing improper in it, as I have been assailed for endeavoring to do it improperly.

Mr. TOOMBS. I do not pass any judgment on the Senator. I do not deem it a proper time for me to discuss the tariff. I judge for myself. I do not assail the Senator. He can use his privilege and talk until Monday morning, if he chooses; but it is not according to my ideas.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not mean to talk an hour, but I wish to answer the evidences presented by the Senator from Virginia, as showing that the tariff of 1846 had done a great deal of good, and that we should adhere to the policy of it, though the country is bankrupt and the Treasury impoverished by it. I think it is our duty, when we are providing appropriations, to look after the means to pay them. I think that, if we could adopt some plan by which to increase our revenue ten or fifteen millions a year by preventing frauds and giving the business to our own country, two or three hours would be judiciously spent in such a service. I regard it as of more consequence than all the appropriation bills we have passed, or are likely to pass. I know the Senator from Georgia is friendly to my proposition, and therefore I would take his advice sooner than that of almost any one I know, for I believe he understands the matter as well as any man in the Senate; and I take the remarks which were made by the Senator from Virginia, in reference to home valuation, as applying as much to him as to myself, for he defended it with a great deal more ability than I did.

There was another fact stated in the speech of the Senator from Virginia which he intended, he said, to send before the country, in reference to the influence of low duties and fraudulent undervaluations, for they constitute a part of the lowness of the duties, to wit: the exports of breadstuffs. He stated that the exportations of breadstuffs and provisions had increased threefold since the operation of the tariff of 1846. Now, I have taken the annual exportations of breadstuffs in the last four years of the tariff of 1842, which are returned. The returns are made up to the 30th of June of each year, and I should have taken another year but that the fiscal year was altered in 1843, and for that year we have not the full returns. I find that in the last four years of the tariff of 1842 the exportations of the crops of those four years amounted to $130,227,900, making an average of $32,556,000. Then, in the six years under the low tariff of 1846, as the Senator from Virginia calls it, which bring us down to the time of the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain, since which period the exports of all her American provinces went included with ours, give a total of $183,000,000, or an average of $30,500,000, which is not so much by $2,000,000 as under the higher tariff; and yet the Senator talks about their increasing threefold. There is a way of stating figures in which you can make out almost anything from them; but I take a series of years to see what the result of all measure is.

In the arguments used on this question, although there is no fact to justify them either in the history of the Government or the laws of the country, it is assumed that freight may be excluded, and the duties be imposed upon the foreign value when every law we have had heretofore has been predicated on the value of the goods in this country instead of abroad. Why, sir, the argument of the Senator from Virginia last year, when the present tariff bill was passed with regard to wool, was one of the most singular ones I ever heard, and yet it seemed to have a great effect then. Now, if I could induce the Senate without an argument to take a vote on my proposition and adopt this system, I would most certainly cheerfully waive any opportunity that might be afforded me of giving an argument; but there were one or two observations made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. DAVIS] in reference to the uncertainty and impossibility of executing a law of this kind to which I wish to call attention. My amendment proposes to assess the duties on the market value in the principal markets of the United States. Your present law predicates that the duties must be levied on the value at the principal market in the country where the goods are produced. Does any man undertake to say or believe that we cannot better ascertain the market value of articles in the city of New York, where at least two thirds of the duties on imports are paid, than we can in the principal port of China, to wit: Shanghai; or is it in the nature of things that there must be more difficulty in ascertaining what an article sells for in New York than in Europe or Asia? It appears to me too plain a proposition to be argued.

The Senator from Mississippi said there were some articles imported into New Orleans that were not known in New York. That, I think, is a mistake; but I have provided that in any such cases the duties should be taken in kind, and that gets over all those difficulties. My proposition was so hastily printed that the printed copy contains some errors. No time is given for a man to prepare an amendment to an appropriation bill, or any other bill, here. I have corrected the printed copy, and made it so that I think there can be no difficulty on that score.

There is another provision, that the goods shall be valued in the currency of the United States. Senators would hardly imagine the difference between the valuation of goods here and in China, simply on account of the currency. I addressed a note to one of the largest houses in China for the purchase of goods destined for Europe and the United States, to inquire in regard to the different currencies in the different ports of China, and the answer which I received is a very intelligent and instructive one. I will refer the Senator from Virginia, if he has any doubt about the responsibility of these men, to my colleague, who knows the partner of the firm that wrote me this letter. He says that on one invoice of $1,000 purchased in Shanghai, per invoice cost, the cost to the importer in New York, including exchanges, transit, and expenses, is $2,300. An invoice of $1,000 worth of goods bought at Shanghai, costs the importer $2,300 when it is laid down in the city of New York. Upon some articles, such as silks, the duty is not over nine per cent. on the actual value here. Is there any propriety in keeping up such a system? If you valued these goods in New York, you would get duties on $2,300 instead of $1,000. If they are entered from Foo Choo, the difference would be less, on account of the exchange, and from Hong Kong it would be eighteen or nineteen hundred to one thousand dollars. These are some of the inequalities we are now subject to, and we import $20,000,000 annually from China; and we do not get, on an average, half the duties, owing to the difference between the currencies and the valuations.

The Senator gave one other illustration, and spoke with great apparent triumph that I had not answered his figures exhibiting the favorable influence of low duties upon exports. He gave us the exports of tobacco, and said they had increased threefold under a low-duty system. I should like Senators who live in regions where they grow tobacco, to say if it ever occurred to them that the increase in the exportation of tobacco was in consequence of low duties? I suppose the duties on tobacco in all the consuming countries are from three hundred to eight hundred per cent.; and yet the Senator parades the figures about the export of tobacco as an evidence of the stimulant that low duties give to exportation. I dare say the duties on tobacco average five hundred per cent. in all the consuming countries of Europe; and yet, in the last ten years, the exportation of it has increased threefold; and the Senator says that it is an evidence of the influence of low duties on the exports of the country! I should like to have had time to review every single instance he gave upon which he said he was going to the country to justify him in refusing to correct frauds when he was hiring money to supply deficiencies in the revenue. He took the ground that low duties were producing the most beneficial results on the classes he enumerated. I have given every one of the instances he stated from his tables. I could tell the reason why the exports of manufactures have increased. I have already indicated it by saying that low duties had destroyed the home market for some of those articles, and had induced the manufacturers to carry the coarser fabrics into the market of the world to dispose of, very much to their injury and the detriment of the general prosperity of the country. But you may cipher out tables, and you might say that if you were to destroy all manufacturing here you would benefit the cotton planter, because he would have to export his whole crop; whereas, every cotton planter knows that the consumption of one fifth or one sixth part of the crop in this country enables him to sustain the prices all over the world: We come into the market early; and it is our purchases that give tone to the market, and enable them to sustain prices by diminishing the amount they are obliged to send abroad.

I should like to have the vote on this proposition to incorporate into this bill a measure for valuing goods in this country, and I had intended to accompany it, if I got the assent of the Senator from Virginia, with a proposition to classify the articles above the average rate so as to put them all on an equality, and then let him, or any friend of his who has charge of the revenue, fix the rates, and then let them not charge upon us, or upon me at any rate, any disposition to increase the duties, or increase protection. I said in the outset, and I say still, that if you stop the frauds, and put the different producers on a fair footing of equality, you may fix the rates, and get your revenue to suit yourselves. I do not like to see a discrimination by which one interest has less than another with a view to break down the interests of the country in detail. Let them all fare alike, put an equal rate on all the articles you intend indirectly to encourage, and fix the rate to suit yourselves. I think, myself, that twenty per cent. would yield more revenue, if you could prevent frauds, than the present rates; and I would be content with it, because it would be uniform and certain, and American importers could import as favorably as foreigners; and when the trade comes to be in the hands of responsible men, that is a great security to producers in this country as well as those who deal with them. I send the amendment to the Chair, and I ask that it may be read. It is so modified, I think, as to meet the objection offered by the Senator from Mississippi about his New Orleans goods.

Mr. HALE and others. We do not want it read.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I will state the parts I have changed, with a view to meet the objections suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. I see, however, that the Senator from Virginia has got back; and I must ask him if he is satisfied with classing all the goods together, and putting a rate to suit himself?

Mr. HUNTER. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I do not mean to be drawn into a discussion of the tariff on this bill. When it comes up legitimately, if I should be so fortunate as to be here, and he should be here next year, I shall be very willing to hear him, and compare opinions with him; but that is a matter I do not desire now to debate. I raise a question of order on this amendment. We ruled out the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the river and harbor bills; and I ask the Senate to apply the same rule to this amendment.

The amendment of Mr. SIMMONS is as follows:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the sixteenth and seventeenth sections of the act of 30th August, 1842, the eighth section of the act of 30th July, 1846, and the first section of the act of 3d March, 1851, so far as the same relate to and direct the manner of ascertaining and determining the value of merchandise imported into the United States, at the principal markets of the countries from which the same are imported, shall remain and continue in force, and in all cases, when the same is practicable, the invoices of all goods, wares, and merchandise at the place or port of exportation shall be verified by the certificate of the consul of the United States at such port; and in no case shall the duties upon goods be levied in any port of the United States upon an amount less than the value stated in such invoices, as required in the proviso to the eighth section of said act of 30th July, 1846, unless the quantity of the articles imported shall be lessened, or the quality injured upon the voyage of importation.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That, in order to prevent the continuance of fraud upon the revenue by the undervaluations of foreign imports, and to provide for the valuations of imports in the same currency of the United States, it is hereby provided that, in addition to the existing provisions of law for the entry and appraisement, or valuation of any goods, wares, or merchandise imported into the United States, it shall be the duty of the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of any goods, wares, or merchandise imported into any port of the United States, to exhibit to the collector or other proper officer of the customs of such port, a true invoice of the goods, wares, and merchandise entered by such person or persons at such port, embracing a statement of the quantity, description, nature, quality, and the true wholesale market price or value of the same or similar articles in the principal market of the United States, to wit: the city of New York, at the time of such entry of importation, or at the time nearest thereto which is practicable, and such invoice shall be verified and proved by the oath of the said owner, importer, consignee, or agent, who, on conviction of false swearing thereon, shall be subject to the forfeiture and penalties as provided by the laws of the United States in like cases, and prosecuted as for wilful and corrupt perjury; and, upon such wholesale market price or value, to include all elements of cost or increments of value which enter into and become a part of such wholesale market price or value, the rates of duty imposed by the existing laws of the United States, at the time of entry of such importation, upon each article enumerated in such invoice, shall be assessed and paid: Provided, That if any collector or other proper officer of the customs shall have doubts as to the correctness of the valuation as above described, or should complaint or information be made or given by any person or persons, of the incorrectness of any such valuation, it shall be the duty of the collector or other proper officer of the customs to cause the true and actual wholesale market price or value of the same or similar articles in the city of New York, at the time of entry at the port of entry, to be ascertained and appraised in the same mode and manner as the wholesale market price or value is now ascertained and appraised in the principal markets of the countries from which the same is imported; and it shall in every such case be the duty of the appraisers of the United States, and every one of them, and every person who shall act as such appraiser, or of the collector and naval officer, as the case may be, by all reasonable ways and means in his or their power, to ascertain, estimate, and appraise the true actual market value, or wholesale price of such goods, wares, and merchandise, in the city of New York, at the time of entry of such goods, wares, and merchandise, at the port of importation, without regard to any other invoice, valuation, or appraisement, or verification of the same by oath or otherwise, or the difference of any such invoice or valuation to the contrary notwithstanding. And if such last mentioned appraisal, or valuation shall exceed by ten per centum or more the value so declared on the entry, then, in addition to the duties imposed by law on the same, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem on such appraised value, as provided in the eighth section of the act of the 30th July, 1846, entitled "An act reducing the duties on imports, and for other purposes." And the several collectors or other proper officers, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever it may be impracticable to ascertain the actual market value at said port of New York, or from any other cause they shall deem it necessary to secure the proper payment of the revenue due to the United States upon the importation of any goods, wares, or merchandise, may, and they hereby are required, whenever the same is practicable, to take the amount of duties chargeable on any articles bearing an ad valorem rate of duty in the article itself, according to the proportion or rate per centum of the duty on said articles; and such goods so taken the collector or other proper officer shall cause to be sold, at public auction, within twenty days from the time of taking the same, in the manner prescribed by law, and place the proceeds arising from such sale in the Treasury of the United States. And the said collector or other proper officer of the customs is further authorized and required, when he shall deem it necessary, to secure the proper payment of the duties accruing to the Government of the United States, to proceed in the manner prescribed in the eighteenth section of the said act, approved the 30th day of August, 1842, even though no fraud or intentional undervaluation shall be imputed; and as compensation to the collector and appraisers for their services in such proceeding, they shall be entitled to a commission of one per centum, to be shared by them, upon the amount of duties thus secured and paid, in addition to such other compensation as they are, by law, entitled to.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That should any person or persons complain or give information to the collector or other proper officer of the customs, that any false or undervaluation of any goods, wares, or merchandise has been made by any owner, importer, consignee, or agent, as aforesaid, under the preceding section of this act, or of any existing law of the United States, with a view to defraud the Government of the duty legally due upon the same, the proper officer shall proceed to ascertain and appraise the true market value, as provided for in the preceding section and according to law, and if any forfeiture or penalty shall be incurred by any such owner, importer, consignee, or agent, one half the amount or value of such forfeiture shall accrue to the benefit of the person or persons complaining or giving information which may have led to the detection of such fraud or undervaluation.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia makes a question that it is not in order to originate in the Senate such an amendment as this. That question the Chair will submit to the Senate. Is this amendment in order?

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I am well aware, Mr. President, how weary the Senate must be of this bill, which has occupied so much of its time and attention; but I wish to offer an amendment, the object of which is to continue the publication of the American State Papers. The character of this work I need not undertake to explain to the Senate. Under the authority of Congress, this publication has been brought down to 1834; the publication since that time has been discontinued, and the object of the amendment which I offer, is to continue the publication. I know the prejudice which exists against the publication of books; but I think that this publication does not come within any of the reasons upon which the general objection to the publication of books, under the encouragement of Congress, has been founded. It is a sort of monumental history of all great transactions of the Government. It is a work eminently useful, if not necessary, in the course of legislation, and in the course of the administration of the Government, by all its high officers, from the President down. We often find it necessary to appeal to it. It is a work which we, and we alone, are competent to execute. It is a work not only necessary but useful to those who act under our Constitution as the representatives and officers of the people; and it is a contribution which we owe to the general political history of the whole world. It is a documentary history of the proceedings of Congress, and of the executive department of the Government. It embraces congressional as well as executive documents. It is an authentic monumental history which we owe to ourselves, as part and parcel of the operations of our Government, connecting itself so nearly with the Government that I may almost say it forms part of the Government. The information is now so dispersed and scattered that all reference to it is impracticable. It must be brought together, and published.

The amendment, then—because I intend as far as in me lies to recommend, rather by the brevity of my remarks than by the remarks themselves, this amendment to the favorable consideration of the Senate—does not provide, nor is it my intention at all, or within the scope of my anticipation, that any portion of the work proposed to be published, shall be distributed gratuitously to members of Congress. The amendment provides for the distribution of a certain number, not including members of Congress in the distribution, and reserving all not distributed by this amendment for future distribution by Congress. We ought to supply with it, in the first place, all those officers of the Government whose duties may require them, and will require them, if they discharge their duties understandingly and well, to have reference to those volumes. After supplying these public officers properly with them, this amendment provides that the public libraries of the country shall be furnished with a copy, and the rest retained for your future distribution. I shall hope that they will be presented to all the Governments of the world, and we shall receive in exchange for them, no doubt, ample satisfaction in works of the same character, giving us an authentic documentary account of the operations of those Governments. Therefore, I say this is a general contribution to the political world of the operations of one of its great Governments, a certain and true history of public transactions. They may be given in exchange to all the Governments of the world. I should hope to do that. It is a worthy gift—a gift worthy to be given by a nation, and worthy to be given to nations. It is the record of the proceedings and grave transactions of one of the great Governments of the world. It stands by itself, and is a peculiar work; and it is the peculiar duty of the Government to provide for its publication.

I shall trespass no longer on your time, sir, except to say further, that we have the opportunity now of having it continued by those who published the former series of this work, and in whose integrity, in whose intelligence, in whose ability, in whose candor, and truthfulness, and accuracy in the publication of such a work, we may entirely rely. It provides that the publication here shall be continued by the publishers of the former series, Gales & Seaton.

With these remarks, which I have limited as far as possible, I submit this amendment to the consideration of the Senate, and hope it will be adopted as part of the bill. It makes no appropriation. It avoids all questions of order, as I understand. No appropriation is made—none whatever.

And he it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to continue down to the 4th of March, 1839, the compilation of the congressional documents published by Congress, under the name of the American State Papers, in the same manner as the first series thereof, under the authority of the act of Congress of March 2, 1831, and the joint resolution of Congress of March 2, 1833, and with the same particular index to each class, and a general index to the work; and the said Secretary and Clerk are hereby directed to contract with Gales & Seaton, publishers of the first series thereof, for publishing the same, not to exceed two thousand copies in number, at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series, to be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior as the same may be published; and the said Secretary of the Interior shall place three hundred copies in the Department of State, for its use, and for exchange with foreign Governments, and seven hundred copies in his own Department, for distribution to public libraries in the several States and Territories, and hold the residue of the copies in his custody, subject to the future direction of Congress.

Mr. CLAY. I am not going to make a speech on a point of order. We have consumed fully one day in the last five discussing points of order; and I do not suppose anybody's opinion has been changed by an argument that has been made; but I raise a point of order on the amendment; and it is this: that, under the 30th rule, such an amendment must be proposed by some select or standing committee of the Senate. I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether it comes from any standing or select committee, and is reported by their authority?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. No, sir.

Mr. CLAY. Then I raise the point of order. The Senator seems to have anticipated it by saying that it appropriates no money. That is very true; but I do not suppose that anybody thinks these gentlemen will do this work gratuitously; and I predict that, if the Senate adopt it, it will require an appropriation hereafter of $300,000 to satisfy it. I do not know that I would vote against such a proposition if it came as an independent bill; but I think it is clearly in violation of the 30th rule of the Senate as an amendment to this bill. I make that point, and ask the Chair to decide it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Certainly, I do not mean to debate any question of order. I know very little about such questions, and I have very little taste for debates in this body on them, which, as the gentleman says, have occupied so undue a portion of our time. I have understood, on a former occasion, when the amendment was offered, its containing no appropriation was considered as putting it out of the rule, relied upon by those who have made questions of order in reference to such amendments—

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state his opinion on the question of order. The language of the rule is this:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received," &c.

The Chair thinks the rule is confined strictly to amendments which propose, in themselves, appropriations of money, and does not include those which may make appropriations necessary hereafter.

Mr. DAVIS. The decision of the Chair then is, that it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. I had nothing to say, when I rose, to the point of order, further than that if it was not in order, I hoped the form would be changed so as to make it in order. I am very anxious to see the continuation of the publication of the State Papers. I believe it the most valuable work that has ever been issued for the country at large, and I am at a loss to know how any one who is charged with the examination of old subjects can possibly pursue them without that work. If I had never been in an Executive Department, I probably never would have made the experiment. I will merely say, as the result of that experiment, that I do not believe any one has time enough to examine two or three questions in the course of a season, if they are those which have been connected with our history from an early period, by pursuing them through the Executive Documents. In the State Papers you find them collected in a few volumes, grouped according to the subject to which they belong, and the references are easy. The ability to pursue it, therefore, is such as will give some confidence, when you have closed the investigation, that you have found all that has been done in the history of your country upon it. I know nothing of what this would cost. I take it for granted that it cannot exceed the value. If the work be done judiciously, I am sure it will be one of the best expenditures of money which the country could make. Far better, if this question be one merely of dollars and cents, that we should stop the publication of the Executive Documents, and that we should only publish in this form, and publish from time to time, every lustrum, collect them together, and publish volumes devoted to a particular subject, and thus render it possible for a public man who is engaged in an investigation to pursue the subject as contained in his country's history.

Mr. PEARCE. I think, on an estimate which I caused to be made a few weeks ago, that there are something like nine hundred volumes of public documents since the beginning of this Government. The first series of American State Papers came up to 1831, that being the period of the original resolution. The public documents have annually swollen since that period, so that I apprehend there are about five hundred volumes of public documents which have been published since the date of the authority given to publish the first series of American State Papers; so that in order to prosecute an inquiry regularly through the public documents, it may be necessary to examine the indexes of five hundred different volumes. At all events, information is scattered through about five hundred different volumes which would be condensed into this one publication, all classified and arranged under proper heads, indexed by classes, and a general index, too; so that a very easy reference might be had in the investigation of any subject and the documents relating to it. I think this is unquestionably a desideratum. Every member of the Senate knows how very convenient the original series of American State Papers have proved. Nobody thinks of examining the original documents, but always goes to the State Papers for a convenient reference and easy finding whatever he seeks for. I consider it a great desideratum, unquestionably. It is for the Senate to say whether they will prosecute this continuation now. As the money which it will cost us will not be payable immediately, as it will take some time, probably a series of years, before the whole work can be completed, the payments will be distributed over a considerable time, and will average lightly each year. I believe the work well worth its entire cost, which I suppose to be about what the Senator from Alabama has assumed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask if the amendment provides for the distribution of any of those documents among the members of Congress?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. No, sir.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If it does not, I will support it very heartily. I will say nothing on the subject, if nobody objects to it.

Mr. CAMERON. I have opposed the increase of expenditures in this House from the commencement, and I have been particularly desirous of reducing the amount of public printing. If this were any ordinary document I should certainly oppose it; but it is of a different character. As has been properly stated by the gentlemen who have preceded me, it is a work which will some day or other be published. It is only a question of time. Then, it is for us to decide whether these gentlemen, who have had charge of the former portion of the work, shall continue it, or some other gentlemen, who may not be so properly qualified or so faithful. It is useless for me to say anything of the character of these gentlemen. They are known to everybody. There is hardly a man in the United States who does not know Gales & Seaton by reputation; but to the members of the printing business, the editorial corps, as we call ourselves, they are especially known. In very early life I was in their employment, and there are no better men in the world than both of those gentlemen. As printers, as editors, their history is known to the whole country, perhaps to the world, but as men they are not so well known. These gentlemen have expended the whole labor of their lives in doing good. No men that I have ever been acquainted with have so much of kindness, so much of generosity, and so much of benevolence.

I could recount fifty instances of men going into their office when it was inconvenient to them to part with any portion of their means; and I have never seen a man go out of that office without receiving some aid and comfort. I remember a case which occurs to me at this moment. Thirty years ago, or more, there came into the printing office of Gales & Seaton a pale, emaciated, sicklylooking man, who seemed to be on the verge of dissolution. He called on the foreman for employment. He was poor, sick, and had no money. The foreman said to him rather sharply, "I am sorry for it, but I have no work to give." He left the printing office. At the door he met Mr. Gales. He looked so miserable that he attracted the attention of Mr. Gales, who said, "My good man, what is the matter with you?" "Why, sir," he replied, "I am very sick, and I have been here to get work, and the foreman says he cannot give me any." "Oh," said Mr. Gales, "he has forgotten; we never turn a man out of this house who is sick. Go in; I will find something for you to do." That act of kindness saved that man's life; and I have traced him through his history since. I saw him afterwards a learned member of the bar in his own State, a member of the Legislature, a judge of the court, a member of Congress, and now a supreme judge in one of the States of this Union.

That is but one of the instances of the kindness of these people. Their whole life has been spent in doing good. You can employ nobody who will do this work so faithfully as they will; probably nobody can do it so well. That it will be done hereafter, there can be no doubt. It is only a question as to time, then. Under the lead of my respected friend, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, we have already saved, on the cost of printing documents ordered previous to this session, over three hundred and sixty thousand dollars. I think the Senator from Arkansas will bear me out in that. The expense of printing will be, probably, eight or nine thousand dollars less than several years past. It seems to me that that and other reasons show this to be the proper time for this work. I confess, I have more personal feeling in this matter, because I know these men are not only men of intellect, but men of heart, and I never saw a man of heart who was not a good citizen. I have scarcely ever seen appeals in favor of men of generosity and benevolence, such as these are, that did not meet a response from generous and kind men, such as this body is composed of.

Mr. HAYNE. I consider this to be a great work. So far as it has gone, it has been well performed. The gentlemen who have done the work well so far, it seems to me, are entitled to complete it. It is a national work; it is a work which every great statesman would like to possess; and, really, I hope, under these circumstances, Senators will give it a favorable consideration, and sustain it by their votes.

Mr. TOOMBS. This is a business transaction, and one of very considerable importance. I should like to know, from some of the friends of the proposition, what the probable cost will be? There seems to be no response.

Mr. MASON. I understood the Senator from Alabama to suggest that it would cost probably about two hundred thousand dollars; and the Senator from Maryland said that would be the amount distributed over a number of years.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator from Alabama does not pretend, I suppose, to know whether it will cost $200,000 or more. I heard, in the same irregular way, when the Senator from Louisiana introduced this proposition at the last session, that it would cost $800,000.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not think it is possible to tell, with any approximation to accuracy, what it will cost, for the reason that no man can tell what will be the number of volumes formed after the selection shall have been made out of the material, of those things that are required for preservation as part of the documentary history of the country, and those portions of the executive documents which merely refer to temporary and transitory matters. I do not think anybody can calculate the cost, because we cannot tell how many volumes there will be.

Mr. TOOMBS. I should like to ask gentlemen what rates of compensation are to be paid? It provides for paying the same price that was paid before. I should like to know how those rates compare with the present prices of public printing? This is a business transaction; and we ought to know whether we are to pay more or less than the work can be done for by the printing establishment of the United States. It is to that branch of the subject particularly that I wish to direct my attention. Can anybody tell me how the maximum rates proposed vary from the amount we now pay under the printing law?

Mr. CAMERON. I have paid some attention to the prices, and from the inspection I gave them, as a printer, my belief is that the former prices are less than those now paid, except as to press-work.

Mr. TOOMBS. If that was so, I should be much better satisfied, but I do not want to have the work done for less, and therefore I shall move to amend the amendment, by putting in a proviso that the rates allowed shall not exceed the prices now paid for public printing. I think these gentlemen, whose personal characters I can bear testimony to, as far as it goes, ought not to get less than is now paid for similar work, if it is proper and necessary that this publication should be made. I shall therefore move to amend the amendment by inserting a proviso that the rates allowed shall not exceed the prices now paid for congressional printing.

Mr. CAMERON. There may be some difference in the price of press-work between the present system and the one in existence at the time this work was done. The edition is a small one, two thousand volumes. The prices for composition then were less than now, but the press-work was more.

Mr. TOOMBS. I asked the question for the purpose of laying the foundation of the few remarks I wish to make on this subject. It is a very large business and nobody can tell anything about it. Not a single Senator knows whether it will involve us in $200,000 or $800,000, or what the expense will be.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. My attention was called to this matter this morning, for the first time. I have no objection in the world to the work being given to the parties to whom it is proposed that it shall be given. I do not entertain any but the sincerest and most kindly feelings for them. I shall not interpose any factious opposition to this movement, but it is my duty to point out to the Senate two or three considerations connected with the expense of printing books of various descriptions. The amendment is directly in conflict with the provisions of a bill that the Senate have passed, and sent to the other House. That bill provides that we will not contract for, nor order to be printed, any work which is not already compiled, and ready to be delivered into the hands of the Printer, with an estimate of its cost. It is apparent, now, that we are about to order these gentlemen to proceed to make up a work which no one can tell the limits of, either in point of time or expense. We have no limitation as to the number of volumes or their cost. We presume, from the character of the proposition, that the completion is to be printed in quarto form, as the former edition of the American State Papers was, and that it will be done in the same manner, and with about the same number of pages in each volume. This amendment provides for paying not exceeding the same rate that the work cost previously, per volume. This shows nothing as to what the former work cost, per volume. I have no idea that each volume cost the same; I presume some volumes cost a great deal more than others. The contract is to be made by the Secretary of the Senate, and it is to be made before we know what is to be printed, and even at the next session we shall not know, nor at the next after that, nor at any other session, until the whole of the work has been prepared for publication. Then, the proposition is directly in the teeth of what the Senate considered would be good policy in passing the bill to which I referred, by requiring a work to be completed ready for delivery, and to be accompanied by an estimate of the cost of printing it, based on the work itself, in manuscript, before you would consent to make an order or contract for printing at all. That is the past action of the Senate at this session.

Another provision was made in that bill, which this proposition is in the teeth of, but not so pointedly as in the respect which I have already pointed out. I do not know whether it is contemplated by the honorable Senator who offers the amendment that the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives shall receive extra compensation for making the compilation, or whether it is to be regarded as embraced in their usual duties. I do not see any limitation here on the cost in that respect. I should like to be furnished with some data to go upon; but there is nothing here by which we can tell what the cost will be.

Mr. CAMERON. Allow me to say to the Senator that the amendment to restrict the prices, as proposed by the Senator from Georgia, will be acceptable as far as I am concerned. I am willing to provide that they shall be restricted to the prices now paid.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The question the Senator from Georgia put was in regard to the rates of printing. The amendment provides that—

"The Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to continue down to the 4th of March, 1859, the compilation of congressional documents published by Congress, under the name of the American State Papers, in the same manner as the first series thereof under the authority of the act of Congress of March 2, 1831, and the joint resolution of Congress of March 2, 1833, and with the same particular index to each class, and a general index to the work. And the said Secretary and Clerk are hereby directed to contract with Gales & Seaton, the publishers of the first series thereof, for publishing the same: not to exceed two thousand copies, at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series."

The Senator who presents the amendment did not state, or, if he did, I did not hear, what that price was; and we have no means by which to judge of that price. In answer to the question of the Senator from Georgia, I say I cannot tell how that price corresponds with the present price at all.

Mr. TOOMBS. This is a most extraordinary proceeding, that grave Senators should insist, whatever may be the value of this work, that you should go on and direct your officers to contract for printing certain papers, exceedingly voluminous, at a price that nobody here knows whether it is enough, half enough, or twice too much. I have asked every Senator present if he has any idea whether the contract made twenty-five years ago was a reasonable or unreasonable one, or even what it was. We have no conception even of what it was, so that we can compare it with the present prices. I know that books are much cheaper now than they were a quarter of a century ago: I am no printer, and I know very little about these matters. I know, however, that the Senate, not understanding these matters, have adopted the policy which my honorable friend from Arkansas, at the head of the Printing Committee, has suggested, and that we have deemed it necessary to require an estimate of how much a book will cost before we print it. I desire to know the cost of these books. I do not think them valuable; but if they are valuable, I wish to know whether we are going to pay what the work can be done for, or simply to give a job. My question involves that exactly. If the object of the Senate is, on account of the value of these papers, to have them printed for the use of the Government, prudence, and a common regard for the public interest, would require that they should see that they give no more for the printing than the work can be fairly done for in the market. It appears, however, that there is no human being in this body who knows what the price is—whether it is four times or ten times too much, or only one half what the work can now be done for. I say if this is a proper thing to be done, it ought to be done with deliberation; it ought not to be brought up every session on an appropriation bill. Why has it not been brought to the attention of the proper committee during the session of Congress? It has not been overlooked; for it seems there is a gap of more than thirty years to be filled up. It was brought to the attention of the Senate at the last Congress by my honorable friend from Louisiana on an appropriation bill in the same way. It seems to be a favorite spot, I believe, where printing jobs have been put on. We are taking this up at a time when investigation is not possible, and when its friends, even, are unable to give that information which it becomes the Senate to have, if they will make contracts, which I do not think ought to be done; but if it be a fit thing to be done, if it be a wise thing to be done, if it be a proper thing to be done, let it be done wisely and properly, with some regard to the public interest. It is not a question whether this be a valuable publication. If you settle that in your mind, the next point is, are you having it done on the ordinary terms, giving to the laborer his hire? I wish to take nothing from him, but to give the fair price of doing such work in the market.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say to the Senator from Georgia, as I was one of those who said I was willing to take the price, that my impression is that the present price would be more favorable to the publisher than the old one, and the limitation proposed is one to which no objection can be made except that I think, with such information as I have, it will cost a little more money.

Mr. TOOMBS. I would risk what little estate I have in the world on that.

Mr. CAMERON. I have prepared an amendment such as was suggested by the Senator from Georgia, which I think will meet his views. I understand he has no objection except as to the cost.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator is mistaken, for I am opposed to it entirely. This is not the way to do such a thing. Nothing will satisfy me except bringing it in in a separate bill, giving it proper examination, and allowing me to vote intelligently upon carrying on so important a branch of the public service as this.

Mr. CAMERON. My amendment is:

Provided, That the rates for such work shall not exceed the rates now paid for congressional printing.

Mr. PUGH. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the fact that we have passed a bill intended to retrench some of the extravagance in the printing. Why not as well have the benefit of our own experience?

Mr. CAMERON. We have not passed any bill to reduce the prices.

Mr. PUGH. We have retrenched a great many other things, and I thought we had retrenched the prices.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Did I understand the Senator from Georgia to move an amendment?

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I am willing, so far as I know anything about it, to accept an amendment restricting the prices to the present rates of public printing.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have not come to that point yet. I have been endeavoring to seek from those who are anxious to adopt this amendment to get some sort of idea as to the basis they are voting upon, and I again repeat, there does not seem to be a human being in the Senate who knows. All they say is, do it. Why do it to-day? Why do it without investigation? Why not let me and other gentlemen know, and let yourselves know, that, in contracting for this work, which it is supposed on the one side may cost $200,000, and on the other $800,000, you are having it done properly, having it done at fair rates? That is all I ask. The reason I moved the amendment was, that rather than be in the dark about it, I wanted to have something in the way of a check. I profess to be ignorant about it, and I think it is the duty of those who ask me to vote away hundreds of thousands of public money to enlighten my ignorance, and let me know what this is to cost. I should not be willing to vote on an amendment involving so large an amount of public money without giving some account.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say to the Senator that it is utterly impossible that anybody, even if he had made a special study of the subject, could give him that information. The gross amount to be paid must depend on the amount of matter to be printed. That amount of matter will depend upon the action of the servants of the Senate and House of Representatives. These persons are not to select what they will print, but the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives will send to them that which is to be printed, and they will print what is sent to them. It is utterly impossible, therefore, for any one now to tell what the amount of matter will be, and what the cost will be.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator is off my point. I want to know whether the terms granted by the amendment are such as are now given for public printing, as I presume that must be considered by Congress to be the standard of fairness.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say that all the information I had on that subject before the debate commenced was, that it was a hard contract on the publishers to take the rates of 1819; and the information I have is, that the present rates of composition are so much higher as to more than counterbalance the advantage in press-work by the old rates.

Mr. TOOMBS. There seems to be a very great desire to give these gentlemen a contract, and I am sure I have no objection so far as they are personally concerned, but I do not want them to have a hard contract. I do not wish to put even on bad men a bad contract, much less on good men. It is said these gentlemen are excellent people. I think the Government ought not in any case to employ anybody to do work without paying a fair and honest consideration for it. If the terms are hard, I do not want to put them on them on that account. It is no recommendation to me that the terms you propose to put on these old gentlemen are hard. I will not put a hard contract on them. If they can do the work as well as other people, and the contract is a hard one, I will make it an easy one. I am willing to pay fairly and honestly what it is worth. I know nothing about it and nobody here can tell me anything about it. Supposing from the indications exhibited by those who have spoken on the amendment, that it would prevail, I wanted some check. From my general knowledge of the book business, which is very limited, confined pretty much to my own profession, I know that law books are generally about one half what they were a century ago.

Mr. CAMERON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMERON. The Senator from Georgia, and no other Senator, can tell what the prices are now. The prices are fixed by law, but he cannot tell me what they are. The work before was done under the law of 1819, fixing certain rates of prices for printing, which no man but a printer understands. That is one of the difficulties. If we had time we could go on and show the cost of each volume. It would be difficult to tell the number of volumes, but the amendment suggested by the Senator covers the whole difficulty, by confining the prices to those now allowed, so that what is compiled by the clerks of the two Houses will be printed according to the present law. Those ordered before were printed under the law of 1819.

Mr. TOOMBS. I wanted to get at that fact, for it is within my knowledge, from my legislative experience, that the rates of 1819 were exorbitant. I know that, in the Twenty-Ninth Congress, a public Printer was elected on the condition that he should take off one third those prices; and we had at some previous time agreed with these very gentlemen to do the public printing for a reduction on the prices of 1819 of twenty-five per cent., or it may have been as much as thirty-three and a third per cent. I speak from memory; I do not profess to be accurate; but I am sure they agreed to do the public printing at a very large reduction on the rates of 1819. I recollect that at one session Mr. Ritchie was appointed public Printer, and inasmuch as the reduction was not made at the time he was elected, he refused to print under the reduced price, and there was a difference of some $50,000 or $75,000. Those rates were considered so exorbitant, that a bill was passed, at the Twenty-Ninth Congress, ordering the public printing to be put out to the lowest bidder, and it was taken at one fourth the rates of 1819. I happen to know these facts in the discharge of my duties here. It is now proposed to print this work, extending over a series of years, thirty years back, and we do not know the number of volumes, and we are told it is impossible to tell. Ought we not, then, at least to have some security that the rates we are proposing to allow are reasonable and proper, and according to the prices of such labor in the country now? Why should we go back to the rates of 1819? I am unwilling to do so. I think it unwise and injudicious. I would not manage my own business in that way, and I should be almost ashamed to trade with a Senate or a body that would deal with me in that way. I would rather deal with the committee of a man who would act in that way, than with himself. We do not know whether the prices are too much or too little; but I put the standard now allowed by law. Whether that standard be accurate, I do not know; whether it is too much or too little, I cannot say. Certain I am, however, that the rates of 1819 are excessive, and have been so decided by Congress, and have been so regarded by these very contractors. I presume that the rates at which we now have such business done are just and fair, or rather it is more probable that they are just, than that the prices of 1819 are.

In the first place, I do not believe in the necessity of this publication; and I would oppose it at all hazards. I would not order the publication at all, and especially not now. This is not a good time to make a contract to the amount of eight hundred thousand or a million dollars, if it be so much; and nobody can say that it is not. In the next place, when so large a work is to be done, and is to continue for so great a length of time, I think it is important that you should have it done at the best rates you can, giving a fair remuneration to the printer. You might get the Harpers, or somebody else who have greater facilities for publishing, to do the work.

The integrity of these gentlemen, of which we have heard so much, is not at all involved; for, according to the amendment, the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are the persons to give out the documents. I do not know that these gentlemen are very good compilers. The Clerk of the other House is generally changed at every new Congress; and you may have a different Secretary here whenever you choose. I do not know that these officers are the proper persons to collect papers of such importance, for preservation by this Government. At all events, these are facts which ought to be looked into and inquired about. I should think they were worthy of a special committee; certainly they deserve some investigation by a regular committee, in order that Senators, before they vote away so large an amount of public money, may understand the facts of the case. Now, they do not understand them; they are acting ignorantly, as they admit. Nobody can give any information as to the amount of the work, or its cost, or whether the rates are right or not. I know the public printing has been done at a large reduction on the rates of 1819; and if these are the rates, as the Senator from Pennsylvania says they are, I have no doubt this is a splendid bonus to be given to these parties.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have been endeavoring ever since I have been in Congress to get the consent of the Senate to the printing of these books. I have done so because I have found them entirely indispensable in the study of the questions that are brought before the Senate. Perhaps in the particular committee of which the Senate has done me the honor to name me chairman, these books are in more daily use than in any other committee of the Senate. We could not proceed a week without them. I have felt the difficulty and labor of investigating questions submitted to that committee in having to look over the executive documents, through the scattered volumes in which they are to be found. I will not enlarge on the subject. I formerly stated my opinions on it to the Senate.

A gentleman of the ability of the Senator from Georgia can find specious objections to a measure to which he is generally opposed, as he professes to be to this. It is not astonishing that he can find something to say against it; and yet I do think there is something inconsistent in the different objections he urges. This work has been commenced; it has been done formerly by men who have done it to the entire satisfaction of the country. The proposition is that they go on and bring their work to date; and what is more natural than to say that it should be continued as it had formerly been done, compiled as it had formerly been compiled, printed as it had formerly been printed, and paid for as it had formerly been paid for? No objection was made to any of these points; and therefore it was but natural to offer the proposition for the continuation of the entire work on the same terms as those on which it was originally commenced. Yet there was a consideration that did strike me, and to which the Senator from Georgia has alluded, and into which I required. The proposition was to do the work at the same rates as were formerly paid, or not to exceed these rates. I did then make inquiry as to the relative cost of printing in 1831, and at the present day, and I was informed that the rates at that time were thirty-three and one third per cent. lower than now; that the price was not as good as the price at the present day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a great falling off in press-work and paper, and all materials.

Mr. BENJAMIN. There may be a falling off in material, but there is a great rise in the price of labor. At all events, from the information I could obtain, I could not find that there was very much difference to result in the price of that day or the present day. Now the Senator from Georgia suggests that the price of the former day was extravagant, and moves an amendment by which a double guard is thrown over the contract. We want the work done as it was before, the same printing, the same compilation, and the same price, provided that price shall not exceed what we are now paying. Here you have the double guard that the contract is to be made at a price not exceeding the former price, and not exceeding what you are now paying for all other similar work. I must confess that I am entirely ignorant of the practical part of the printer's profession. I have to pay for a great deal of printing; I have to buy a great many books, and it is true that in our profession, as the Senator from Georgia suggests, books are cheaper than they were formerly; but that I have been inclined to attribute rather to the sale of enlarged editions than to any diminution of the cost of getting up the volumes. Formerly, where you would not sell ten copies of a law book, you now sell one hundred or one hundred and fifty.

The present edition we propose to publish is a small one. You publish fifty, or a hundred, or a hundred and fifty thousand copies of the Patent Office report, and at the same rate of your President's messages and other executive documents. The great profits, as we are informed, and I take it for granted, on all those printing matters, result from an increased number of copies. Here you limit the copies to a small number. There is no demand for them by the public at large. These are works intended to be Government works, and regarded, in the language of the Senator from Kentucky, as historical monuments of the progress of the country, something that is to remain for which posterity is to thank us; that they will want; that they cannot do without. Now, sir, provided there be nothing in this proposition that points to any distribution of this book amongst members of Congress or the public, if it is confined to furnishing the Government officers, if it is confined to providing the public Departments of the country—the Department of State for exchange with foreign countries, and the libraries of the States with convenient books of reference, to which men may, at all times, recur for the examination of any subject in which the Legislature or the history of the country is concerned, I am willing to vote an adequate appropriation, and I am willing to vote it blindly to this extent: that it is utterly impossible, from the very nature of the work, to ascertain, in advance, how many volumes will be published, and, therefore, how much money will be eventually required; and I agree with those who say that; I am sure, whatever may be the amount, the work will be worth more to the country than it will cost. I would not be willing to enter into any job—I would vote for no job; but when the contract is authorized, at prices not exceeding those already paid for the commencement of the work, with the further guard suggested by the Senator from Georgia, that it is not to go beyond the price we pay to-day for other similar work, I cannot see that we are justly liable to the charge of advocating a job. But, so far as regards the motion to put it on the appropriation bill, the motion is not singular in regard to this work. Everybody that has an interest in a particular subject tries to get it on to an appropriation bill, for the simple, sensible, reason that those bills are sure to pass, and other bills frequently fail for want of time between the two Houses.

I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment. I did not offer it when I first came into the Senate myself, but I have advocated it strenuously, and I have offered it more than once since. I have watched it with interest, and I hope to see the day when it will be consummated.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, it is now twenty-six years since the Congress of the United States thought it necessary and expedient to provide for the publication of important executive and other State papers of the Government, in a convenient and accessible form, as well for the use of those concerned in public affairs at that time contemporaneously, as for the instruction of future times. That policy was continued, I believe, to the entire satisfaction of Congress, and of the country, for a considerable period. I recollect that several years before I came into Congress I had become the holder of the volumes of State papers thus published, and I found that that publication was one in which any person desiring to be conversant with public affairs could learn the development and progress of every great question and of every great interest in the country. I have those volumes now, and if I were to say what portion of my library I could least afford to spare, I should say that it was the volumes of American State Papers. So, since I came to be connected with the Government, on the question of fisheries, on diplomatic questions, on questions of search, I have found it perfectly easy and perfectly safe to begin with these volumes, and to go through to the point where their publication was arrested. But from that time we are all at sea. It is a herculean task, out of the volumes that are published here so rapidly, to ascertain the course and progress of any question whatsoever since this publication ceased. The publications of the last Congress alone amounted to one hundred and one volume, and supposing that to be the ordinary increase of volumes of public documents, every one can see that it is impossible to consult so many volumes for the purpose of pursuing the history of any subject.

Now, what was the reason why that publication was discontinued or suspended? I suppose it to be the one hinted at by the Senator from Louisiana. Some members of Congress were so regardless of their responsibilities and of their high position, that they made a matter of bargain and sale, of speculation, of those volumes, which were furnished to them for their use in legislation, and they brought themselves, and Congress, and the publication, into disgrace; and it became necessary to arrest a proceeding which, if it were not corrupt, bordered on the verge of corruption. With that reform, however, there occurred a great loss in the suspension of this publication. It is now proposed, in precisely the same way in which the measure originated, to renew the publication. It is to be made by the same persons, Gales & Seaton. The selection of the compilation to be published is to be made by the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, just as the original law required the publication to be made, and as it was made with such entire satisfaction to the public. Then, in regard to the terms, or cost, or expense, the original law provided, "that the price paid for the printing of the said volumes shall be at a rate not exceeding that paid to the Printer of Congress for printing the documents of the two Houses." This amendment provides payment at the same rate. It is a question whether, when you include work and materials, the rates of 1831 are more or less profitable to Congress or to the other party. Upon that subject I have no choice. I am willing to leave it to the judgment of others who are more familiar with the subject. I am willing either to take the proposition as it stands, or with an amendment so as to limit the expense to the present rates of printing.

I have said that at the time this policy was adopted, it was a contribution to political knowledge, a contribution to the science or knowledge of public affairs, and the statesmanship of the country, and to the political science of the world. At the time it was adopted, the Government of the United States expended thirteen to sixteen million dollars a year. It made its expenditures in proportion to its income. Has this nation grown, in twenty-six years, so much less able, so much less rich, that it cannot now, with $80,000,000 revenue, make to political science and history a contribution so important as this, on precisely the same scale as before?

Mr. President, we are asked, "why not leave this matter to private enterprise?" I answer that, like the reporting of our debates, owing to the circumstance of our location here, instead of in a great city, it is a work that, if it be done at all, must be done at the expense and under the care of the Government. We are asked, "why do it in this way, and tack it to this bill?" For the simple reason that those who favor this proposition have waited for six months, and there have been no other times, and no other ways, in which it could be done. This is the time and way in which it must be done, if it be done at all.

Mr. TOOMBS. I did not exactly understand the Senator from Louisiana in regard to his point that I was inconsistent in my objections. I wish to put myself right about that. I did not catch his specifications of inconsistency.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The objection of the Senator was, that we had not provided any check on this contract. He himself suggested that there ought to be a check; that the price should not exceed that now paid. After that had been done, he still contended that we had no check on the expenditure, and that nobody knew anything about it. I considered that to be, to a certain extent, inconsistency.

Mr. TOOMBS. I wish to say to the Senator—and I desire this to go on the record—that I do not profess to know how to put a check. I have too often seen these amendments carried, voting millions, when it was supposed they only voted hundreds by those who voted for them. I am not competent to put a check on such propositions. The paper is one great element; then there is the binding, and many other things connected with the business of printing. Not being a printer, I have no knowledge of such matters. I could not contract to build your Capitol; I could not contract to do a printing job. I think it is due to the Senate and the public that the proposition should be referred to the proper committee of this House, that they should go to those having knowledge of all such subjects to obtain the necessary information. If you referred it to me, I would go and seek information from those who are skilled in this business. That is the way all other legislative bodies do as to business they do not understand themselves. It is an ordinary parliamentary rule. If you had made it my duty to go and seek this information, and bring it here, I could vote understandingly. I say my own amendment does not meet the case; the check is not there. I know, in casually looking over the matter of public printing, that one of the largest profits of the printers has been on the paper. There is no provision here for that. The abuse in that respect got to be so outrageous that Congress determined to buy paper for themselves; and that is the present law in regard to the public printing. That, it was said, was one of the greatest elements of pirating on Congress; and I presume it was so, because Congress certainly would not set up a paper warehouse unless there was great abuse in the matter. I think the paper costs as much as the mere printing itself—probably more in some cases. I have noticed, in some of the reports of our own Committee on Printing, that it is a very great element.

I heard my honorable friend from Arkansas, the other day, enlightening us on many of the terms they have; I have heard gentlemen on the Printing Committee tell us about the difference between day work and night work, and fat work and lean work, and work that paid, and work that did not pay. These are terms of art. I do not know anything about them. If the subject had been referred to a committee of the Senate who had given me the facts necessary to put my vote on, I should be informed, but I have not got the facts. My own course is, I think, more consistent than that of the gentleman from Louisiana, who is willing to take it any way, with limitation or without. I think his proposition at the last Congress did not limit it at all. He simply proposed to pay the rates of 1832, without giving any information to the Senate as to what those rates were, and now not a Senator has risen who pretends to know what those rates were, and whether they were good or bad according to the present rates of doing public printing. Now, I wish to say, and put on the record, that it may stand, that I do not pretend that my amendment does meet this difficulty. In my judgment it does not. I believe the public have got no protection, and I have not a doubt that the work will be done at greatly enhanced rates over what it could be purchased for in open market. If it had not been connected with the idea of giving very clever gentlemen work, we should not have had it put in this appropriation bill. But for sympathy for the men who are to take this contract, I do not believe it would be made in this way.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There is no one, I imagine, in the Senate, who disputes for a moment the propriety of the continuation of this compilation.

Mr. PUGH. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There may be some one that does, and it would not be singular if it was the Senator from Ohio, [laughter;] but I think it is certain that a majority of this body are in favor of continuing the compilation. The first half of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky provides for that. I am ready at once to vote that the compilation shall be made. I only ask for some little investigation as to what shall be the compensation allowed the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives for making the compilation. No provision is made in regard to that at all. It is the last half of the amendment that attracts attention—that goes on to prescribe that the Secretary and Clerk “are hereby directed to contract with Gales & Seaton, the publishers of the first series, for publishing the same, not to exceed two thousand copies in number, at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series.” Our idea in attempting to fix checks has been that it is time enough to order a book to be printed when the manuscript or a copy is ready to be delivered and shown to us, and then it is in our power to ascertain the entire cost. The existing printing laws provide a particular method by which paper shall be procured. No price is fixed for that, but on the contrary, by the law, the paper is given out to the lowest bidder. Our law is exceedingly defective even upon that, for in that particular much partiality may be shown, and we have attempted to remedy it by the bill which the Senate recently passed. No check can be attached to this provision which will be any security on that point unless you provide that the Superintendent of Public Printing shall furnish the paper; and when you do that, the pay per volume will not answer as a rule, because, when the old volumes were printed, the printers furnished the paper. Precisely the same criticism may be made in regard to the binding.

In regard to setting up the types and striking off the number after the type is set up, the law now establishes precisely what shall be paid per thousand ems, so that if you have before you the manuscript you can estimate exactly what it comes to. These are the advantages of having the work compiled before you proceed to make a contract for its publication. The terms of this amendment are, that the payments shall be made at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series. That price per volume embraced binding and paper, as well as everything else connected with the work. This could all be done very much cheaper if the party chose to publish the book without dry pressing, and then the volume would be very defective. A party taking a contract of this description would not be bound, I think, to throw in any extra work to make the volumes more complete.

I have before me some of the volumes of the former edition of this work, and I find that some of them are eight hundred pages, and some a thousand pages. I have two volumes now on my desk, one of which is eight hundred and forty-six pages, and the other one thousand and forty-three pages. Here is a difference of two hundred pages. Certainly, the one volume must have cost more than the other. The amendment provides for a price per volume. Which of these volumes is to be the standard for the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives in arranging the price? It will be impossible for them to fix a price under such a provision, unless they run considerable risk, and take a responsibility which I presume they would not be willing to take.

I cannot fix checks myself, and I do not propose to make any attempt to do so. I should not like to undertake to do it. I believe the original idea adopted here is the true one; and that is, to have the work compiled and laid before us, previous to making any order for its printing. When it is given out, I have no objection to its being given to these gentlemen, but it ought to be given to them at the same prices that similar public work is done for.

It is said that the price of composition has greatly increased over what it was when the former edition was printed. It may be so; but I have no doubt that the price of binding and of paper has greatly decreased; and it may be that there is no increase at all in the price of setting up the type. I think it would be not more than fair to take the prices of public printing as now established by law, and even they are complained of by some as too great, but they are not adopted as the rates here. The mere printing of this book is a matter of no greater difficulty than the printing of any other book; and I see no reason why we should depart from the prices established by the printing law under which we deal with all other persons. I see no prudence, no propriety, in going back to a period when we know nothing about the prices, and can know nothing about them.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Allow me to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I have been doing all I could to get an opportunity to say that I accept the very amendment he wants to make. I am willing to provide that the price shall not exceed that which was formerly given, nor exceed that which is now paid for printing the documents of Congress. I will accept an amendment of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That will be satisfactory on that point. Then I will say we must fix the price of paper. There is no price established here for it at all. How is that to be done? Will you say that the price allowed shall be the average price for which the Superintendent makes contracts for paper? That would settle that point, I suppose. You might also provide for paying the same price for binding, which is fifty cents for quarto volumes. I think it would be unsafe to fix a price per volume. I have before me now a volume of the former edition, which contains only three hundred and sixty-one pages. I believe the first half of the amendment ought to be adopted, and that the second half ought not to be. However, I shall not be pained in the least if the amendment be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I desire to hear the amendment, which has been proposed by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Arkansas, as a modification of my amendment, read.

The Secretary read it as follows:

Add at the end of the section:

Provided, That the prices or rates to be paid for the printing of this work shall not exceed those paid at present for the printing of the documents of Congress.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I accept that as part of my amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not propose to debate this matter; but if the contract is to be given out I should like to bring it somewhere within the life of man at any rate, so that we may have control over it within some reasonable time. I therefore propose to amend the amendment by adding to it:

And provided further, That the execution of said work shall not be continued after the 31st of December, in the year 1869, and shall not exceed ten volumes in number, of equal size and character with those previously published.

Allowing ten dollars per volume, and I have no idea it will cost less, two thousand copies would amount to $20,000 for each volume, and multiplying that by ten would give us $200,000 as the cost. Ten volumes is as much as can possibly be completed within the time limited by my amendment, and before that time we shall know something about the rates, and we shall have sufficient data to determine whether we shall continue it, and see whether anything more ought to be done. I propose the amendment in order to get the matter somewhere within the control of Congress.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I cannot accept that amendment. I hope we shall have the question.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope that amendment will be adopted, for the very reason given by the Senator from Maine. When we have continued the work until 1869, and printed ten volumes, we shall then know what we are about; and that is a great deal. I would rather have it five volumes; and then if the work was done to the satisfaction of Congress, it might be continued. Here the contractor has to make no outlay; for the manuscript is to be handed to him by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House. I think, to allow three years for the printing of ten volumes, is a limitation which ought to be put in to keep the matter under our control.

Mr. HUNTER. I acknowledge the value of this work; and if it is to be continued, there are no persons to whose hands I would more willingly see it consigned than to those who commenced it. Indeed, there would seem to be equity in allowing them to continue it. But I think the debate has fully satisfied the Senate that this ought to be the subject of a separate bill. It is a subject which ought to be considered by a committee, and digested; and if it should be so considered and presented to the Senate, I should be ready to decide on its merits, and to decide upon it, too, with the opinion that if it could be done on safe terms to the Government, there ought to be some continuation of this work, unless it should cost us too much; for I feel the force of what has been said by the Senator from Georgia, that this is no time to commence expensive enterprises. Surely, after what has been shown and proved here, we ought not blindly to put it on an appropriation bill. It ought to be the subject of a separate bill; and when it comes up in that shape, I shall be ready to consider it fairly. The objections that have been urged by the Senator from Arkansas have struck me with great force; and I really cannot see my way, if I were willing to vote for it on an appropriation bill, how to do it in the present state of our information.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to make a single remark in relation to this last proposition, confining the work to ten volumes, or any particular number. This compilation cannot, in reasonable probability, be made for any one volume. The manner of making the compilation is to take your elements, the materials, the volumes out of which the compilation is to be made, run through them, posting each subject in the ledger, under the head to which it belongs. That is the course to be pursued with each of the hundreds of volumes. You desire to condense, posting them all under the different heads to which they belong. Of course one volume is never made up by itself. When you get your work done, it is done for them all, all are finished. If you undertake to confine it to ten volumes, the amount which those ten volumes would contain must determine the compilers as to what they would select. If they are to be confined to ten volumes, there will never be any more but those ten. If they do not contain all we wish to preserve, and deem it important to preserve, there will be no way of adding to them, because you will have gone through your materials, and if then you undertake to make other volumes, they will be supplementary volumes, made up of unimportant materials, and that would not do at all.

With this view of the subject, it seems to me that the compilation must go on for the whole work, and it must be determined, not by fixing your number of volumes first, and then regulating your selections with a view to that; but selecting your materials as the others were, from the importance and value of them, and then making whatever volumes they will necessarily make. Otherwise it cannot be done, as I think, for any of the purposes for which the other compilation was made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Vermont has made a capital argument, in my judgment, in favor of my proposition. He says you have got to ascertain what the whole material is; and, if you confine it to ten volumes, those ten volumes will embrace the most important subjects, and you will not be likely to publish the rest, because they will be of little value. That is precisely one of the objects I aim at. If you leave this unlimited, and give out a contract, and agree to take two thousand copies of as many volumes as the publishers choose to publish, nobody can foresee what the number of volumes will be, or what will be the value of the volumes themselves. We may have a great deal of matter published of no consequence at all, merely because it is a job which pays. I shall vote against this proposition anyhow, in the present state of things; but, if we are to undertake it, let us have some limitation by which we can control the character of the book, as well as the quantity of it. If we adopt the suggestion of my amendment, we accomplish the object of getting the book somewhere within our control in reasonable time, and seeing what it is to be, and what it is to cost, and insuring a careful attention to the nature of the selection. Otherwise we do, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, let out a stupendous job, of which nobody in the Senate can possibly see the end or the consequences.

Mr. COLLAMER. I supposed that if the design was to continue this publication, it was because the Senate was satisfied with the character of that which had been made; that so far as it had gone it was satisfactory; that is, that the materials of which it was composed were precisely those that we desired to retain. Then the compilers will have a guide. They will put into the new compilation just such materials as composed the former one. No man can tell how many volumes it will make until the compilation is completed. But if you take the other course, if you fix this Procrustean bedstead, and say that you will have but ten volumes, you cannot have such a publication as you had before.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We can publish the others afterwards.

Mr. COLLAMER. You have already said that you do not mean to publish them. I understood the gentleman to say that he wanted to have it limited to ten volumes, so as to limit the publication.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; but so that we may keep the control of it. I say that by the time these ten volumes are published, we shall know what the character of the book is, and what the cost of the book is; and we shall then be able to act understandingly. Of course, I shall favor continuing the publication if other matter of importance remains to be published.

Mr. COLLAMER. By that means we have to go over the same matter in the additional publications, and probably compel these people to go over material, all of which they regard as equally important, to select for the first ten volumes—leaving what they regard as less important to run the chance of being never published afterwards. We thus have an imperfect work, which does not answer the purposes intended. It is intended to be a depository of all that is valuable.

Mr. BROWN. My judgment quite concurs with the Senator from Vermont, that the publication of this book ought not to be confined to any given number of volumes, because it is very easy to be seen that if the compiler cannot comprise all the matter that ought to be published into ten volumes, then you must necessarily leave it to his judgment as to what you shall put out. I would much rather publish irrelevant matter, than leave out of the books material matter. It is much less deleterious to public interest to have that in which ought not to be in, than to have that left out which ought to be inserted. If there be any apprehension that the publication is going to run into abuse, that can be stopped, by simply putting a proviso to this amendment that Congress may, at any time during the publication, arrest it by paying the publisher for what he has done, and stopping. If he is going on publishing books of matter which amount to nothing, simply for the purpose of getting the pay, reserve to yourself the privilege of putting a stop to it on paying up to the time for the work he had done. I think the whole objection raised by the Senator from Maine can be met in that way. I think this is a vastly important publication, worth all the picture books that you have printed from the foundation of the Government, and not at all likely to cost one tithe of the money. When published, it is a book of real substance, on every page of which you find something to which the statesman, first or last, must refer. It is not a mere description of animal nature, and of geology, and all that, but it is something relative to the business of Senators, of Representatives, of the President, of members of the Cabinet, and of foreign ministers. It is a political history of the country, with which you could not by any sort of possibility dispense. I want to see the publication continued. I would admit of no abuse in it if I could prevent it.

Now sir, as to the objection raised by my friend from Arkansas, in reference to the purchase of paper, that can be easily avoided if it be a real objection. Let the paper be purchased as you purchase paper for other purposes, through the agency of your Superintendent of Public Printing. I believe that is the manner in which paper is purchased. I want no job for Gales & Seaton; no job for anybody; but I want a good substantial book. This is the first one I have advocated during this session because it is about the only one except the Congressional Globe that I consider worth the paper on which it is printed for the uses of the Government. The Congressional Globe is a proper book; this is a proper work, and beyond these two I do not believe you have published a book during the last ten or fifteen years by special legislation that amounted to anything. Of course you must publish your Journals, and publish the general proceedings of Congress; nobody objects to that; but when it comes to special publications, I think the Congressional Globe, which contains the debates of the two Houses of Congress, and this compilation, which contains the State papers, are about the only books you ought to publish, and I thank God and Congress that there are no pictures in them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move another amendment to the amendment. After the word "printing," I move to insert the words, "paper and binding," so that the printing, paper, and binding, should not cost more than the present price. I wish some guide. I suppose we are paying people fair rates now. It is considered a great party job to get the public printing.

Mr. BROWN. I think that amendment ought to be accepted.

Mr. TOOMBS. That the prices are profitable now, I do not suppose will be denied.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Georgia to say, "paper and binding of equal quality." We may want a better quality.

Mr. TOOMBS. I accept that.

Mr. BIGLER. Leave the class of paper discretionary with the Committee on the Library.

Mr. TOOMBS. Have you an amendment answering the purpose?

Mr. BIGLER. No, I have another.

Mr. TOOMBS. If you will amend mine, as you are better skilled in this business, I shall be obliged to you.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the prices or rates to be paid for the printing of this work shall not exceed those paid at present for the printing of the documents of Congress, including paper and binding.

Mr. TOOMBS. Of equal quality and value.

Mr. SEWARD. Say, "or having regard to the quality and value of the material used."

Mr. TOOMBS. Very well.

The amendment, as modified, is:

Provided, That the prices or rates to be paid for the printing of this work shall not exceed those paid at present for the printing of the documents of Congress, including paper and binding, having regard to the quality and value of the material used and work done.

Mr. TOOMBS. I accept it in that form.

Mr. BIGLER. The original proposition fixes the price of the work per volume as it was in 1831. The amendment accepted by the Senator from Kentucky restricts it to the present rates of congressional printing. The original price has not been stricken out.

Several SENATORS. It is not necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not to exceed the original rate nor to exceed the present price.

Mr. COLLAMER. So that we get it at the lowest rate.

Mr. BIGLER. The first rate is a rate per volume; that remains, and you fix an additional, a new rate, without knowing how it will affect that.

Mr. TOOMBS. There is not the slightest difficulty. The first is that it shall not exceed per volume the price paid for the old edition, and then it says it shall not exceed the present rates for printing or binding the documents of Congress.

Mr. BIGLER. How do you make the two consistent?

Mr. TOOMBS. It shall not exceed the prices paid for the cheaper of the two.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to suggest to my friend from Georgia a difficulty in this matter. He has confined the cost of printing, paper, and binding to the present price. Who are to pay for the compilation? Gales & Seaton. They are to get up this work. That adds somewhat to the cost. They are not to print what outsiders send to them, but have the compilation made, as I understand.

Mr. TOOMBS. If it is not provided in the original amendment, I have nothing to do with that. I think it ought all to be defeated.

Mr. BROWN. The pay your public printer gets is for printing matter sent to him. It does not make any difference to him whether it is sense or nonsense. You send him so much matter; he puts it up in type and prints it. That is all he has to do. But these men have some reputation at stake. They have to make the compilation. They must do it at some cost. It must cost them not only labor, but money. They cannot do it personally. If they do they are entitled to be paid for their labor. Somebody has to do it. Where is the material to come from? Are you to confine them down to the rigid rule of the exact sum which you pay to the public printer for printing a manuscript sent to him drawn off in a clear, pretty hand? That will not do. If this amendment must pass, then provide by some means that they are to be paid for the compilation.

Mr. TOOMBS. The mover and the gentlemen who are for the amendment say they are to print what the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House send them.

Mr. BROWN. Not at all. The Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House are not the compilers. They simply make the contract; but have nothing to do with the compilation.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator from Mississippi is entirely mistaken, as he will find, if the amendment is read.

Mr. BROWN. Let it be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to continue down to the 4th of March, 1859, the compilation of the congressional documents, &c.

Mr. BROWN. I did not understand heretofore that the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives did make the compilation. Then I have no objection on that point.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The method of compilation may as well be understood. The Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives did make the compilation before. I have made some inquiry, and I find that to be the case. I thought at first it was not so; but the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House made the compilation. It was not given into the hands of the Printer, so as to have some safeguard that no document should be put in and published which ought not to go in, as a mere book-making collection; but provision for their payment was separate and distinct, as I understand; and I believe I have it from the very best authority. They were paid separately by Congress for the work they did in compiling, and they were allowed just double their usual compensation. To a man who received $250 a month, this extra service would give him $250 a month more during the time he might be engaged in the compilation; and so with each clerk engaged upon it. That was the method by which it was done before, so that you will perceive whatever rate you may give under this contract, has nothing to do whatever with the cost of the compilation. It is a separate and independent charge.

The amendment of Mr. Toombs to the amendment was agreed to; and the question recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. PUGH called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to move a further amendment. I can vote for this amendment, though with some reluctance, if the number of copies does not exceed one thousand. The amendment, as it now stands, proposes to print two thousand copies. It also proposes that three hundred copies shall be given to the Department of State for distribution. That may be reasonable enough. It also proposes to give seven hundred copies to the Secretary of the Interior—I think five hundred would be sufficient—and that the other thousand should be reserved for the future direction of Congress. We have no right to print except for some purpose that the work may be valuable in itself. What do we want with the extra thousand copies? To distribute among members of Congress? If we do, we are going back again to the system we have been endeavoring to reform. If not, they are useless. There is no necessity for printing, then, beyond the extent of one thousand copies. I conceive that would be a liberal allowance—sending five hundred to the Secretary of the Interior, for distribution among colleges and libraries, and three hundred to the State Department, and reserving two hundred for the uses of both Houses of Congress and the Library. That would, in my judgment, cover all the wants we have, if we do not mean to give books to ourselves. I move, therefore, to strike out two thousand, and insert one thousand. If the proposition carries, I shall vote for the amendment; if not, I shall be compelled, with my views, to vote against it.

Mr. DAVIS. The proposition is to reduce the number to one thousand. It is intended to destroy the original amendment altogether.

Mr. BAYARD. How?

Mr. DAVIS. Surely you must expect greatly to increase the rate to be paid, if you diminish it to one thousand. The profit on the printing of one thousand, with the double restriction as to price which has been imposed, would not allow the work to be undertaken. It could not be printed at all on any such small scale. The expense incurred is in composition. As this is letter work, you may multiply the copies after you have paid for the composition without keeping up the same rate of expense. If the proposition had been made to make it six thousand instead of one thousand copies, I should have thought better of it.

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather vote for a proposition to limit it to one thousand copies without limiting the cost of the work, whether it is to cost more or less; because we have a right to print this work for the purposes of the country to the extent to which it is justifiable to use it, without regard to the question of cost. I am not going to stop on that. I do not care if you strike out the proviso as to the cost, provided you reduce the number; but if the object is to print two or more thousand copies, in order to go into the system of distributing among members of Congress, (for that is what it will come to,) I must vote against the proposition. If the object is—though it may be expensive—to publish a work which will be valuable in itself, to distribute a proper number of copies to the public offices, and give a proper number to the Interior Department for distribution among the libraries of the country, and reserve a reasonable number for the use of Congress—not individual members—then I am willing to vote for the proposition, apart from any restriction on the price; but I am not willing to vote for printing such a number of copies that the inevitable result will be distribution among members.

Mr. DAVIS. I find in this no proposition to distribute to members of Congress. I do not understand that to be the purpose of the amendment. So far from it, the amendment guards that these copies, or a certain number of them, shall be deposited as directed, in depot. I should be perfectly willing to give to members of Congress the authority to buy this work at the actual cost to the Government; and I know of no Senator whom I have heard speak on the subject who has not said he would buy the continuation, so as to complete the set which he has. I should be very glad indeed, myself, to have it. I have not heard a Senator who did not say he was not ready to pay the cost in his own case. But if you are to have a large edition, this is not a thing which will change; it will be the same a hundred years hence that it is to-day; it is the old fixed history of the country which you are to print. If you keep it in depot a hundred years, still there would come, year after year, members who would want the books for reference to enable them to perform their duties intelligently; and to those I would still give the privilege of obtaining them at their cost, and that would be the means of securing distribution to men who would make use of them, and not do with them what has been represented as having been done in relation to other public documents.

This whole matter of public printing is a subject of which I know little. Like the Senator from Georgia, I have not paid attention to it. I do not know myself how to make a calculation in regard to it; but I think it far better, whilst we are printing the edition, that it should be larger, rather than smaller than what is proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. I would rather increase it to six thousand, first guarding against the distribution in the manner suggested by the Senator from Delaware, and then keep the books in depot, to be thrown out from time to time, as the interests of the country might indicate.

Mr. CAMERON. The proposition of the Senator from Delaware will be the same as voting down the amendment. It will be impossible to do the type-setting of one thousand copies for the price agreed to be paid, with the guards put on this amendment now. The number the Senator from Delaware proposes to print would not be done at all. The amount to be paid, under the restriction, would not pay for setting the type. I doubt whether it would pay for compilation.

Mr. BAYARD. That depends on the sum we allow for printing.

Mr. CAMERON. You have a fixed sum, and have put on a guard. If the Senate think proper to have this printing, they ought to leave the number as it is. I should myself agree with the Senator from Mississippi in fixing a larger number.

Mr. BAYARD. It regards only my own vote.

The honorable Senator from Mississippi may suppose that the result would be that members of Congress like himself would be willing to buy these works after they are prepared. It may be so. There are some that would. I think it is probable I would do so myself; but I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind, from what I have heard and know of the past transactions of the Government, that we should get back to the same abuse that we have endeavored to escape from after a hard struggle, in reference to the publication of books and distribution among members of Congress for their individual use. As regards the necessity for the use of members of Congress, if you choose to provide a Government library for the Senate when you get into your new wing of the Capitol, you can do so; and there we can have the use of them not only for to-day, but for the future. You may put them in your library, and in the library two hundred copies would suffice for all. These are not public works to sell. I cannot see that we ought to publish a number of copies beyond those which the wants of the Government require. I admit the value of the work. I am willing to take off the restrictions as to price, and I do not care whether the work is to cost ten, or twenty, or twenty-five dollars a volume; but I am not willing to print such a number of volumes that the result will be that they will either perish, or more probably hereafter, as that is in the discretion of Congress, they will be divided among individual members. I have heard enough of the history of that to know what the effect of that is as regards its corruptive tendency. I am not willing, therefore, to vote beyond the number of one thousand copies, for I cannot see any possible use the Government can have of printing more.

Mr. HALE. I have got up to discharge my duty to the country by making a speech, as that seems to be the order of the day; but, if the Senate are willing to vote, I shall be very glad to forego that duty.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurred on the amendment of Mr. CRITTENDEN, as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAYNE] requested me to pair off with him; otherwise I should vote in the negative.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Foot, Foster, Hale, Houston, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Green, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Polk, Reid, Toombs, and Trumbull—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have two or three little amendments that I am directed to offer, by the Committee on Territories. The first is to insert at the end of the first section:

To John B. Motley, for compensation as acting Secretary of the Territory of Nebraska since the vacancy created by the death of T. B. Cummings, $316 35.

He performed this duty after the death of the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have another amendment, from the same committee.

And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles H. Mason, Secretary of the Territory of Washington, the difference between the salary of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, and the salary of Secretary of the Territory of Washington, for the time the said Charles H. Mason was acting Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs of said Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have one more amendment to add at the end of the first section:

For contingent expenses of the Territory of Kansas, $9,003 75, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, upon the production of satisfactory vouchers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. I renew my amendment that I moved yesterday, in a modified form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to offer the same amendment.

Mr. GREEN. It is changed as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fifth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year 1841," approved the 3d day of March, 1841, and the eighth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1858," approved the 3d day of March, 1857, are hereby construed and declared to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to allow and pay to surveyors of ports performing or having performed the duties of collectors of customs since the passage of the law last above recited, the same compensation, and no other, as is allowed to collectors for like services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate take the question on all the amendments separately?

Several SENATORS. Together.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There are some amendments that I hope will not be adopted—the amendments for completing custom-houses and marine hospitals.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us take the question first on the amendments made in committee, excepting such as Senators desire to take the question on separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Illinois indicate the amendment he desires to be excepted?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it would be better to take the question separately on all the amendments. ["Oh, no."] I imagine it is very difficult for every Senator to know what all the amendments are, there are such a number of them. They are not printed, and we do not know what we are voting for. Some of these amendments have been inserted sub silentio, without having a direct vote upon them. I think it would be better to have each of them presented; but the amendments to which I particularly direct attention, and on which I wish a separate vote at any rate, are those embraced in the amendments recommended by the Committee on Finance, and which apply to public buildings. They are on pages 4 and 5 of the printed amendments of the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then they can be excepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois desires that the amendments indicated by him shall be excepted.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN], who is not here, asked me to except the amendment in regard to the price of surveying private land claims in California. At his request I ask that that be excepted.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest that the amendments be read over in the order in which they were adopted. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. DOUGLAS. It will take all day. Except what you want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi insist on that course. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. BROWN. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments not excepted.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendments which have been excepted to; and first on those indicated by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this item:

For continuing the work on the custom-house at Charles ton, South Carolina, $300,000.

I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, upon what estimate that is based? I find, by the report of the Secretary

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST Session.

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1858.

NEW SERIES....No. 166.

of the Treasury on the finances, that the amount estimated, as necessary for that work, is $100,000, and I do not know why a larger amount than that estimated by the Department should be required.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator allow me—

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will yield in a moment, as soon as I get through with my statement. In the report on the finances, it is stated that the total amount of appropriations required, is $1,703,000; amount expended up to the 30th of September, 1857, $1,246,810 77; leaving a balance available for the completion of the work, of $456,189 23. The superintendent estimates that there will be required for the year ending the 30th of June, 1857—that is manifestly a mistake, because there has been a report made for that year; it means 1859—an appropriation of $100,000. The Committee on Finance have recommended an appropriation of $300,000. It seems to me that is one of those items that ought to attract the attention of the Senate. The report does not state what the whole amount necessary to complete this building will be. I apprehend, if the question had been submitted to the Senate when this custom-house was commenced, whether they would appropriate $2,000,000 for building it, such a proposition would not have carried. I wish to be informed why $300,000 are asked for by the committee, when the superintendent requested but $100,000? I should like to know what the total cost of the building, if it should ever be completed, is to be?

Mr. HUNTER. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that this amendment was based on an estimate sent in after the annual report of the Secretary. It was based upon an estimate made by Major Bowman, the superintendent of construction, and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. It was founded, as I said before, upon the information that the contracts for material which would have to be executed during the next fiscal year, and the labor which would be necessary in order to put that material in the building, would amount to this sum of $350,000; and I was assured that the Department estimated only to employ so much labor as was necessary, in order to place this material in situ, and to save it from waste. I understood it was upon that principle that all the estimates were made, with the exception of some that were made for custom-houses and marine hospitals which were nearly finished, and for which a small sum was necessary in order to complete them. That estimate was made after the report to which the Senator refers. In regard to this amendment, I suggest to the Senator that we had better take the vote on the whole of it in a lump, since it is only to this special clause of it to which he has objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would say to the Senator that but one amendment has been reported by the committee. The question will be on concurring in that amendment, unless some proposition be made to divide it.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I wish to say one word in regard to the rest of the amendment. I acknowledge it was improvident legislation that ever authorized these custom-houses to be built by the Government of the United States at Charleston or New Orleans, or any of these other places, without limiting the expenses of construction within a sum thought reasonable and proper by Congress. That was an error of long standing—one which cannot be corrected now by any legislation which we may enact. The whole question is, whether we shall finish these buildings or not. That is the first question; and the next is, if we mean to finish them, what is the most economical mode of managing those buildings during the next fiscal year? The most economical mode, as far as the committee could see, seemed to be to pay for that material which would be delivered by contract, and then to use so much labor as might be necessary to place that material in proper position, in order to save it from waste, and let the building progress to that extent, and to restrain any expenditure in the present condition of the Treasury beyond that limit. That, we were assured, was the ground upon which this estimate was recommended. It will be for the Senate to say whether they choose even to do so or not.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is one branch of my inquiry which the gentleman has not answered, and upon which I should be glad to have information; and that is, what is the estimate for finishing this building, if there is any estimate of the probable cost of completing this custom-house?

Mr. HUNTER. There is no accurate estimate. I asked the superintendent that question. I believe he thinks it will be built for a little under three million dollars, but he could not venture to make an accurate estimate. I have got none for the Charleston custom-house.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Now I ask and appeal to Senators to know whether they are prepared to go on voting $300,000 a year on such information as this? Here is a building for which you have already appropriated, including the amount in this bill, upwards of two million dollars. The superintendent is unable to give an estimate of what the building will cost—probably about three million dollars. Why, sir, this is a monstrous sum of money to be appropriated to the construction of a single custom-house. Three million dollars for erecting a custom-house for the single city of Charleston! Are we to go on appropriating money without any estimate whatever as to what the expense is to be? Is there no plan for this building?

Mr. HUNTER. There was a plan adopted by Congress long ago. It is being constructed according to that plan, and that is one reason why it has cost so much. I believe the only two custom-houses which we are making in that way are those in Charleston and New Orleans. They were made, not upon contract, but upon plans adopted by Congress, and that is one reason why they have been so costly. During the last year or two the Departments have adopted the plan of estimating first the cost, and contracting in reference to that supposed cost. When a contract was made in reference to the supposed cost, it has turned out in most instances that the cost was a little more, owing to some accident not foreseen when the estimate was made and the contract was entered into.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think that a very great improvement in our legislation that we should have an estimate for every work proposed to be constructed, and that the contract should be made with reference to the completion of the building; but it seems to me not too late now to provide that this building shall not cost more than a certain sum. In order to test the sense of the Senate in regard to these appropriations, whether they are to go on or not—$100,000 being all that was asked by the superintendent when the official report was sent to us—I will move to amend the clause, which now reads, "For continuing the work on the custom-house at Charleston, South Carolina, $300,000," by striking out "three" and inserting "one," if it be in order.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator can move to amend the amendment, by striking out "three," and inserting "one;" but, if he will allow me, here is a letter that I will read to him from the superintendent.

The Secretary read the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 6, 1858.

SIR: In my annual report to you on the condition of the several buildings being erected under the Treasury Department, I had the honor to call attention to the appropriations required to be made to carry on the works with economy, having a proper regard to the pecuniary embarrassment of the Treasury.

Since that period (September 30) the works have progressed with increased vigor, owing to the abundance and comparative cheapness of materials and labor, consequent upon the hard times. The result has been that larger expenditures have been made than could then be anticipated. As most of the works are being done by contract, it was impossible to restrain the increased expenditures.

From this cause the increased balances that were expected to be available for the first two quarters of the next fiscal year are greatly reduced, and in some instances entirely expended. Owing to this increased vigor in prosecuting the works, many of them will be finished, if the necessary appropriations are now made, before the next meeting of Congress.

In view of these circumstances, and to avoid damages which the contractors will not fail to demand if the works are suspended, and at the same time to save the large amounts now annually paid for rent of buildings, which those in question are designed to replace, I would most respectfully recommend that Congress be requested to make the following appropriations: All designed to complete, in every particular, all the buildings named, except the custom-houses at New Orleans and Charleston, and the Treasury extension, of which latter the sum asked will finish the south and a portion of the west wing.

I also submit estimates in gross, accompanied by others in detail, of the amounts necessary to fence, grade, and furnish those buildings that are now completed or that will be finished before the next meeting of Congress.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. H. BOWMAN,

Engineer in charge of Treasury Department.

Hon. HOWELL COBB, Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a general letter; applicable, I suppose, to all these appropriations.

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, sir; applicable to them all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It does not relate principally to the custom-house at Charleston. In regard to most of the public works for which appropriations are made by this amendment reported from the Committee on Finance, it is in contemplation that the appropriation will finish the building; but that is not so in respect to the custom-houses at Charleston and New Orleans, and the Treasury building. Therefore it does not seem to me that there would be any particular necessity for increasing the amount from $100,000 to $300,000 in this case. Let us appropriate $100,000 now, and see if, before another appropriation is called for, we cannot limit, in some way, the expenditures upon the very extravagant custom-houses at these particular points. I am not aware whether the motion to strike out "three," and insert "one," is in order at this stage of the proceeding. I suppose, however, if it is not in order in that form, it can be reached in some other way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that the motion would be in order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I make that motion, to strike out "three," and insert "one."

Mr. SIMMONS. I merely wish to make one suggestion. As I understood the letter, most of these appropriations are designed to pay contracts now made; and if there should be a contract made to furnish material for a larger sum than it is now proposed to appropriate, you cannot reduce the material at all and you have nothing to do but put it up. I understand that the custom-house is now in a condition where some very costly and elaborate work for the inside is going on, and I am told by those interested that the contractors will have claims on the Treasury for over two hundred thousand dollars in the ensuing fiscal year. I do not see any economy in having a lawsuit for damages by suspending the contract and laying by the materials, and having this work knocked over to next year rather than trying to finish it. If the work is to cost $2,000,000 and the plan was extravagant, I would not spoil it, but finish it. The capitals for the pillars have cost a great deal of money. I do not believe it is economy to stop it.

Mr. HUNTER. I would say to the Senator, if he will allow me, by way of explanation, that I saw Major Bowman himself, in reference to this matter, for it seemed a large estimate, and he told me it was no more than was necessary, in order to pay for the material contracted for and to put it up. I asked him if any loss would accrue to the Government if we should simply pay for the material, and not put it up, for I was anxious to confine it to that, if I could. He said there would be a great loss, because there was a great deal of carved marble, and if exposed to the weather it would be injured by that exposure. Upon that explanation, for one, I agreed to the item, reluctantly, I admit.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to state for the information of the Senator from Rhode Island, that there is almost half a million of dollars now applicable to this work—$456,000; or there was, when the report was made on the 30th of September. There cannot have been a great amount of work done since, and, at that time, $100,000 was all the officer anticipated. It will be borne in mind that we do not know what this building is to cost. Can it be possible that it will take $750,000 to complete the contracts now made?

Mr. HUNTER. That balance was for the fiscal year, and this estimate is for the next fiscal year. In winter they can work in that climate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is dated the 30th of September.

Mr. HUNTER. That was for this fiscal year.

Mr. TRUMBULL. For this fiscal year, but I suppose it to extend into the next fiscal year, if not expended.

Mr. HUNTER. I imagine it is absolutely necessary to meet contracts for the next fiscal year; and it could not be, unless there was a balance unexpended in this fiscal year.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This was the balance available for the completion of the work on the 30th of September, 1857; and I suppose that if it were not of use this fiscal year, it would be applicable to the next fiscal year; but certainly a very large amount of money is asked for this particular work, the cost of which is indefinite. Why should it not wait? The Senator from Rhode Island tells us that when we undertake to build a magnificent building, we should finish it. We have not undertaken to build it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes you have.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is no information to-day of what it is to cost. Will not the contracts show what it is to cost? The very statement of the case shows that no contracts have been made for its completion. If there were, you could state what it would cost. The superintendent is afraid to give the estimate. Why? It is so monstrous, so enormous, that it would startle Congress; and he is afraid to name the sum, for fear that pains would be taken to prevent the appropriation; but if we go along year after year, $300,000 at a time, he may make it cost three millions or thirty millions. Now I think $100,000, under the circumstances, is as much as ought to be appropriated, until we ascertain what the building is to cost, and know definitely what sum of money is finally to be appropriated to the completion of this extravagant work. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have but a word to say. I understood the letter read by the Senator from Virginia to exactly explain the reasons why this large amount should be spent this year; because there have been hard times, they can get labor cheap, and they have made more, and had a right to make more, under their contracts, and have exhausted the money. No very extravagant appropriation is asked for the next year—not near as much as they have spent this year. The Senator from Illinois seems to think some very great difficulty exists with this superintendent, because he did not submit a plan for the building. Congress, I suppose, when it sets out to build a custom-house, should not complain if it is undertaken to be built upon a very magnificent plan. I agree we should not spend $2,000,000 on a custom-house; but I would not spoil the building by saving something on the last million. That is my idea.

Mr. HUNTER. That is what the superintendent says. He had nothing in the world to do with the plan. The contracts for the materials were made as long back as eight years ago, and more than that.

Mr. DAVIS. There seems to me to be a misunderstanding about this matter. The plans which were prepared for these two custom-houses were submitted to Congress, and adopted by Congress. Then contracts were made, and specifications were drawn out to furnish the material called for by the specifications. Neither the contractor nor the superintendent could convert them into dollars at the time. It has gone on in this manner, and a number of contracts have been made. I merely say that, about seven years ago, a then Senator from Louisiana and myself made great efforts in this Chamber to get the plan of the New Orleans custom-house modified—to get some authority to modify it; but the Senate clung tenaciously to the plan which had been adopted by Congress. It had radical defects. They progressed with it until they have brought a mass of stone, upon the supposition that a building in New Orleans must be exactly like one in Boston, and put that mass of stone upon the earth until the earth commenced sinking beneath it, and then, for the first time, they waked up to the fact, and granted so much power as to enable the Department to substitute iron, and reduce the weight. Now, I think, with the Senator from Illinois, that this is a very large sum to pay for a custom-house, at a port, too, where the revenue is not very large; and if the proposition were to change the plan of the building, or authorize somebody to prepare a modification of the plan so as to reduce the cost, I should be ready to vote for it. I think both the plans were wrong in the beginning.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator will allow me to ask him a question: whether that be practicable now? Is it too late now to some extent to modify it?

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose, to some extent, it is still practicable. I do not know how far they have progressed; I have not seen either of these buildings for some time. I am sorry that neither of the Senators living at the place is here to give information. When the attempt was made to change the plan, it might have been modified even to the foundation, which was built upon the mere superstratum of the earth. The only plan on which they could have made a foundation to bear the weight of such a building was one which they did not adopt—by inverted arches to sustain it; but they proceeded on the hypothesis of digging a trench, and laying down a foundation, just as they did when the supersoil rested on stone beneath. The whole thing was a blunder; the plan was a blunder. Congress blundered, as it always does when it undertakes to direct the execution of a work, and forced the plan upon those who succeeded. It has been prosecuted from time to time; and it has cost a great deal more money at either place than both works ought to have cost on a proper and judicious plan.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If it is not too late to modify this plan, it seems to me it would certainly be better not to appropriate the full amount now asked for. Congress meets again in December. Now, I do not wish to be tenacious about the amendment I propose. If the work has gone so far that we are compelled to appropriate this money, like the Senator from Virginia, I shall unwillingly have to consent to it; but, if it is practicable yet, I would modify the plan. I think there should be an opportunity afforded to do it. Let us appropriate $100,000 now, and when Congress meets in next December, we can have an inquiry made and ascertain whether it is possible to make any change.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say to the Senator, since he asked me the question, that a Representative from one of the States, who is particularly interested in one of the custom-houses in question, that at Charleston, informs me that it is now impracticable to change the plan; that it has to be completed as it has been undertaken.

Mr. HUNTER. I so infer from what the superintendent told me. He said the real progress was much greater than the mere height of the wall indicated. The stone has been almost all cut and the material prepared upon a plan, and that hereafter it will go up much more rapidly in proportion to the money expended than heretofore. So I presume there is no chance of changing the plan. But I do not think we shall effect anything in the way of economy by diminishing the appropriation. If I did, I would vote with the Senator from Illinois, cheerfully.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will not raise a separate question upon the other amendment. This tests the question. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to it as far as I am able to do.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. HUNTER. There is an amendment which the Senator from California, who is now present, [Mr. GWIN], asked me to except. He will be here presently, and as there are other amendments to be proposed, it had better lie over until he returns.

Mr. HAMLIN. I suppose the Senator means to renew a proposition which was voted down.

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir; not to renew it. It was an amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, and the Senate, in Committee of the Whole, voted it down. Of course, the question comes up, will the Senate concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that it is necessary to renew the amendment in order to have a vote upon it. An amendment offered by a committee is the same as one offered by an individual; and if it be voted down it is not in the bill. That must be the result.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is an amendment made to the report, and, of course, it must be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. We reported it from the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks there is no distinction between an amendment offered by a committee and one offered by an individual Senator. Having been voted down, it is not in the bill at all, and has to be renewed again, or it cannot be voted upon.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose, then, that to accommodate the Senator from California, I ought to renew the amendment, and let it lie until he returns, when the sense of the Senate can be taken upon it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is that the only amendment now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the amendments offered as in Committee of the Whole have been disposed of; and the question now is upon the amendment which has just been offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HAMLIN. I renew the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole, by instruction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that is, to set off the tail end of Georgetown from the corporate limits of the city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment moved by the Senator from Virginia will be informally passed over, and the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

Sec. —. And he further enacted, That hereafter the northern boundary of the corporation of Georgetown shall be terminated by the prolongation of a line along the road and Eighth street, to the western limits of the present corporation: And provided, That the property set apart from the incorporated limits as above shall be appraised by three commissioners appointed by the circuit court of the District, and the owners thereof shall pay into the treasury of the corporation of Georgetown, in equal annual installments of one, two, three, four, five, and six years, such sums as said commissioners shall apportion as an equitable ratio of the several estates set apart to the whole value of the appraised real estate of Georgetown, as shown by its last appraisal: And provided, That an appeal from the said commissioners may be taken by the owner or owners of any piece or pieces of property, to the circuit court, and that the decision of said court shall be final and conclusive: And also provided, That the report of the said commissioners shall be entered up in said court as judgment against the property, to be collected by suit, as other taxes on real estate are collected.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that will not be put on this bill. Let the Senate pass it as a separate measure if they desire to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator from Maine if any vote has been taken, showing the consent of those who are proposed to be set off from the corporate limits of Georgetown?

Mr. HAMLIN. There has not.

Mr. ALLEN. Would you want to set them off without asking their consent?

Mr. HALE. If I can get the attention of a few Senators—I do not expect to get more than a few—I should like to make a short statement in regard to this matter. At the request of one or two citizens of Georgetown, yesterday, or the day before, I went over to look at this ground, and I understand from them that more than three fourths of the people living upon the territory do not wish to be set off. Several of them are here, and protest against it. Something was said the other day, by the Senator from Maine, about the irregular form of the city of Georgetown, and this being a little strip running out into the country. The irregularity in the form of the city of Georgetown arises from a former act of injustice perpetrated by Congress upon that corporation, by which all the property of the college and nunnery, by an arbitrary act of Congress, was taken off the limits of the city, and set off into the county, the effect of which was to give to them all the benefit of the police and the fire department of the city, and relieve them from the burdens of taxation.

A few gentlemen have moved into this part of the district and erected buildings. It is as much in the city of Georgetown as this Capitol is in Washington; but the road on the north would make a convenient separation, and some of these gentlemen desire to enjoy the benefits of the city without the burden of taxation, and they have petitioned to be set off; but I am instructed to say, and I have no doubt of the fact—I have it from the most respectable gentlemen in Georgetown—that more than three out of four of the very men you propose to set off by this act are opposed to it this moment, and do not desire to be set off, but desire to stay where they are.

Now, sir, at this stage of the bill I think it would be an arbitrary act to interfere with the corporation of Georgetown in this manner. Besides, this is the only possible way in which the city can ever expand into the country. You have cut off the corporate property of the literary institutions of Georgetown on one side, and the other boundary is a natural one. Here is the only chance of running out into the country, and the only way in which the city can expand. But a very small minority of the people living upon the land desire the separation. I think the Senator from Maine was very much mistaken when he said this slip was only about sixty rods wide. I went over and looked at it; I went on the ground myself; and from the best judgment that I can form, in conjunction with the gentlemen who were with me, that slip was over half a mile wide where it starts, and it grows narrow as it runs up. But aside from that, a great majority of the people who live upon it do not want it separated. I think, to say the least of it, it ought to be postponed until next year, and give the city of Georgetown, and the inhabitants of this disputed territory, a right to be heard.

Mr. BROWN. If the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Maine shall carry, will it then be in order to move a further amendment to the same amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order to move to amend the bill. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine is amendable now.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that the amendment moved by the Senator from Maine is an amendment to the bill. If it becomes part of the bill by adoption, can I then move to amend that part of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want the attention of the Senate for two or three minutes only. I have a plan of the city here, and if Senators will look at it they will see that I am certainly very nearly right if the plan be true, (and it is a plan furnished by the city,) that this strip of land is only, on the average, about sixty rods wide, and it is three quarters of a mile long. It is true, as I understand, and as it appeared before the committee, that one half of the persons in number, who are not the owners of any property to any considerable extent, do not consent to going off, while a very large majority of those interested are in favor of going off, and it is for the reason that the system of taxation upon them is oppressive. Their lots are acres, not mere house lots, and they tax them by a foot-tax on the front. Now, it may be a very reasonable tax to tax a man in the city two dollars a foot, but it will become very onerous when you carry it to a man's farm. There they tax a front foot-tax on the front of those lots for the purpose of lighting the city below. I say it is very onerous, because the lights are not in sight of them. This same city of Georgetown, at the present session, came here and asked Congress to relieve them from contributing to the making of roads in the county that led into the city, and were as much for the benefit of the city as the county; and we did it. The city said they ought not to be compelled to contribute money to make roads in the county. The committee reported a bill, and I think—the chairman will know—that that bill has passed the Senate and has gone to the House of Representatives.

Mr. BROWN. It has not passed the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. I say it has passed the Senate, and gone to the House. Treat these men equally; treat them fairly. If you will relieve the city of Georgetown from a small tax which they contribute to make county roads, then I say relieve these men, who live substantially in the county, from a system of taxation that is onerous upon them. I will not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. BROWN. My colleague on the District

Committee and myself differ upon this question. I do not think the ancient city of Georgetown ought to be divided. I think it was somewhere about the year 1786 that this portion of Georgetown was attached to the city, upon the application of the people who lived there.

Mr. HAMLIN. In 1784, I think.

Mr. BROWN. It has been there ever since. A majority—and I wish Senators would mark that—of the property-holders living upon the part of the city proposed to be stricken off, protest against it. It is a disputed point as to whether a majority of those in interest want to stay in or out. All of us know that there is a vast deal of difference in the value of city property. Those who want to stay out declare that they are the majority in point of interest; those who want to stay in say they are the majority in point of interest; but upon the point of numbers there is no dispute. The Mayor of the city tells me that, according to the assessment roll, a majority in point of interest want to stay in the city; and I put my vote upon that point, that they desire to stay inside of the city, and do not want to be stricken off. Now, sir, I am very equally divided on this matter. I care nothing about it personally one way or the other; but what I want to do is simply to hold the scales of justice in equal balance between these parties. I think myself the weight of testimony is in favor of those who are opposed to going out, and therefore I vote on their side. If I thought it was otherwise, I would vote on the other side.

Mr. BRIGHT. There can be no doubt about the fact that a very large majority in number of the persons residing within the district proposed to be stricken off are against the proposition of the Senator from Maine. I have it from most reliable authority that out of the thousand persons residing within those limits—

Mr. HAMLIN. There are not a thousand.

Mr. BRIGHT. Yes, sir, out of the thousand residing there, only three were found to favor it. That was the statement made to me by that city.

Mr. BROWN. Thirteen.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then the number has increased. Perhaps they have been able to raise thirteen since the statement of three was made to me. Now, as the Senator from Mississippi very truly stated, Georgetown was organized according to her present limits more than half a century ago without any effort since that time to change it, until a gentleman who has been living there a few months proposes to disarrange everything by cutting the city organization in two. Now, if we are entitled to look to what the majority of parties in interest desire, there can be no doubt that a majority are in favor of letting the district remain just as it is; and I hope no vote of the Senate will change it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to renew an amendment which I offered last evening. I would not do so but for the fact that three Senators voluntarily came to me and stated that on inquiry they were satisfied that the amendment was right. It is to insert:

And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the twenty-fourth section of the civil and diplomatic act of March 3, 1855, by paying the claims on file as ordered for assessment by Messrs. Upton and Sumney, and Washington and Mason, commissioners under the Cherokee treaty of 1835, there be appropriated the sum of $30,000.

I ask the Secretary to read the twenty-fourth section of that act.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator read it last night. The amendment is to carry out an existing law, and I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope there will be none.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I would now like to call up the amendment in relation to the California survey. It is the last of the committee amendments; and I think it would probably be better to act on it. It is to insert, after line one hundred and thirteen:

For making the surveys of the confirmed private land claims in California, the surveyor general is hereby authorized to pay such sum as he may deem reasonable, according to the circumstances connected with each case, not exceeding at the rate of twenty-five dollars for each mile of the boundary lines of any claim, and also for such lines as may necessarily be run and marked, or measured, in order to connect the lines of such claim with those of the adjacent public surveys.

Mr. BRODERICK. I am not anxious that the Senate should act upon this amendment. If the Senator is disposed to do so, let it remain until my colleague arrives.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us pass the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I only want to close my bill.

Mr. BRODERICK. I do not want to take any advantage. I am willing to wait until my colleague returns, if the Senator is willing.

Mr. HUNTER. It is justice to the Senator from California, who is absent, to say, that I voted against this amendment in committee and in the Senate; but I have seen the Secretary of the Interior, who tells me that he believes it essential to increase the price of surveying private land claims in California, or the work cannot be done at all. He said it had been done before by the assistance of the owners of the private land claims themselves, who paid a portion of the compensation to the surveyors, and he, thinking that would lead to corruption, has ordered the practice to be discontinued, and therefore did not think the claims could be surveyed at fifteen dollars a mile. That is all I have heard in relation to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We had his opinion to the same effect in writing.

Mr. BRODERICK. I believe that six dollars a mile is the amount now allowed by law in Minnesota, Kansas, and the States of Iowa and Wisconsin. The law provides that surveyors shall receive fifteen dollars a mile in California. If the chairman of the Committee on Finance will make the calculation of the number of dollars that this amendment will take out of the Treasury, I think he will be inclined to vote against it. This amendment proposes to give an additional ten dollars for every mile surveyed. I stated the other day, when this question was up, that the price of living was very nearly as low in California as it is here. I suppose it is about one third higher there, although it costs me as much to live here as it would cost me to live in San Francisco; and I live here very frugally. I hope that the amendment will not prevail; for I believe that the surveyors who will be appointed by the surveyor general to do the work will never receive a dollar of this money; and that it will go into the surveyor general's pocket. For that reason, I am opposed to it. I am sorry my colleague is not present; and I have no disposition to urge the vote upon the Senate. I would rather that the vote should go over until he is present.

Several SENATORS. It cannot go over.

Mr. HARLAN. I think this amendment should not pass. I am told it will not, and I will say no more. ["Question! question!"]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Before the vote is taken, I should be very glad to make a suggestion, in which I think it is highly probable the Senator from California will agree with me, that is for the public good in this matter. I would be glad, in the first place, to have the amendment read. Some modification is certainly needed, and some step ought to be taken, though in a different form.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That is the way the proposition now reads. Is there any limitation to it?

Mr. HUNTER. There is a limitation of twenty-five dollars a mile. The existing law allows fifteen dollars, and this amendment proposes to allow the surveyors of private land claims twenty-five dollars a mile.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is understood to be customary there—if I am wrong, the Senator from California will correct me—for surveyors appointed under the law to adjudicate, determine, survey, and ascertain the exact limits of a claim, after being employed by the Government of the United States, to receive pay from the parties who are the owners of claims. Thus the control of them is, in a measure, taken from the Government, which, in the first instance, employs them. The supposition is, that this leads to a survey, and the determination of the boundary of claims, not consistent with justice, or the decision and facts of the case. I therefore desire to connect with this a further amendment, to provide in substance—I will state merely the substance—that no such additional compensation, from any source whatever, shall be received by any surveyor in the employment of the United States, from any party, directly or indirectly; and that whenever any such shall have been proven to have been received, directly or indirectly, the survey shall be taken to be fraudulent.

Mr. BRODERICK. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRODERICK. I would like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether, in case there was an agreement made between the owner of the property and the surveyor, the surveyor general could know whether the deputy surveyor received that compensation or not, if the parties themselves were not disposed to disclose it?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will answer the Senator in this way: in the first place, it is alleged that the amount of compensation is insufficient; and the amendment is justified, I understand, upon the ground that it is not sufficient, and that they cannot do the work for the compensation the Government allows. I am informed by the Department that, without doubt or denial, it is an admitted fact that the surveyors receive additional compensation from the parties who own the claims, and consequently the boundaries may be run to suit themselves.

Mr. HUNTER. My friend will allow me to say to him that I am informed, by the Secretary of the Interior, that he has issued orders to prevent them from receiving fees hereafter from any claimant, and therefore it is unnecessary to add the proviso.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Exactly; and that leads to just this consequence: as the compensation of fifteen dollars a mile is not sufficient, and the Department do not believe it to be sufficient, that direction will merely make them do privately and secretly that which they now do openly and publicly. I believe the remarks of the Senator from California to be in some measure just about this business; but I do not believe we give sufficient compensation to have purity in the service. In answer to his question, I will say that, if two men, equally corrupt, enter into a corrupt agreement, the world may not easily make a discovery of the fact; but we do know that it is ordinarily the case, that from their indiscretion or over-confidence, or some cause, they will, in the end, develop and publish their transactions so as to let them be known to the public. Then they might be compelled, upon oath, in a court of justice, having asserted the fact incautiously in the hearing of some one else, to develop it. If you render the survey fraudulent by the very fact of a bribe having been received, you have a high guarantee against improper conduct in these matters.

I have no question, from what I understand of the difference between the surveying of a private claim in California and the surveying of ordinary straight lines in running the regular surveys of a country, that the pay for this service is not enough. There are very great differences—a great difference in the time it takes to perform it; there is a great difference in the character and class of investigation to get starting points, and to conform to the decisions of the courts, which do not trouble the public surveyor under the ordinary law; so that the compensation, I am satisfied, ought to be increased upon these private surveys; but there ought to be a limitation that the whole survey shall be fraudulent per se, whenever it shall be proved that the surveyor has received any other compensation than that which the law itself allows. We cannot escape the difficulty which the Senator from California suggests; but we can do this: we can allow a reasonable compensation; and a man who is inclined at all to be honest, or to have any respect for himself, having received enough, it is to be hoped that he will act honestly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to say a word or two on this amendment. It is a matter which I think I understand somewhat. It was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims. The system by which the public lands are surveyed is well established. There is a certain price laid down by Congress for the survey. That price is not sufficient in exceptional cases undoubtedly. In my own State, for a long series of years, the practice which is complained of has been prevalent, and been unaccompanied by any evil effects. The Government allows a certain sum per mile for surveying. The surveyor general of the State is ready to give the contract for surveys, at that rate, to any deputy surveyor; but the survey of a particular locality is difficult; there are swamps, there are difficulties in finding marks or lines, there is a confusion in private claims. When that occurs, the deputy surveyors do not apply for a contract, and do not survey the particular district. Things remain so, perhaps, for one, two, five, or ten years, when an individual becomes interested in having that district of country surveyed. He wants to buy the land, or he wants his own lines fixed, and what does he do? He applies to the surveyor general of the State, and says: "I want an order for the survey of that particular district." "I am ready to give it, sir, but nobody is ready to do the work at the Government price." "Well, sir, I will make up any extra sum that is required to induce a deputy surveyor to take the contract." That is legitimate, it is fair; there is nothing conducive to fraud in it.

Now, sir, in California most of these private land claims depend upon natural marks and bounds; then there is a prescriptive limit in many cases. There is necessity for taking oral testimony amongst the inhabitants in relation to the names given to particular rocks, to particular peaks, to particular valleys, by which the different grants by the Mexican Government are found. In some cases the matter may be plain and clear. Then you can get a surveyor, who, for fifteen dollars a mile, which is the limit allowed by Congress, will undertake to make the survey. In other cases, owing to particular difficulties either in the manner in which the private claim is described or from the locality in which the land is situated, nobody can be got to do the work for that price. I see no impropriety, I see no immorality in the private claimants in such cases, going to the surveyor general, and saying "if you cannot get a deputy surveyor to do the work in relation to my claim for the Government price, I want my land marked out, and if there is a special difficulty here, and five or ten dollars a mile more is required, I am willing to pay it to get my land marked out." I see no objection to that, nothing fraudulent or immoral in it. It has never produced any evil effects in our State, and has always been a prevalent custom there.

Now, a proposition is made to extend the limit to twenty-five dollars a mile. The result will be that your surveyor general will give twenty-five dollars a mile to all the deputy surveyors. Everybody knows how that works. You will get no more surveying done at less than twenty-five dollars. I hope, therefore, this amendment will not be adopted. At the same time I must say that I have seen no reason why the Secretary of the Interior should prohibit private claimants where the surveys cannot be done for the price fixed by law, from eking it out by an additional allowance. Still there ought to be regulations on the subject. So far as the amendment is concerned I hope it will not pass.

Mr. HUNTER. I will say that the explanation of the Senator from Louisiana seems to me entirely satisfactory. I hope we shall take the vote.

Mr. BAYARD. I have a word or two to say before the vote is taken. The Government of the United States by treaty with Mexico, stipulated that the Mexican claims there that were valid in themselves should belong to the parties, although the jurisdiction passed from one country to the other under the treaty. By a subsequent law, passed in 1851, the United States provided for an adjudication of the rights of the parties to their respective claims under the Mexican grants, and required them in all cases where they held under Mexican grants to appear before the constituted tribunal in order to have the adjudication made. The law required that they should take a patent from the United States after the adjudication on a survey being made, which survey the Government undertook to make. Now, sir, if the sum of fifteen dollars a mile will not provide for the survey which an act of justice to the parties where claims were adjudicated and requires should be made, because they cannot get a title without the patent, and the survey is to precede the patent by your own law, on what principle is it that you deny them a sufficient sum to make those surveys in order that patents may issue? It comes to that. The surveys cannot be performed for fifteen dollars a mile. That you get from the Interior Department and the surveyor general. You say to the claimant through the Interior Department by its regulation that he shall not pay the surveyor to survey it. The survey is necessary in order to obtain his patent. Without a patent he cannot have any title because the law requires it, and therefore you leave him in this position: your Executive Department refuse to let him pay the additional sum (whether right or wrong according to the views of the honorable Senator from Louisiana); they refuse it by an express order, and you do not allow in your law a sufficient sum to obtain a deputy surveyor to make surveys other than the straight line surveys of the United States; they will not survey the claim, and hence the contract cannot be performed, for you deny the title to the party until the survey is made.

This amendment cannot be just; it cannot be right. You either must pass this amendment or you must require your General Land Office to rescind its order, and suffer the parties to make up the sum that is requisite to have a survey made, which is out of the ordinary duties of the surveyor. You cannot get deputy surveyors to make surveys of these claims. The labor is worth more than fifteen dollars a mile. This provision only authorizes the amount to be extended in these cases. You are bound to make the surveys because you refuse to carry out the treaty until the surveys are made. In order to perfect these grants which you have said by your treaty are good and valid, you have declared that the parties shall take a patent from the United States; you say they shall not have a patent without a survey, and now you will not provide means to make the survey, and the executive Government refuse to allow parties to provide means to do it themselves. That cannot be justice.

Mr. HOUSTON. Perhaps I am not well enough acquainted with this subject to give an opinion understandingly upon it; but I really think the rates now given are very exorbitant. I have no idea that the survey costs five dollars a mile. I think in our contracts three dollars is the usual price for surveying, and people do it very well at that. It seems to me if there is danger of corruption in deputies receiving from private citizens whose claims they are allowed to survey, additional fees to what they are allowed by law, fifteen dollars per mile, that there will be a stronger inducement by this Government giving $60,000, and placing it at the disposition of the surveyor general. If you place it within his discretion he can obtain vouchers, for I have no doubt there are thousands of applicants now that are disappointed and cannot obtain employment from him. It is strange that there has been no remonstrance here to Congress asking for an increase of wages if it is so necessary as is supposed; but it seems that the plea is that the surveyors will be induced to act corruptly, and receive bribes from those who have land, the lines of which are to be run out.

Now, Mr. President, I am perfectly satisfied that fifteen dollars per mile will be amply sufficient not only to accomplish the work, but to give a liberal recompense to the surveyor. It is a very easy matter to calculate it. I should at least suppose they would survey twenty miles a day; and if you multiply fifteen by twenty, you will find that it is a very handsome per diem; and if you allow for contingencies, there would still be a residuum left that must make it greatly profitable. It seems to me that every inducement of this kind that you hold out to officers of this Government, making them irresponsible, and leaving it discretionary with them to pay moneys, is a temptation to deviate from the path of honesty, if they have previously pursued it, and to obtain false certificates and vouchers to settle with the accounting officers for the amount. I do not know who the surveyor general in California is, and I am casting no reflections of a personal character; but would it not be an easy matter to obtain forged certificates of different individuals to the amount of $10,000, and come on here and receive a bonus of $50,000, and put it in his pocket?

So you find that it is a temptation to corruption; and so far from resisting the evil that you desire to guard against, you are encouraging corruption of the rankest character, and rendering officers at a great distance from the seat of Government irresponsible where neither vigilance nor check can be put upon them. I cannot vote for this amendment, because, in the first place, it is unreasonable, and, in the next place, it is holding out inducements to corruption, rather than restraining those who are supposed to take private perquisites for their labor. It is the custom in most countries with which I have been acquainted, that individuals pay for the work that is done; and it is for their account it is done, subject to the revision of the county surveyor.

Mr. HUNTER. I am satisfied. I thought it due to the Senator from California to offer the amendment; but I should prefer to withdraw it. What has been said by Senators has induced me to return to my original opinion, and I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. BRODERICK. I am very willing that this question should not be considered until my colleague arrives. After the remarks of the Senator from Delaware, I care very little whether this money is taken out of the Government Treasury to enrich this officer or not. I wish, if it is taken out, that it shall not be counted or shall not be charged against California, for I believe that the ten dollars additional will be put into the pocket of the surveyor general, and that the owners of private land claims will have to pay an extra sum for the purpose of having their lands surveyed. It will be a contract between them and the deputy surveyor, and the surveyor general will know nothing about it. He will get the additional sum. It would be very easy, as the Senator from Texas has stated, for him to come here with a claim of fifty or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars against the Government; and the Secretary of the Treasury, I suppose, would pay it. I am against this amendment, because I believe it is a bid for the purpose of making the surveyor general dishonest. I am willing that it should remain on the table until my colleague arrives. I hope, therefore, it will lie on the table.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we had better vote. Let us get rid of this question. I want to get a vote on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from California that a motion to lay the amendment on the table will carry the whole bill with it.

Mr. BRODERICK. Well, sir, if there is any doubt on the part of any Senator here, I do not want this vote to be taken, for I do not wish to cripple the people of my State. I am as anxious to have the lands there surveyed as the Senator from Delaware, I think. I am somewhat interested myself, and I believe, therefore, I have as much interest in this question as the Senator from Delaware, or any other Senator upon this floor. But I do not wish to take any unfair advantage of my colleague. He may have information that may satisfy the Senate that I am wrong. I hope, therefore, the matter will not be disposed of at this time.

Mr. HUNTER. I think, under the circumstances, that I shall withdraw the amendment. The Senator from California, when he returns, can offer it if he chooses.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I shall feel bound to offer an amendment to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire now to renew the amendment I offered yesterday, making an appropriation for the improvement of the channel of the St. Clair flats. It is to insert, as a new section:

And he it further enacted, That $54,037 be appropriated for completing the improvement of the channel over the St. Clair flats in the State of Michigan.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. I have paired off with the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.]

Mr. PUGH. I have paired off, or I should vote for the amendment.

Mr. WADE. I have paired off with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. TOMBS.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have paired off with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. DIXON.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Bright, Broderick, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, King, Polk, Rice, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, and Trumbull—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Clingman, Hammond, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Reid, Sebastian, Wright, and Yulee—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL at first voted in the negative; but before the result was announced, changed his vote, in order, as he stated, to move a reconsideration.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BIGLER. I hope not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and declared that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BIGLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion. I want an executive session.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. YULEE. I think the result had been announced by the Chair before the Senator called for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It had not been announced.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIGLER. I wish to suggest that it is important that we should go into executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALLEN] having answered to his name.

Mr. WADE. I have paired off with the Senator from Georgia.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hale, Hammond, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mallory, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Bigler, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hamlin, Houston, King, Rice, Simmons, and Trumbull—13.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. A. G. CAROTHERS.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FORT SNELLING

Mr. CLARK, of New York, took the floor.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will, if the gentleman will yield to me, offer the resolutions of the minority of the committee, in order that they may be before the House with the resolutions of the majority.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I supposed that the resolutions of the majority and the resolutions of the minority were before the House, and that I was in order in moving a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions submitted by the majority of the committee are before the House, but the resolutions of the minority of the committee are not before the House. The Chair did not understand on yesterday that the gentleman from New York offered his resolutions, but simply that they were read for information, the gentleman stating that he proposed to offer them.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia whether the resolutions he proposes to submit from the minority of the committee are the same as those published in the report, or those resolutions modified?

Mr. FAULKNER. They are not the same.

The resolutions offered by Mr. FAULKNER were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the evidence reported by the select committee has failed to exhibit any fact or circumstance in connection with the recent sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling which in any degree impeaches the personal or official integrity of the Secretary of War.

Resolved, That all other questions connected with said sale, and suggested by the testimony, being matters of executive discretion, or subjects alone proper for judicial inquiry and redress, and not falling within the appropriate jurisdiction of this House, it is ordered that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the report of the committee be laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I rise to a question of privilege. I observe, in the Globe of yesterday, a speech in respect to the scriptural sanction of slavery. My first impulse was to reply to it this session; but sharing, as I do, in the impatience of members to get through, I content myself with giving notice that I shall embrace the earliest opportunity, next session, to give my views on the question whether the Bible sanctions slavery.

Mr. MASON. And I give notice that when the gentleman makes that speech I intend to answer it.

Mr. PENDLETON. My attention has been arrested by a speech published in the Globe of Saturday, which was delivered by my colleague from the fourteenth congressional district of Ohio, [Mr. BLISS.] I send it to the Clerk's desk to have two sentences read, which I have marked.

The extracts were read as follows:

"Mr. CHAIRMAN: During the crowded Lecompton debate, I refrained from seeking the floor upon it, chiefly because I desired to see the new opponents of the Kansas outrages, and especially my colleagues, learn to stand and, if possible, to walk alone; and also because the subject itself was one I could with great difficulty coolly consider."

"And when the Administration and its masters, foiled in naked wickedness, incubated with those whose plighted faith, if not their principles, should have been their guard, and hatched the nasty substitute—a substitute establishing the principle of non-submission, while claiming to provide for its effect, though coupled with conditions fraud inviting and deeply insulting to Kansas, to freedom, and the North—I watched the new-born men, to see whether a soul had been actually given them."

Mr. PENDLETON. I did not hear the speech of my colleague delivered, and I presume it was not delivered during any of the hours appropriated to the ordinary and proper business of the House. The first knowledge I had of it was when my attention was called to it last Saturday evening by one of my colleagues as it appeared printed in the Globe of that morning. The speech, Mr. Speaker, contains the opinion of my colleague as to some of his colleagues on this floor. He imputes to them a breach of their plighted faith in their action on the conference bill. The member has not specified which of his colleagues he intends to include within the scope of that remark; and I now desire to ask him whether it was his intention to include me?

Mr. BLISS. I ought perhaps to say in regard to myself, that there was no personal communication between me and any of my colleagues on that subject.

Mr. PENDLETON. I should like to have the question answered directly. I have nothing to say as to other gentlemen.

Mr. BLISS. I will answer the question. I will say that through third parties the action of my colleagues was pledged to me, and that my subsequent action was based upon that pledge; and, I will say further in respect to the gentleman who is asking the question, [Mr. PENDLETON,] that I have been informed since the vote—and, indeed I may say, within a few hours past—that neither of the gentlemen from the Cincinnati district [Mr. PENDLETON or Mr. GROESBECK] authorized any such pledge to be given to me. It may appear hereafter that others failed to authorize such a pledge. But I do say that the pledge was made to me. It was represented to me that all my colleagues who acted with me in voting for the Montgomery amendment were pledged to carry out their own principles as embodied in their amendment, and to the end. I was thereby induced to give the votes I did, which apparently conflicted, though not really, with my settled principles.

Mr. PENDLETON. I wish to ask a simple question, and to have it directly answered. It is whether or not the gentleman then intended, or now intends, to include me within the remarks he then made?

Mr. BLISS. I think I have answered the question fairly and fully. I have stated that all my colleagues were included in the pledge given to me by these persons. I have stated, also, that within a short period I have been informed that my colleagues from the metropolis of my State [Messrs. PENDLETON and GROESBECK] were not intended to be included in that pledge.

Mr. PENDLETON. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman disclaims any intention to include me in that remark, I leave the matter to those interested, having no further interest in it.

SALE OF FORT SNELLING.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I ask to have read, for the information of the House, the resolutions which I offered last night as a substitute for the resolutions reported by the majority and minority of the committee.

The amendment proposed yesterday by Mr. CLARK, of New York, was then read, as follows:

1. Resolved, That the evidence reported by the select com- mittee as to the recent sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling has failed to exhibit any fact or circumstance impeaching the personal or official integrity of the Secretary of War.

2. Resolved, That the management of the sale by the agents authorized by the Secretary of War to conduct the same, was injudicious and improper, and resulted, by reason of its want of publicity, in the exclusion of that competition among persons desiring to purchase, which, under the circumstances, should have been permitted.

3. Resolved, That the terms of sale adopted by the agents appointed by the Secretary of War to make said sale are disapproved, for the reasons, first, that a credit unauthorized by law was given to the purchaser; and, second, that the right of possession after the sale, reserved to the Government, was calculated to prevent a fair sale at a fair price.

4. Resolved, That the evidence taken by the select committee appointed under the authority of the resolution of this House of January 4, 1858, be transmitted to the Secretary of War, to the end that, in conjunction with the Attorney General of the United States, he may adopt such measures in respect of the sale as they shall be of opinion, in view of the facts developed by such evidence, that the public interest requires.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to say that I shall ask for a separate vote upon those resolutions.

The SPEAKER. That question does not now arise, but if it be the pleasure of the House, when the House comes to vote upon the respective resolutions, a division of the amendment will be allowed by the Chair. The Chair doubts whether a division can be had of such an amendment. It must be taken as an entirety. If not, the effect of it practically would be to allow a gentleman, instead of offering one amendment, to offer two or three, and instead of there being an amendment and an amendment to an amendment pending, it might result in there being five or ten amendments pending. But the views of the House upon this question can, perhaps, be better obtained by allowing a division to be called, and the Chair, if there be no objection, will so propound the question to the House when the House comes to vote upon the resolutions.

Mr. JEWETT. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. GROW. I desire now to ask a separate vote on the resolutions of the minority of the committee, in case we should reach them.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. BISHOP. I would like to inquire whether it was not the understanding yesterday that the vote was to be taken at twelve o'clock to-day?

Mr. CLARK, of New York. There was no understanding by which I am to be restricted of the time to which I am entitled. I claim the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if he intends to move the previous question at the conclusion of his remarks? because I desire to say that the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRIS,] who was a member of the committee, was indisposed yesterday, and was not able to participate in the debate; and he ought not to be deprived of an opportunity of making some remarks on the subject.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I am willing to move the previous question at the conclusion of my remarks, if it is the pleasure of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will not move it till the gentleman from Illinois has had an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. JEWETT. I ask the consent of the House to have the amendment which I desired to offer read for information.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I have no objection, if my time is not thereby abridged.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

1. Resolved, That the facts and circumstances reported and relied on by the majority of the committee do not authorize the conclusion to which they have come, that the action on the part of the Secretary of War was a grave official fault.

2. Resolved, That the contingency had not occurred upon the happening of which alone was the Secretary of War authorized to sell Fort Snelling or the land attached thereto; and that the sale, in the opinion of this House, is void.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House while I offer some unpremeditated remarks upon the questions which are now presented for our consideration. I should have been content, at this late hour of the session, to have given a silent vote upon the resolutions submitted to us, had I not arrived at the conclusion, after a deliberate examination of the reports of the majority and minority of the committee, and of the evidence adduced before them, that the subject is one which deserves, and should receive, the careful attention of every member of this House. Mr. Speaker, it involves a subject no less grave than that of the mode in which the national defenses of the country may be alienated. We are officially informed by the reports of this committee of investigation, that one of our military reservations, long since established, embracing an extensive and valuable tract of land in the midst of a settled and rapidly improving section of the country, has ceased as such to exist. Well may this House pause and inquire by what authority has this alienation been made, and under what circumstances, and for what pecuniary consideration, has the title been contracted to be ceded away.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a party question, and involves the fate of no Administration measure, and hence no member of this House is hampered or embarrassed by the opinion of any other man or any set of men, or of any of the officials of the Government, in pronouncing his judgment upon all the facts developed.

It is not to be unheeded that the case involves, to a very considerable degree, the conduct and character of the Secretary of War, the deportment of the commissioners appointed by him to make this sale, and the transactions of the alleged purchasers at that sale. All these gentlemen and their acts, as connected with the subject-matter of inquiry, pass in review before us.

I may be permitted to say that I am one of those who think that the character of any man, be he a public man or a private citizen, is a thing almost too sacred to be touched by the legislation of this House. In dealing with it whenever such dealing becomes indispensable, we cannot fail to exercise a care most considerate, and a judgment unswayed by party or personal prejudices.

Mr. Speaker, I have examined with no inconsiderable attention the reports of the majority and minority; and while I render full credit to each for the signal ability displayed, I find myself unable to concur with either in the results at which they have arrived. I shall endeavor to state briefly the grounds of my dissent from the resolutions both of the majority and minority, and then address myself directly to the series which I have offered as a substitute.

Mr. Speaker, the resolutions of the majority condemn everything and everybody. I concede that, in their report, they have developed a chain of circumstantial evidence, tending to draw in question the official conduct of the Secretary of War, and affecting the integrity of the sale itself to such a degree that I am free to say that I should hesitate long before I could give my approbation to that sale. I cannot indorse the resolutions of the majority which propose to implicate the Secretary of War, which propose to impeach the commissioners appointed to make the sale, which propose to impeach the alleged purchasers, which propose to impeach the sale itself, and thus invite a universal condemnation of every person and everything connected with the transaction.

I am as strongly disinclined to adopt the resolutions of the minority, which seem, with equal failure of discrimination, to exonerate everything and every person. They propose to exonerate the Secretary of War, the commissioners of the sale, the alleged purchasers, and the machinery by which the sale was effected, from every kind of criticism or censure. They propose to give the sanction of this House, in official and legislative form, as well to the mode by which the sale was conducted as to the terms of the sale. Their exoneration covers the whole scheme of the speculation. Sir, I dissent from both. It is with no ordinary satisfaction that I can say that a critical examination of all the evidence leaves not the slightest ground for implication of the personal or official integrity of the Secretary of War. I am by no means satisfied with the manner in which the sale was conducted, nor with the terms of the sale. There are circumstances surrounding this sale which, in my judgment, should not be permitted to attend the sale of any of our national defenses, or any portion of the public domain.

Mr. Speaker, what is alleged in the report of the majority, touching the official conduct of the Secretary of War? If I have eliminated with accuracy the substance of that report, the charges are two, and only two. The first is, that he exceeded the power and abused the discretion vested in him by law in directing the sale. The other is, that he confided the conduct of the sale to inexperienced and incompetent agents.

Now, sir, I think I may assume that no member of this House is to such a degree the enemy of the Administration as to be willing to cast unmerited censure upon the conduct of a gentleman of distinguished reputation, of courtly manners, of unimpeached and unimpeachable character, for the reason that he fills a Cabinet office under that Administration. And I hope I may, with equal confidence, assume that there is no man in this House who, from mere sympathy with the Administration, would hesitate, upon a question like this, to pronounce his condemnation of the manner of a sale which, if it had been made under the administration of political adversaries, would have met with clear and marked reproof.

Mr. Speaker, I propose to consider a moment the allegation that the Secretary of War has exceeded his power in directing the sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling. Well, sir, what if he has? Is that any impeachment of his good faith in ordering the sale? Suppose he has made a mistake as to the law, (and I am not, by any means, certain that he has not,) does it follow that this House, differing with him in opinion, is at liberty to assail him? Assume, if you please, that the legal power did not exist in the Secretary of War to order a sale of the reservation at Fort Snelling—and I cannot but deem the question at least doubtful, in view of all the facts disclosed, touching its capability for military use—it by no means follows that his erroneous judgment, as to his legal powers, or an indiscreet exercise of them, is to subject him to such censure as is implied in the resolutions of the majority. It is clear, it is conceded by all, whether friends or foes, that he was not concerned in the speculation; that he was not to have one single dollar of the profit; that if he has erred at all it was by mistake, and without intent to permit the Government to be defrauded of its domain, or the Treasury to be despoiled of the money.

It is charged that, in the appointment of the agents to conduct the sale, he was governed by the rules of party discipline and selected personal and political friends. It will scarcely be questioned that such considerations may properly, and that, at any rate, they at all times do influence the appointments made by the persons for the time being in the possession of the power of the country. Sir, this discrimination in favor of his friends is no ground of accusation—scarcely of criticism. It casts no imputation upon his personal or official integrity. It is true that he ought to have selected discreet and capable men as the agents to perform the services which the statute did not contemplate that he should discharge in person. But there is not an item of evidence proving that the agents selected by him for that purpose were men of known incapacity. The criticism upon their official conduct, to which the result of the investigation exposes them, is one to which the Secretary of War had no reason to expect that they would subject themselves; and no Administration can be justly censurable, or be at all times held responsible, for the acts and errors of its appointees.

If the circumstances justify the conclusion to which my reflections have led me, I can recognize no embarrassment in relieving the personal and official integrity of the Secretary of War from all imputation, while at the same time we pronounce upon the sale, and the circumstances attending it, such judgment as the transaction merits upon the evidence disclosed.

Mr. Speaker, if the Secretary of War committed an error in directing the sale, it is an error into which very many others have fallen. The minority of the committee—both, I believe, professional men of acknowledged ability—and many other members of the House, appear to entertain no doubt of the legal power of the Secretary to make the sale. I will briefly speak to that question—had the Secretary of War the power to make the sale? It is conceded on all sides that the power to sell, if it existed at all, is derivable under the statute of 1819, or that of 1857. The act of 1819 reads as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, under the direction of the President of the United States, to cause to be sold such military sites, belonging to the United States, as may have been found or become useless for military purposes. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on the payment of the consideration agreed for, into the Treasury of the United States, to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments, conveying and transferring the same in fee; and the jurisdiction, which had been specially ceded for military purposes to the United States, by a State, over such site or sites, shall thereafter cease."

The act of 1857, amendatory of the act of March 3, 1819, is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1819, entitled 'An act authorizing the sale of certain military sites,' be, and they are hereby, extended to all military sites, or to such parts thereof which are, or may become, useless for military purposes: Provided, nevertheless, That nothing in this act, nor in the act above mentioned, shall be so construed as to impair in any wise the right of the State within which any such site or reservation may be situated to impose taxes on the same, in like manner as upon other lands or property owned by individuals within the State, after such sale."

It is claimed that this latter act is not applicable; for that the sale was made under the provisions of that of 1819. Each of these acts authorizes the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President of the United States, to cause to be sold such military sites as have been found, or as have become, useless for military purposes. The act of 1857—which, as I have already stated, is to be regarded as inapplicable—varies in the language prescribing the contingency upon which the sale is authorized. It is, perhaps, broad enough, literally construed, to authorize the sale of any military site which may become useless for military purposes, or of such parts of any military sites which are useless, or which may become useless. The argument addressed to us in the report of the minority of the committee is, that the military site at Fort Snelling had actually become useless, and had been found useless prior to the order for its sale.

It may, I think, well be questioned whether either of these acts ought to be deemed applicable to the cases of military sites existing in our Territories. Does not each of them by its terms contemplate that the military sites or reservations authorized to be sold, in the event of their uselessness having been established, shall be such, and of course such only, as those existing within the jurisdiction of a State? The act of 1819 declares that the jurisdiction which had been specially ceded for military purposes to the United States by a State over such site or sites shall cease. Has it not, therefore, manifest reference to the cases of military sites of which a cession for military purposes had been derived from a State? The case of Fort Snelling, in the Territory of Minnesota, does not answer that description. No State had ceded to the United States jurisdiction for military purposes over the site; nor was there then any State to which the jurisdiction could be retroceded by the United States upon a sale. The term "reservation" is not found in the act of 1819. This word first appears in the proviso attached to the act of 1857. But the language of this proviso seems to contemplate that the "reservation" to which the act applies shall be one situated within a State whose general power of taxation might be restricted or impaired but for the special provision.

I am not unmindful that the intended meaning of an act of Congress may be ascertained by reference to contemporaneous acts of the Government; and that a state of things existing at the time of its passage, may be referred to as indicative of the remedial purpose of the act. I am not informed by either of these reports what particular military sites were, at the time of its passage, designed to be alienated under the law of 1819. As to the law of 1857, we have more light. I am quite satisfied that the mischief intended to be remedied by that act, was that resulting to parties desirous to purchase by reason of the proprietorship of the General Government; and that the reservation referred to in the proviso, was the military reservation at Fort Snelling. It is to be remarked that this act of 1857 was probably passed by this House without the knowledge of perhaps any persons beyond the circle charged with the accomplishment of the purpose.

It turns out, upon inquiry, that in respect of this, as may, perhaps, be justly said of very much of the general legislation of the country, it crept noiselessly and stealthily into a bill making appropriations for the support of the Army; and that, too, upon a report of a committee of conference. It is, therefore, one of those instances which may, perhaps, for aught I can tell, justify a remark made a few days ago, in my hearing, by a distinguished gentleman upon this side of the House, that a very great part of the legislation of the House comes within the designation of "an accident, a blunder, or a swindle."

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to say to the gentleman that this sale took place under the act of 1819, and not under the act of 1857; and further, that upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War, Hon. Jefferson Davis, a bill has been pending in this body for three years prior to the passage of this act, for the very objects contemplated by this section of this appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. So I understand it, and therefore I have proposed to examine the law of 1819 for the purpose of ascertaining whether, by its fair legal construction, it authorized the sale; and I wish here to be expressly understood that the point I have presented is one which I do not raise with entire confidence of its accuracy. It is in my judgment a doubtful legal question on which I do not think this House need pass, but which should, I think, be transmitted to the Secretary of War and the Attorney General that, upon a review of the case, they may, if they shall be so advised, procure the decision of a legal tribunal upon the question, if the House shall be of the opinion that there is doubt on the subject. I have not failed to observe that when in 1856 application was made by the present honorable Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Rice, to the late Secretary of War, Mr. Davis, that the sale of the reservation at Fort Snelling be authorized, such application was declined by the late Secretary of War, not upon the ground that a further act of Congress was essential to authorize him to make the sale, but upon the ground that the reservation was still actually needed for military purposes, and that therefore the offer to purchase could not be entertained. Nor am I unmindful that in the recommendation made by the honorable Senator to the present Secretary of War, on the 7th of April, 1857, that the military reservations at Fort Snelling and Fort Ripley be sold, the suggestion as to the sale of Fort Snelling was rested upon the law of 1819, and not upon the law of 1857. I have therefore called the attention of the House to the precise phraseology of the act of 1819, in order that the House may consider whether the point which I have presented in respect of the naked power to make the sale is, or is not well taken. I can readily imagine that Congress should give authority to the Executive to make sale of military sites existing in the States—while it might well hesitate to authorize the alienation of those situated nearer to the frontier, and within the confines of a Territory. Sir, in a State there is a government which can by its unaided power protect the rights of person and property. There is a jurisdiction, sir, which can maintain forts and arsenals, which can provide for the public defense and secure the inhabitants against the danger of invasion, while in the Territories of the United States, with a sparser population and less of the elements constituting the sources of public protection, occasions might arise when resort to the protection of the military establishment of the General Government might become necessary.

Mr. Speaker, in each of the acts of 1819 and 1857 the condition, or contingency, upon which the power to sell is to be exercised, is specifically declared. It is a limited power, to be strictly pursued. Its construction is governed by clear, well-defined, and well-settled rules. The condition is express that the military sites should have first become useless for military purposes.

Mr. HUGHES. As the gentleman has drawn a distinction between military reservations outside of States and those inside, I desire him to say where he derives the power of the Secretary of War to acquire such a reservation as this, and if the very same source from which he derives the power to acquire such a reservation would not give him a power to sell it?

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I will reply to that interrogatory by saying that no one of the executive officers of the Government has the power to sell, without the authority of Congress, one shilling's worth of the public property. They do not own it. The title is not vested in them, and they have no power to sell it. I have not till now heard that it is pretended by any one that the power to make the sale existed, unless it is to be found in the plain language of the acts of Congress to which I have referred. If the act of 1857 can be rightfully construed to authorize the Secretary of War to alienate any military site which may at some future time become useless, and the absolute power of determining the fact of future uselessness is committed to him, some future Secretary of War may sell Fort Hamilton or Governor's Island at his pleasure, and the transaction be valid. He may traffic away any one of our sea-board defenses; and if the power to sell, and the discretion which is to control its exercise is absolute, and the terms of sale and mode of sale adopted in the case of Fort Snelling are approved, we may wake up some morning to find that we have been deprived of our national defenses, and that the national Treasury has not profited by their sale.

Mr. Speaker, what does the term useless signify? Does it not mean incapable of use? Is the term "useless" equivalent to the term unoccupied? Was not the term "useless" designed to describe an old dilapidated fort, decayed and fallen, with the ivy creeping over its battlements, long since abandoned, because useless and good for nothing for military purposes? Because a fort is unoccupied it does not necessarily follow that it is useless. Are Fort Hamilton and Fort Schuyler, if peradventure at this moment almost unoccupied, of necessity useless? Or does the term useless, as employed in the act, fairly mean incapable of use for military purposes or any one of the purposes which, without violence of construction, may be deemed a military purpose?

But while I dissent from the conclusions of the minority of the committee as to the question of the power which has been sought to be exercised, I still concede the full force of the argument that the act of an executive officer, to whom a power is confided by law, is not subject to be reversed because of the opinions of others not intrusted with the responsibilities of office.

If the act of Congress in question had conferred upon the Secretary of War the privilege of determining, at his own discretion, that a military site had become useless, and upon such determination subjected it to immediate sale, there would be an end of all question as to power. But I do not so construe it. The power does not come into existence until the event has transpired which constitutes the contingency upon which the power is to become active.

In the case of any of our military sites, the President of the United States, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, may direct their occupation or their abandonment. But I am not satisfied that the removal of troops, munitions of war, or stores, from a military post, and its consequent abandonment, is equivalent to the incapacity for military use which can alone justify its alienation.

But to resolve censure upon the Secretary of War for his exercise of judgment in this case, assuming the same to be erroneous, is to bestow equal censure upon the President. The act of 1819 prescribes that the power of sale therein conferred shall be exercised by the Secretary of War only under the direction of the President; and we are to presume that it has been so exercised.

The record before us shows that, in the month of July succeeding the sale, the same was approved by the President. Neither the President or Secretary is to be deemed responsible for the particular mode of sale; but the ratification by the President, though without the knowledge of the facts since developed, must be regarded as his official sanction of the preliminary action of the Secretary of War directing the sale. Now, if the President of the United States, in the exercise of his prerogative as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, has deemed it proper to approve the sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling, is it just to the Secretary of War, under whose more immediate direction the sale was made, to pronounce him chargeable with grave official fault, because of the conduct of those to whom he intrusted the management of the details?

My conclusion on this subject of power is, that it is at least doubtful whether, in the first place, the act of Congress of 1819 is applicable at all; and, if it be applicable, whether the contingency had actually arisen in which alone this special power could have been rightfully exercised. But I cannot consent to subject any officer of the Government to public censure because, peradventure, there may have been a mistaken construction of the power conferred, or an error as to its exercise.

Mr. Speaker, assume, if you please, that there was no defect of power, and that the contingency had occurred which authorized its exercise, it nevertheless by no means follows that the sale itself, when viewed in respect of the circumstances attending it, which have been developed by the investigation of the committee, ought to receive the sanction of this House. I am aware that this House, when employed in the consideration of the subject-matter of this investigation, is not exercising judicial powers. Sir, judicial power is not conferred upon us; our legislative power can only be exercised in conjunction with the Senate and with the President. It is true, sir, that this was a subject of which the House might well take cognizance. I deem it within the appropriate sphere of this House to take notice of every act of any one of the officers of the Government which may, in any manner, affect the revenue of the country, or which may tend to deprive us of any of the national property or national defenses. But, sir, as we cannot exercise judicial power, we cannot annul this sale, or deprive any party, claiming under it, of any right. If any such has been acquired, we cannot divest it by force of legislative power, unless in violation of the Constitution. We may express our opinion, and we may leave it to the courts of justice to determine, in view of all the circumstances of the case, whether the sale is void, and, if not void, whether it is not voidable.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose, because I have not the time remaining to me, to analyze this mass of evidence, and to attempt to array it before this House in such a manner that it can be carefully and justly weighed. I will, however, refer to one or two of the acknowledged features of the case, in respect of which I call upon the House to pronounce its calm, unbiased judgment, free from the influence of party or personal prejudice.

It is established by the reports of the majority and of the minority, and may be taken as conceded, that this sale was secret. That it was so severely, so dreadfully secret, that this one of our national defenses passed from the control of the Government, while the officer in command of the fort was unaware of it, and while the citizens in the neighborhood in which it is located, anxious as they appear to have been for an opportunity to purchase the land, had not the slightest idea that the sale was going on. This much cannot be controverted, and the question then presented is, Shall this House give its assent to the sale of one of the national defenses, under this act of Congress, conducted in a manner which, without intending unjustly to characterize it, I do not hesitate to pronounce clandestine? Now, if there is any one principle better settled than another, applicable as well to sales made by authority of law as to judicial sales, it is that the sale shall not be secret—shall not be clandestine—but that it shall be open, exposed, notorious. No argument, having a respectable foundation, can be urged in favor of a secret sale. We are irresistibly urged to the conclusion that this sale, because of this undisputed feature, should not be established as a precedent, or receive the sanction of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I can hardly hesitate to express the opinion that there is not a single court of justice in Christendom that, upon the case presented by this report, would hesitate a moment to annul that sale upon that ground alone. But it is said that the property brought its full value. I do not propose to examine the evidence upon that subject. While there is some foundation for the assertion that if the land had been sold at an open, public sale, it might for all have been sacrificed; it is, nevertheless, my judgment, upon the evidence, that it would at that time have brought twice or three times the sum contracted to be paid if it had been sold in a manner to invite competition, and under such circumstances as would have rendered nugatory that kind of fraudulent combination to deprive the Government of the value of its property, (whenever it has recourse to a public sale,) which is said to be sanctioned by the general sentiment of the people of the Northwest.

Mr. Speaker, it may be regarded as an established principle, applicable to judicial and other sales, that mere inadequacy of price is of itself an insufficient ground for setting them aside; and, sir, it is a matter almost of indifference whether this property realized $100,000 or $500,000. I agree with the majority of the committee that the sum which the Government is likely to receive from any sale of any portion of the public property is very inconsiderable, and far beneath its value; but I would myself much more readily have given my assent to this sale at three cents an acre, if it had been open and fair. It is important that the country should know and feel that whenever any of these reservations are to be alienated, they are not to be permitted, under any circumstances, to be bestowed upon personal or political favorites, and if this sale had been made in a less exceptionable manner by the commissioners who conducted it, the criticism which has been directed against the transaction by the majority of the committee would have been spared.

Mr. Speaker, I shall assume that it is established by the evidence that the commissioners intentionally concealed the fact of their instructions to make the sale. Why, sir, the secret was so profound, that a friend of mine who was in Minnesota somewhere in the latter part of June, supposed, from the information of those residing in the vicinity of Fort Snelling, that the sale was to take place, when, in truth and fact, it had already taken place nearly a month before. It was so secret that the news had not reached St. Louis on the 19th of August, 1857, when Mr. Reynolds addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, asking him when the site was to be sold.

Now, I feel justified in saying that there is no denial to be made by any man, who, in respect of this transaction, seeks the truth of the allegation, that this sale, whether it was fair or not, whether it was for an adequate price or not, was nevertheless suspiciously secret. For that reason, alone, if no others existed, I think the sale, under all the circumstances attending it, should be reviewed by the Secretary of War, who has never had an opportunity to pronounce his judgment upon the facts now developed, and who acted upon the report of the commissioners long before the public, or those who set this inquiry on foot, had any knowledge of the train of circumstances which now casts suspicion and distrust upon the integrity of the sale.

The subject which I next propose to present to the consideration of the House, relates to the terms of the sale. I will premise what I have to say upon this point by stating, that so far from the secrecy of the sale and the peculiar terms upon which it was made being in accordance with the directions of the Secretary of War, they are, in my judgment, directly antagonistic to their spirit and letter. If I supposed that the Secretary of War had given instructions to the commissioners appointed by him to make that sale, to keep it a secret, locked up in their own breasts, and not to permit the fact that the property was for sale to be known only to men who had been already selected to purchase it, there is no man on this floor who would more readily than myself pronounce strong condemnation. Upon a careful examination of his letter of instructions, I find that although it gave the authority that the property might be sold at public sale or private sale, yet it is not consistent with the scope of those instructions to suppose that it was his wish or expectation that there should have been any such extraordinary secrecy employed. The commissioners might have advertised the property to be disposed of at private sale, or have sold upon sealed biddings, first fixing a minimum, as directed by the Secretary.

A MEMBER. But he confirmed the sale after it had been made by the commissioners in this manner.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. In respect to that suggestion I will say, that if the Secretary of War with all the facts elicited by this investigation before him should confirm that sale, unless for reasons which are not to me apparent, I should consider that he had assumed a great responsibility. But, sir, I deny that there was before the Secretary of War, at the time he confirmed that sale, the evidence that now exists upon the subject of the secrecy with which it was conducted. So far as the terms of the sale are concerned, undoubtedly they were before him and before the President, who appears on the 2d of July to have given his official sanction to it. But, I cannot find in the case, as it was then presented to the Secretary of War and the President, a scintilla of the evidence which now leads to the conclusion that the only combination which the commissioners had real occasion to be wary of, was that into the snare of which they perhaps unwittingly fell.

Mr. Speaker, in respect of the terms of the sale, the resolutions which I have proffered present the objections that it was a sale on credit—such credit being unauthorized by law; and that there was at the time of the sale, and as a part of its terms, a right reserved to the Government to retain possession of the property for an indefinite period—which reserved right was calculated to present a fair sale at a fair price.

These provisions of the sale appear to have been original with the commissioners or with the purchasers. They are in no wise in accordance with the instructions of the Secretary of War. The arrangement for a credit of two thirds of the purchase money without interest, was, without doubt, the suggestion of the purchaser. The provision for the retention of possession, was doubtless, inserted at the suggestion of the commissioners and with a view to the convenience of the Government. This latter provision of the contract seems to furnish a kind of record evidence that the site was at the time of the sale in actual use for military purposes, and that such use could not be instantly dispensed with. How can it be said that the site was useless?

Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States has abolished the credit system in its dealings with the people. It receives only coin in payment, and it pays coin when it pays at all. The contract for the sale made by the commissioners provides for a credit to the purchaser of two thirds of the purchase money, and for the delivery of the deed upon payment of the remaining one third, and security given for the deferred payments. The kind or class of security is not defined. It was to be made satisfactory to the Secretary of War, or to agents appointed for that purpose. Was such a credit allowable? I read from the act of Congress, of 1819:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, on payment of the consideration agreed for into the Treasury of the United States, to make, execute, and deliver all needful instruments conveying and transferring the same in fee."

The consideration referred to in the act, is the whole consideration for the sale. The security to the Government, provided by law, is no less than the payment of the whole consideration, in coin, into the Treasury of the United States. The law is clear and imperative. It demands the money. The contract is equally clear and imperative. It exacts the credit. Which shall prevail?

It may be said that the Secretary of War has not executed any conveyance to the alleged purchaser, and that, therefore, he can prevent any infraction of the provisions of the law, and the possibility of pecuniary loss to the Treasury by withholding the deed till the whole purchase money shall be first paid. I think that the Secretary has acted with discretion in withholding the deed; and I cannot imagine that he will, under any circumstances, permit the Government to be complicated in any credit arrangement touching the unpaid portion of the purchase money. Nor do I believe that, whatever may be his judgment as to the facts and circumstances attending the sale, as now disclosed, he will subject himself to the charge of disregarding a plain, clear, statutory provision, touching the execution of any conveyance to which any person may become entitled. It is unwise policy to permit the relation of debtor and creditor to exist between the Government and a purchaser in respect of a sale like this. It exposes the Treasury to the hazard of ultimate loss, and may subject Congress to the importunity for relief, to which the transaction may give rise.

It is asserted that the military post at Fort Snelling is still occupied by the Government for military purposes; and it appears, in the evidence reported by the committee of investigation, that a difference of opinion already has arisen between the alleged purchaser and certain Army officers, as to the extent and duration of the right of occupation reserved in the contract of sale. This conflict of views may yet exhibit itself to Congress in the form of an application for relief. No such embarrassments could possibly arise had the terms of sale been discreet, and had the mode of sale been judicious. I protest against the alienation of large tracts of land to speculators who, on the payment of a small portion of the purchase money, and becoming debtors to the Government for the residue, may secure the possession and commence a traffic, for the success of which I have not a particle of sympathy. My conclusion is, that the credit was unauthorized by law, and that the entire contract is for that reason voidable, if not absolutely void.

Mr. Speaker, the provision for the retention of the possession may be said to relieve the Government from the inconveniences which might flow from a sudden and unexpected sale of a military site while in actual occupancy for military purposes. I regard the provision as one liable to lay the foundation of a claim for use and occupation, and, as one of the terms of sale, consider it eminently calculated to prevent a sale other than to perhaps a single purchaser, who might have the requisite capital to buy the property and wait for an indefinite period for the actual delivery of possession essential to enable him to realize the profit of his speculation. Ordinary purchasers would be unwilling to buy the property at fair market prices, pay their money, and then be without right to claim possession of their lands until the Secretary of War could make new military dispositions, dispensing with the necessity of a continued occupation of lands which had been sold by the Government while they were needed for its military uses.

Mr. Speaker, what is the legitimate result of the views I have expressed? What is the remedy proposed? It is this: transmit to the Secretary of War the evidence taken before the committee of investigation, with such expression of the opinion of the House as it may see fit to utter, to the end that, in conjunction with the Attorney General, (the law officer and adviser of the Government,) he may review the whole transaction in the light now shed upon it; and if they shall be of opinion that for any reasons which we may assign, or for others which shall suggest themselves to them, the circumstances of the sale are such as do not meet their approbation, they may take or permit recourse to the judicial tribunals of the country, to the end that the sale may be annulled or confirmed, as justice may require. In that mode no injustice will be done to any one. We shall then not essay to deprive the alleged purchasers of the fruits of their speculation, and that without a hearing before a judicial tribunal. We then need not adopt resolutions which by plain terms defame the reputation of private citizens, who are not on trial before us, and whom we can only know as claimants of a military site, acquired, as they insist, by valid purchase. The Secretary of War will have the opportunity of reviewing the official conduct of the commissioners of sale, and of approving or disapproving their acts, as in his judgment they shall deserve. We place the responsibility where it belongs. We devolve upon the executive officers of the Government the duty of making a re-examination of the whole transaction upon its merits as now disclosed, and under their responsibility to their party, and their higher responsibility to their country, take such measures as, upon a careful and conscientious review of all the facts, they shall come to the conclusion that the public interests require.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The majority and minority reports in this case, together with the testimony taken by the select committee, have been before this House for weeks. We have been engaged in their discussion for twelve hours. There is yet a vast amount of public business to be transacted, and only four days remaining of the session. It strikes me, under the circumstances, that the discussion ought to be closed. [Cries of "Agreed!" from both sides of the House.] I take it for granted that every gentleman has made up his mind as to how he will vote. I therefore call for the previous question; and I hope that the House will sustain it.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I appeal to my friend to allow me to say a word personal to myself.

Mr. BARKSDALE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Five minutes.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I yield to the gentleman with the understanding that I retain the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would not have trespassed upon the patience of the House were it not that hiring presses have attempted to impeach my motives in bringing before the House the matter now under consideration. The source whence such imputations against me have proceeded are not such that I feel bound to treat them in any other way than with scorn and contempt. When my honor and integrity as a man are impeached from a respectable source, I shall know how to resent it.

I wish to say only a word in reference to this Fort Snelling investigation. If my nearest and dearest friend had been occupying the position of Secretary of War; if the distinguished Senator from my own State, whom I have known long, and whose career I have always admired, had been in that position, I would have felt it to be my duty to call for this investigation. When the resolution asking for the investigation was presented, I disclaimed that there was made any charge of fraud or corruption against anybody. I believed then, as I believe now, that a wrong was committed. It is due to the Secretary of War, and to myself, for me to say that I do not believe he acted corruptly or dishonestly. I believe, sir, that he was deceived. I am not well acquainted with him. I am told that he is a good, kind-hearted man. I have no doubt that in this thing he has been impelled to do what now, with all the facts before him, he would not do.

I declined going upon the committee, for I did not know that my feeling might not be too strong, and that I had not prejudged the case. I knew enough then to know that the sale was an improper one, and I believed that it ought to be annulled. I did not want to go upon the committee prejudging the case, and with my mind made up. I wanted an investigation of the matter. Many of the best Democrats that I knew, men who have always been Democrats, urged upon me the necessity of a Democrat calling for this investigation. We have denounced our opponents for improper official conduct; and I say, sir, that we ought not to shrink from a rigid investigation of all matters that charged improper conduct upon a public officer in our own party.

I have said that I exonerate the Secretary from corrupt or dishonest motives in his act. I am bound to say that I think he was unfortunate in the agents he selected. And let me say here, for I have no wish to do injustice to any man—I would rather steal than detract from the good name of any man—that I have no doubt of the honesty and integrity of the gentleman from Virginia, whom he selected to go up there and make that sale; but I do not think he had served any time in a new country, or learned the ropes which are brought to bear in sales of this kind. I have no doubt that he was an honest and honorable man; but I think that his selection was an unfortunate one. I was introduced to Major Eastman on one occasion. I have not seen him here, and would not know him if I saw him. I believe he was born in my native State. When I went to the West first it was not much in a man's favor that he came from Yankee-land. But I cannot forget the land of my birth, and I believe that the fact of a man's coming from my native State, is prima facie evidence of his being a clever fellow. I have no unkind feeling towards Mr. Eastman. I have been told that he is a very fine painter; and I think he would have been better employed painting than selling Government lands. A man may be a distinguished and eminent military man and have no financial capacity at all—may be a perfect child, and wholly unfit to negotiate a sale of public land.

I am aware of the diversity of opinion in regard to the value of this property; and I am not surprised at the variety of testimony in regard to it. But in that connection, I wish to call attention to one fact: Mr. Steele has testified that soon after the purchase he sold a portion of the lands to Mr. Duke, Mr. Wells, and Mr. Prince. Mr. Duke and Mr. Wells are as sharp men as can be found anywhere. They have lived there for a long time, and know all about this property; and yet they paid him double what he paid for the land. The report does not say that the McKenzie house, and the Steele property, were excluded; but I would hazard my ears that they are. Mr. Matthew Johnson's testimony is worth something in this connection. He has been appointed marshal for the northern district of Ohio, and is properly indorsed. Mr. Prince, one of the purchasers, wanted to sell one twenty-seventh part to Mr. Matthew Johnson for $25,000; and he showed him by figures that he would get $1,400,000 for the property.

Now, I have not an unkind feeling towards the Secretary, or towards the gentlemen who purchased this property. I cannot be driven from the principles of the Democratic party. I was a Democrat when I offered the resolution; I am now, and, God willing, I will die a Democrat. I am in favor of the resolution of the gentleman from New York exonerating the Secretary from the charge of corruption, and of the resolution to annul the sale. I thank the gentleman from Mississippi for granting me his indulgence.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I now move the previous question.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire to occupy the floor for a few minutes.

Mr. SEWARD. I object. I want to make a speech myself, but I think we have had talk enough.

Mr. BARKSDALE. If I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, I will have to yield to others. I insist on the previous question.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope the House will consent to let my colleague on the committee [Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois] be heard. In consequence of ill health, he was unable to reply, yesterday, to the arguments on the other side, and it is a matter of justice to him that he should be heard now.

Mr. BARKSDALE. We have had enough discussion upon this subject. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; there being, on a division—ayes 109, noes 27; and the main question was ordered.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. Speaker, the House having ordered the main question, and my colleague on the committee [Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois] desiring to be heard, I now cheerfully yield him a portion of my time.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I object to that.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. Speaker, I propose, then, coming at once to the matter which has been under discussion in the House. This transaction, in my judgment, has been correctly characterized in the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee. If, before the scrutiny and criticism which its report has just undergone, I had allowed myself, at any time, to doubt the propriety of its conclusions, the manner in which it has stood this ordeal has left me without doubt. The act by which the important military position of Fort Snelling, and the military reserve of several thousand acres belonging to it, was lately so silently and so strangely disposed of from public into private ownership, is utterly indefensible. It cannot be defended in law or morals, on principle, policy, or usage; nor even, if the right or wrong of the transaction is of no consequence, can it be defended on the consideration pressed by the minority of the committee—that the Government has lost no advantage by it. It is wrong throughout. No man can defend it. I mean just what I have said; but, since the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] was pleased, on yesterday, to sound, for the first time in this connection, the clarion note of party, and call a muster of his political friends to join him in opposition to the action proposed by the committee, I am not at liberty to say, in recollection of what has sometimes come under my observation here, when it is submitted to the arbitrament of a vote—that final arbitrament to which all of us here must submit—that it will not be defended by force of party numbers. Let there be no mistake about it. The apparent indignation that moved the gentleman from Virginia to impute party reasons for the action of the committee in connection with this inquiry, was not because so grave an impeachment was deserved, for at this very threshold I repel it; but was dramatic only, and meant, because it implied that the Administration was attacked by its political enemies, that it should be defended by its political friends. It is a stratagem, only, to avoid a judgment of the case; and substitute in place of it a numerical count of political friends.

It is hardly necessary to say that this committee acted under the immediate authority of the House, was charged with specified duties, and that its members were obliged by the same official responsibilities. No one was more important than any other member of the committee; and I submit that it has hardly been decorous in the gentleman from Virginia to erect a private tribunal of his own, and arrogantly summon the majority of the committee to his judgment-seat.

And now, Mr. Speaker, in order that this matter may be correctly understood, and the matter of difference made plain, I ask for the reading of the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee.

The Clerk read the resolution of the majority, as follows:

"Resolved, 1. That the sale of the military post of Fort Snelling, and so much of the reservation attached to it as was necessary for military purposes, made on the 6th day of June, 1857, under the authority of the Secretary of War, the same being then and now retained under the authority of that Department because necessary for military purposes, was without authority of law.

"2. That said sale was made by the Secretary of War notwithstanding his knowledge of the official opinions of his predecessor, the Hon. JEFFERSON DAVIS, and of other officers in superior military command to the contrary, without consulting with, without the advice, and without the knowledge of any officer in the service of any rank, leaving the question of the retention of that post to the discretion of the commissioners appointed to make the sale, and that this action on the part of the Secretary of War was a grave official fault.

"3. That with a knowledge of the great value of the Fort Snelling post and reservation, and the importance of great caution and judgment in making the sale, the Secretary of War appointed as agents for the purpose unqualified, inexperienced, and incompetent men.

"4. That provision for and management of the sale were so negligently, carelessly, and injudiciously made, as to induce a successful combination against the Government, exclude all competition, and bring loss on the Government.

"5. That John C. Mather, agent of the Department of War for the examination and sale of the Fort Ripley reservation, after having already joined a combination for the purchase of the Fort Snelling reservation, acted, in making such purchase, in violation of his official duty, and against the known policy of the Government, and that, as to him and Richard Schell, represented by him as agent, and Steele and Graham, who were complicated in the sale with him, with a full knowledge of this official character, the sale of the Fort Snelling reservation was at the time and is now void."

Mr. PETTIT. I now ask the reading of the resolution proposed to be substituted by the minority.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"Resolved, That the recent sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling, having been made by the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President of the United States, in strict conformity to law, and the evidence reported by the select committee having failed to exhibit any fact or circumstance tending, in the slightest degree, to impeach the fairness of the sale, or the integrity of any of the officers or agents of the Government concerned in the same, or to exhibit any fact or circumstance which should make the said sale a proper subject for the opinion and action of this House, it is ordered that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject; and that the report of the said committee be laid upon the table."

Mr. FAULKNER. I will say to the gentleman, that the resolution which accompanies the views of the minority has not been offered. I submitted two resolutions this morning.

Mr. PETTIT. I did not know that till now. Let the resolutions submitted by the gentleman from Virginia be read.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

"Resolved, That the evidence reported by the select committee has failed to exhibit any fact or circumstance in connection with the recent sale of the military reservation of Fort Snelling, which in any degree impeaches the personal or official integrity of the Secretary of War.

"Resolved, That all the other questions connected with said sale and suggested by the testimony, being matters of executive discretion, are subjects alone proper for judicial inquiry and redress, and not falling within the appropriate jurisdiction of this House; and it is ordered that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the report of the committee be laid upon the table."

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. Speaker, it was argued yesterday, by the various gentlemen who have defended the sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling, that the majority of the committee had made a grave impeachment of the integrity of the Secretary of War. It will be observed that this has been delicately and studiously avoided. The resolution has no such meaning. Whatever the committee has clearly inferred has been expressed in its resolutions. I have called the attention of the House to the very language of the resolutions for the purpose of obviating that unkind conclusion. It will be seen that the committee has said the following things, and no more. First, that, under the circumstances, the sale was without authority of law. Second, that the Secretary of War directed it to be made, notwithstanding his knowledge of the official opinion of his predecessor, and of officers in superior military command to the contrary, without consulting with them; without their advice, and without their knowledge; leaving the whole question to the commissioners appointed to make the sale, and that this action was a grave official fault. Third, that with a knowledge of the value of the reservation, and the importance of great caution and judgment, the Secretary of War appointed unqualified, inexperienced, and incompetent agents. Fourth, that the sale was conducted so negligently and injudiciously as to induce a successful combination, exclude competition, and bring loss on the Government. Last, that the complicity of the purchasers was a legal fraud, and made the sale nugatory.

This is all that has been submitted by the committee as proper matter for the examination and judgment of the House. It imputes fraud against the purchasers at the sale, and there it stops. The resolution proposed by the minority vindicates the sale, says that it was in strict conformity to law, vindicates the integrity of the officers and agents of the Government concerned in it, and denies that any fact or circumstance in connection with it is a proper subject for the opinion and action of the House. This is a wide difference. The majority finds the act of making the sale unlawful, careless, and injudicious, and its conclusion a fraud. The minority thinks better of it. The officers and agents in connection with it are blameless in integrity. The sale was fair, and the facts and circumstances of selling an important public defense and a public property which could at once have been sold for three or four hundred thousand dollars, for one fourth the sum, in bulk, to a close political family, is such a trifle as to be unworthy of further notice. How very quietly this vexed difference is disposed of in the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Virginia!

He deals with his colleagues, composing the majority of the committee, just as easily, and chastises them for their difference of judgment. The report of the minority says:

"They felt no dissatisfaction at the fact that a majority of the committee with whom they were called upon to act were politically arrayed against the leading policy of the Government, and might, in addition to their sense of public duty, feel stimulated by the rare gratification of discerning something worthy of condemnation in the official conduct of an Administration to which they were opposed."

The gentleman from Virginia has acquitted everybody connected with the sale of Fort Snelling, and is sitting on trial of his colleagues of the committee. They are only a majority arrayed against the leading policy of the Government. But the gentleman from Virginia magnanimously feels no dissatisfaction on account of it. The gentleman from Virginia sees the committee stimulated to a rare gratification, which he has described, but yet he feels no dissatisfaction. The unreasonable majority proposes to discern something to be condemned in the official conduct of the Administration to which it is opposed; but yet he is unmoved, and expresses in his report an entire contentment of mind. This language intends to say that the committee has been actuated by an improper malevolence to the official conduct of the Administration.

The able and eloquent gentleman from Virginia did not stop at this, but in his argument on yesterday complained again that the majority of the committee throughout this investigation has been in fault, has persisted in fault in spite of him, has yielded to unjustifiable motives, and arrived at improper conclusions. The following is a part of his language:

"He did not question the ability with which the document had been prepared; but he did complain that it was ability displayed in presenting the case to the House, and to the country, in a light, in his judgment, wholly different from what the testimony warranted. As the report of a committee of Congress, he had no hesitation in saying that it was more characterized by partisan feeling than any document of a similar character that he had ever read."

Facts, he said, were misquoted, and much bad law uttered.

It is pleasant to turn from this, and contemplate the serene minority, the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] as they represent themselves in the conclusion of the minority report. "Upon this evidence," they say, "the undersigned, as impartial judges of the facts, can reach no other conclusion," &c. It was well, at least, that there should be two honest and impartial judges on such a committee.

The majority of the committee was unfair and bent on the rare gratification of party malice! It was only the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Kentucky, as they have been pleased to subscribe to the fact at the end of their report, who signalized themselves for their impartiality and judgment. Mr. Speaker, Providence, in its mysterious system of compensations, has kindly lent to some men the pleasing self-delusion that they only are wise and good, and that they have been sent upon the earth to observe the errors and follies and faults of others. The distinguished gentleman from Virginia is an illustrious example of this innocent hallucination. He is pleased to have two eyes, one of which, jaundiced to all others but himself, sees only their poor human frailties, while the other, always kept on duty, looks admiringly forever on the wisdom, integrity, and consequence of himself. Such is the self-made heaven, high above our common infirmities, where pride and vanity dwell.

Now, I have been compelled to mention this matter, because it has been thrown in my way, and I have not felt at liberty to go round it; but yet I will do the gentleman from Virginia the justice of expressing my honest judgment, and if I do him wrong, I shall take pleasure in correcting it: that his complaint of the party action of the committee has not been meant so much to wound his late colleagues of the committee, as to make it a trumpet-note to rally political friends to his support. I scorn, utterly, the paltry considerations that will allow a matter of grave inquiry like this to be treated as a simple party transaction. When there is imbecility in office; when there is crime in office, the weakness, or the offense, loses party quality, and becomes an immense public calamity. Parties cut loose from it, and their contentions are forgotten in the sense of the public disgrace, or the public danger.

Besides, may I respectfully be allowed to ask the gentleman from Virginia, if he has been pleased to consider that if a majority of a committee could be induced, from party considerations, to take improper action against persons in office, merely because they were political opponents, whether upon his part, and on the part of his friends, similar motives may not exist for defending them?

I wish, in short, here, to say another thing. The gentleman from Virginia, who is the author of the minority report, has, in the language already quoted, alluded to this committee as being organized with a majority against the leading policy of the Administration. It is not so. I am not now speaking for myself. I proudly confess to no marked admiration of its policy, and I think I am only just to my colleague from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] in saying that his measure of admiration is no more than mine. But while the gentleman from Illinois has been compelled to be silent, it is but just to him to mention to the gentleman from Virginia that he owes it that he is now permitted to support this Administration, and load it with his praises, to those who, like the gentleman from Illinois, in the days of ripe October, 1856, when a steady tide of victory had been sweeping from the Atlantic westward, and yet knew no ebb, lifted up the standard which had been beaten down in this succession of conflicts—and I regret that such brave men did so for so poor a cause—and raised on the political battlefields of Indiana and Illinois, won by themselves, the first shouts of victory in that memorable campaign that gave the administration of the Government into its present hands. Those States were the firm shore against which the tide rolled, and first broke, and then fell back.

"Against the leading policy of the Administration!" The gentleman from Illinois, it is well known, has not sympathized with the Lecompton policy of the President; but does not the gentleman from Virginia confess that he has been faithful in everything but this? It is less than a year since the President himself was against it. Is this Lecompton policy, on which he dared to differ, and kept his virtue when it was crushed out of other men, its only leading policy, and the sum of its policy? Has the Administration nothing else to stand upon? Is this poor, crooked, deformed Lecompton brat the only thing it loves? Policy belongs to the people. What right has the Administration to have a policy? What is the Administration but the Executive and his subordinates? When I turn to the Constitution of the United States to find how the powers of Government are shared out, I find that the people make policy. It is done by Congress, after all, only so many multiplied agents of the people, and representing its sovereignty, will, and policy. I find that Congress may do certain things by a grant of agency derived from the people; and that the prescription of all acts is with Congress, the legislative power, and that the Executive is only the dumb right hand by which the people executes its purposes. It is a usurpation of functions for the President to attempt a policy which is not the people's policy, or to have a policy separate from the people. He has exhausted his duties when he has taken care that the laws are faithfully executed. It will be a sad day for the liberties of this dear land of ours when the President has a policy, but the people have no longer a policy. We shall then have passed the culminating point of the national glory, and steadily hasten down, through decline, to the decrepitude and old age of nations; and history, writing with its iron pen, will teach the lesson that we have justly deserved the doom, for our infidelity to the trust of popular government our fathers left us, and which we have allowed tyrants to rob from our unfaithful keeping.

But I am bestowing too much time on such a subject. It would be uncivil to the gentleman from Virginia, who is quick at observing the errors of others, to suppose that he could be guilty of any. I make no such imputation against him; but content myself with saying that between us there is a singular misapprehension of terms. I shall have occasion to refer to other differences; but I allude to one now, because it will not occur fitly anywhere else. "Every call upon the War Department," says the minority report, "no matter how irrelevant"—implying that irrelevant calls were made, when, in fact, the matters obtained in every instance have been incorporated in the report—"every call upon the War Department, no matter how irrelevant, was promptly acceded to." If gentlemen having the report in their hands will be kind enough to turn to page 82, they will find that the committee asked certain information from the Secretary of War on the 13th day of February. If they will again turn to page 86, they will find that the Secretary of War, not having furnished that information, was again applied to on the 15th day of March. Between the two ends of the avenue, it required more than a month to enable the Secretary of War to be prompt. If, again, gentlemen will turn to page 87, they will find that on the 25th day of March the same call for information was again pressed on that Department, and, on page 452, that the information was communicated on the 29th of March. "This last was immediately before the final adjournment of the committee. So much deliberation and caution, in order to be prompt, is unusual, even in public offices. This is a difference of terms simply.

Mr. FAULKNER. The gentleman misapprehends my remarks. I said promptly acceded to by the minority of the committee.

Mr. PETTIT. The language I have quoted is the very language of the report, and there is no more of it.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is a material difference between what the Secretary of War did and what the minority of the committee did.

Mr. PETTIT. I have no time or wish to enter into a controversy on that subject.

The gentleman from Virginia, in his argument yesterday, flippantly treated the action of the committee as secret and inquisitorial. He is even unwilling to allow a proper consideration to the generous motives of my colleague on the committee from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] in offering the resolution declaring that the proceedings of the committee should be kept secret, and to which he himself gave his assent. It was passed, as he well knows, with the single and avowed object of preventing the information obtained by the committee from transpiring, from an apprehension of injury to persons, official and unofficial. Such delicacy was worthy of better treatment. The gentleman from Virginia thus finds fault with his own act. This is not all. He, and others taking up the same line of statement, have complained that no opportunity was allowed the Secretary of War of meeting the proof taken by the committee. If the gentleman will turn to page 77, he will find there, as a part of the resolutions of secrecy referred to, the following resolution:

"Resolved, That, if any evidence shall be submitted to this committee implicating any person not a member of Congress, a copy of the same, when fully completed, shall be transmitted to the party implicated, and an opportunity granted to rebut the same, and of meeting the witnesses face to face."

It is the act not only of the majority, but of the gentleman from Virginia, as well as the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BURNETT,] both of whom thus had it in their power to furnish the opportunity of defense so cheerfully and so justly accorded by all the members of the committee. It is an afterthought that the Secretary of War has been wronged, and had no opportunity to be heard, and is only now a disingenuous stratagem of defense. Sir, I state it upon my judgment, without knowledge, that, during the progress of this investigation, there was a steady, intimate, and confidential intercourse held by the gentleman from Virginia with the Secretary of War, upon all subjects connected with this transaction; and there was no portion of this proof which was not already familiar to that officer.

Mr. FAULKNER. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to state that as a fact?

Mr. PETTIT. I state it as my judgment, without knowledge.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will tell the gentleman that very few conversations occurred between the Secretary of War and myself during the progress of that investigation.

Mr. PETTIT. It is sufficient for my purpose, and to justify the conclusion I have expressed, that there were a few conversations between these gentlemen.

Another thing. The gentleman from Virginia has dealt with this transaction as if the inquiry of the committee was limited to the action of the Secretary of War, and seems to have forgotten that Mather, Major Eastman, and William King Heiskell, Esq., were bound by the same official proprieties. His argument has opposed no statement of the majority report, nor any expression of law governing the facts, but has been limited to panegyric of the head of the War Department; and he seems to have felt a personal offense that the committee have not shared with him in the same view, and come to the same conclusion. His whole argument "hath this extent—no more." Lest I might be mistaken in the metes and bounds of the duties imposed by the House on the committee, I have turned back to the resolution appointing it, to see what, under the authority of the House, the committee was required to do. The following is the resolution:

"Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker to investigate all the facts and circumstances connected with the sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling, the manner in which such sale was made, to whom made, the consideration paid, the terms of payment, whether the price paid or agreed to be paid was adequate or not, and whether the said reserve, at the time of said sale, was longer wanted for the public service; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses."

Here are prescribed duties imposed on the committee. The Secretary of War is in no manner named as a particular object of its consideration. Acting in fidelity to the commandment of the House, and under the solemn sanctions of our oaths, that did not spare us from this unpleasant duty, we were compelled to a careful inquiry of the whole transaction; in honor bound to injure and offend no one; but not to gloss with fulsome eulogy persons public or private, however exalted their position. The committee has aimed to do their prescribed duty, and no more.

Let me meet at once the ungenerous complaint of party reasons for the action of the committee. From the beginning to the end, through the whole voluminous testimony, in all the language of the report, it is not true that any party allusion has been made, except in the single instance where the occasion was obtruded upon us by the Secretary of War. The committee called on him for information. Among other letters which had been received by him on the subject of buying Fort Snelling, was one from Vermont, from a person of public consideration, who recited in it his past party services, made aspersions on his political enemies, and implied, in consideration of it, that he was entitled to buy Fort Snelling at a bargain. This unworthy letter, confessing the venality of the writer's opinions, was thus brought to notice. The fact that it had been put on the files of the Department implied that it had not been deemed improper. Besides, the examination of Mr. Heiskell, one of the commissioners appointed to make the sale, a gentleman, in the judgment of the committee, utterly unfit for such an appointment, showed that he had demanded it, and obtained it merely for party services. The public interest was hazarded by such a practice; and it was not without much caution, and only upon a consideration of duty, to expose it to the House, that such facts falling under its observation were deemed proper for the animadversion of the committee. Indeed, the advantage and convenience of distinguished politicians were so connected with the transaction that it was impossible to hide this important motive from a faithful narrative of the transaction.

The committee thought the Secretary of War at fault in treating such appointments as political favors only, and it was no less a fault that the individuals who think themselves the beneficiaries of this sale are those who were allowed to be such because they composed a part of the President's political family, and for no other reason. In this republican Government of ours, I submit there is no other just standard of official qualification except that made by Jefferson, that officers shall be honest and capable, equal to their tasks of duty, and so honest that the public interest in their hands will take no detriment; and I submit with equal confidence, that in this transaction there was at least one distinguished instance of a person in office requiring unusual care, caution, skill, and judgment, who was incapable, and that there was one other who preferred his own to the public advantage. The practice was obnoxious, and the committee condemned it, not especially to apply to the present Administration, but at all times, everywhere—a practice, notwithstanding it has been heartily approved by another gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] so far as it makes political favors of the dispensation of offices, which is plainly incompatible with sound public morals. For, if the dispensation of official patronage and the favors of office are regulated by party partialities merely, the commercial value of office or the favor is a bribe for compliances to the superior authority as much as if it were a price paid for a vote at an election. Such a practice may strengthen parties, but debauches public morals.

Turning from this least agreeable part of the subject, I come to the transaction itself. Fort Snelling is at the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers. The reservation attached to the post at the time of the sale was nearly eight thousand acres—perhaps nine or ten thousand acres. The reservation had once been much larger, but, by previous acts of Congress, portions had been detached and added to the common stock of public lands, leaving at last only this quantity as the military reservation belonging to the post. It enjoys a fine, healthy climate; it is in a region of unsurpassed fertility, on the highway, by the way of the Mississippi, from Lake Superior to the Gulf; so that the present and future commerce exchanged between these sections must pass under its walls. Both rivers are navigable. The Minnesota, coming in from the southwest, makes it certain that the whole commerce of the region lying north and west of it must find its way to market by its very doors. Within a dozen years settlement has extended west and reached it. St. Paul, near by, has become a considerable city. The villages of St. Anthony and Minneapolis, standing on opposite shores of the Mississippi, have a water power that promises to unite them into a future Manchester. The Fort Snelling reservation, if from its favorable position it does not become the seat of a rival city, promises to be the suburban region of St. Paul, Minneapolis, and St. Anthony. There was, at the time, no single point of the whole Northwest on which the eyes of speculation looked with more lust than the body of land that this action of the Secretary of War brought to sale.

Fort Snelling, too, had long been an important defense of the northwestern frontier. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has referred to its establishment before the act of March 3, 1819, his particular object then being to show that, as it was a military site, belonging to the Government at that time, it was competent to sell it under that law, and that the act of March 3, 1857, was not necessary in order to confer this power on the Secretary of War. The gentleman from Virginia is mistaken in this, if I may be permitted to apply such a word to him, for want of a better. The foundation of Fort Snelling was laid on the 10th day of September, 1820; nor, although from that time it continued to be occupied as a post, was the military reservation belonging to it distinguished and separated from the public domain until 1838. For many years it had been the principal, almost the only defense of the frontier, and stood between the settlements and countless savages that roamed over the plains beyond it. Other military positions had been established depending on it, Fort Ripley, higher up on the Mississippi, and Fort Ridgely to the southwest, on the Minnesota, deriving supplies and troops from it. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] disclaimed that it had been recently used as a post of supplies, forgetting the testimony of Major Martin, assistant quartermaster, and stationed for the previous two years at Fort Snelling, that "it had been the practice of the Government to furnish Forts Ridgely and Ripley from Fort Snelling. Only one instance had occurred," he said, "in that time where supplies had gone directly from St. Louis." Nor had it lost its importance. But a few weeks before the Secretary of War directed the sale of the post and reservation at Fort Snelling, Indian outrages, marked by the worst atrocity of savage hostilities, had occurred within half a dozen days' march off, and the population beyond was flying for safety from the frontier to the thicker settlements in the neighborhood of the Mississippi. William J. Cullen, Esq., superintendent of Indian affairs for the northern superintendency, in his report of September 27, 1857, made the following statement on the subject:

"I reached the Sioux agency on the 3d of July last, and remained among the Sioux until the middle of August. The deplorable murders at Spirit Lake and vicinity, in March last, where forty-seven persons—men, women, and children—were brutally massacred by a wandering band of Sioux Indians, and outrages of the most harrowing character were perpetrated, had created a wide-spread panic throughout the frontier settlements, driving many from their homes, and demanded from the Government prompt and decisive action.

"The fact that the murderers had passed into the Indian country, and were there protected; that they were annuity Indians; and were moreover connected by marriage and blood to both the upper and lower bands of Sioux, and the conduct of the latter proved that sympathy, and a general inclination to palliate, existed among several of the prominent bands of these Indians towards the murderers.

"A long and tedious struggle here commenced with them, during which I discovered that they were, to a great extent, infected with feelings of disaffection towards the Government, and a great disinclination to respect either the officers of the Government, or the propositions made by them."

Captain Bee, who led a company of infantry in pursuit of the Indians, added to this the following statement:

"A great check has been given to settlement and civilization by this massacre. Settlers and pioneers would be most unwise to risk their lives and those of their families in a region which, from its facilities for hunting and fishing, and (should the settlement extend) for plunder and violence, may be termed the Indian paradise."

Such was Fort Snelling and the military reservation at the time it was sold, and such was the attitude of threatened hostility among the Indians surrounding the posts north and west of it. Even at the very time of making the sale, Lieutenant Colonel Thomas was engaged, under the authority of the War Department, in giving an increased garrison to Fort Ridgely, reorganizing Fort Ripley, and establishing other posts beyond them, all to be made dependent on Fort Snelling. It is astonishing that, at that very moment, the Secretary of War was defeating these judicious arrangements, by bringing this post and the reservation to sale.

The committee has said that in that act, the Secretary of War acted without the authority of law. The minority of the committee answers that the law gave him discretion to make such sales, and that this discretion is not to be questioned. The single and conclusive answer is that the law confers on the Secretary of War this discretion, on certain conditions, and that he has no discretion where these conditions do not exist. By the act of 1819, sales of military sites, then belonging to the Government, and which were useless, might be sold. The authority to sell them under that law, depended upon the two facts—first, that the military reservation belonged to the Government on the 3d of March, 1819; and second, that, in process of time, it had become useless, and the Government did not want it any longer. I observe, by the quotation of that law in the report of the minority, that the gentleman from Virginia has allowed himself to put in italics the words, "belonging to the United States," as if the other condition, that the site had "become useless for military purposes," was of no consequence, though, providing, as it did, that useless posts only, and no others, should be sold.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have underscored it simply for the reason that that was the opinion of the Attorney General, to which I desired to call attention, that it embraced only those forts then belonging to the United States.

Mr. PETTIT. The law of 1857 principally differed from the law of 1819, in allowing this power to sell, not only military reservations that had then been made, but all others made since, and whenever they should become useless. In this connection, it is only necessary to ask the question, was Fort Snelling, at the time of the sale, useless, so as to enable the Secretary of War to make sale of it? Did the legal condition exist? and if so, did that officer use a legal discretion on the subject? I do not purpose here to explore at large the testimony of military officers of the highest grade, whose almost uniform, and whose positive opinion has been given against the propriety of the sale of Fort Snelling. This task has already been well done by my colleague from Vermont; but I content myself with condemning this rash and improvident act of the Department of War, by the opinions of the Secretary himself. At the time of the sale he had not himself determined on its propriety. In his instructions to the commissioners to make the sale, he says:

"You will examine Fort Snelling with reference to its being retained as a military depot for the use of the Government."

He thus delegated the discretion to them, not having at the time determined whether it was proper or not. At the very time, the post was garrisoned. That it was not useless is shown by the further fact that that garrison was continued, and is yet kept up; and on the 9th day of March, 1858, there were, according to Major Martin, two companies of infantry there, besides hundreds of animals, mules, horses, and oxen, for the use of the service. Even in midwinter, the Secretary of War had not determined that Fort Snelling was useless, but inquired of General Scott, who told him that he could not conveniently dispense with it until in autumn next, and not until the establishment of other posts. Still more: when the deliberations of the committee were drawing to a close, as if still perplexed on this subject, he sent abroad a military commission to Fort Snelling for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the necessity and advantage of maintaining Fort Snelling as a military depot. General Harney was withdrawn by special orders, on the 28th day of April last, from his march on Utah, for the purpose of going to Fort Snelling, and presiding over a military commission to settle this vexed question. What the conclusions of that board, acting at the instance of their military superior, holding in his single hand the fortune and honor of all of them, would be, nobody could doubt. The report of this extraordinary military commission, sent out for the purpose of finding out whether it was sensible to retain Fort Snelling and the reservation, almost a year after the Government had parted with the ownership of it, for the reason that it was no longer of any use, was presented to the House by the gentleman from Virginia. The reason for the commission is not given. I take the liberty of supposing that it was for the purpose of satisfying the still doubting but inquiring mind of the Secretary of War. It may have been to operate on the House on this very subject of inquiry. At least, presenting it here was meant to have that effect. The gentleman from Virginia was so sensible of the indecorum of this extraordinary proceeding on the part of the Secretary of War, that he took pains to say he thought he would not himself have done so. But here his sensibility stopped, and the country owes it to him that he obtained this military report from the Secretary of War, because it could only be obtained from his office, and asked the House the civility of printing it. I thank the gentleman from Virginia for having furnished this proof of the continued indecision of the Secretary of War. It makes complete my argument, that up to the time of ordering this commission in April last, he had not himself decided that Fort Snelling was useless, and ready to be abandoned. At first he directed its sale, without having determined that it could be dispensed with, having delegated the whole function of his official discretion on the subject to his fellow-townsmen, Mr. Heiskell, and to Major Eastman. He afterwards caused it to be continuously occupied as a military post, notwithstanding it had been sold many months before, for the only reason the law allows, that it was then useless. Steele and his successful associates being the owners of the fort and reservation, and, as they say, entitled to possession from the 2d day of July last, the Secretary of War still continued its occupation as the principal winter quarters of the Northwest, for troops and trains, and horses and cattle. He was not even decided in midwinter, but asked General Scott, when it was too late to do any good, whether the post was useless. He had neither asked him nor any other Army officer any such question till then. General Scott told him it could not be dispensed with till next autumn. If Fort Snelling was useless, why has the Secretary of War been using it? Why ask General Scott at all, if that question had already been determined before authorizing Heiskell and Eastman to sell it in May last? Why ask General Scott, last winter, when he did not think his opinion of any importance before making the sale? And why, still later, did the Secretary allow himself to dwell on the subject until the military commission of 4th May, 1858, appointed by himself, determine the vexed questions, unless for the reason that it was undetermined in the Department of War until then? And why send abroad a commission, in April, 1858, when Heiskell and Major Eastman were enough to settle the question in May, 1857? The acts of the Secretary condemn him overwhelmingly for disposing of this important military post in violation of law, while it was then kept, is kept now, and for some time must be kept up for military uses, and the effect has been to turn the Government out of an important fortress as an owner, and make it the poor tenant of private gentlemen. This is a novelty that Mr. Floyd has admitted into the military history of the Government. The act of sale was without authority of law. But it rested in the Secretary's discretion, the gentleman from Virginia says. So Hull's surrender was within his official discretion and authority; but the hero of that national disgrace was not spared from inquiry and condemnation. I answer that if it rested in the Secretary's discretion to determine that Fort Snelling was useless, and then to proceed to make sale of it, these general circumstances show that he had never applied that discretion officially until long after he had made the sale. I may add that the alarmed and dangerous circumstances of the surrounding frontiers prove that the sale was indiscreet and inopportune. The act was wholly lawless, and has enriched a few private individuals, while the Government has been humiliated into the condition of a gentleman's lessee.

But in this connection the Secretary of War is more obnoxious to censure. Let the facts be briefly told. This large and valuable reservation had been a long time watched by speculators with a quick prophetic sense of its future importance. Application was made to the Secretary of War, the Hon. Jefferson Davis, early in 1856, through the agency of Mr. Rice, then Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota, to buy it at the rate of fifteen dollars per acre. Secretary Davis referred the subject to General Jesup, Quartermaster General. On the 3d of May, 1856, he answered that the fort, the wharf, and a considerable quantity of land, ought to be retained for the public use, "not temporarily, but in fee." He said, at the same time, that a higher bid than fifteen dollars per acre might be expected. Secretary Davis answered Mr. Rice at a dash of the pen, and disposed of the matter. His letter of May 6, 1856, is unusually short, clear, and nervous:

"In reply, I have to say that the reservation is still needed for military purposes; and Mr. Steele's offer cannot, therefore, be entertained."

It was not pressed again in this quarter; but took the new form of an application to Congress. At the close of the last session of the last Congress, the clause that has been referred to as the amendatory act of 1857, was proposed in the Senate to an appropriation bill, and passed; and the following conversation then took place in regard to it, as reported in the Congressional Globe. When this amendment was offered, Mr. BRIGHT said:

"I should like to inquire if there is any provision for a public sale?"

Mr. WELLER. Those sold under the act of 1819 were sold at auction; but it has been decided that that act was retrospective, and did not apply to any military sites established after the passage of the law. Since that time, of course, many military posts have become wholly useless to the Government; and this amendment is to sell them.

Mr. BRIGHT. At public or private sale?

Mr. WELLER. At public sale.

"The amendment was agreed to."—Congressional Globe, vol. 34, page 1046.

It rested in this manner until, at the beginning of Mr. Buchanan's administration, Mr. Davis was succeeded by the present Secretary.

The Fort Snelling reservation was not particularly named in the law of 1857, but the testimony of Mr. Rice shows that it was meant. Thus the official opinion of his immediate predecessor, recently expressed, and of the superior Army officer in charge of the subject of supplies, was brought to the notice of Secretary Floyd. It was part of a recent report of General Jesup, that this and two or three other reservations were of the value of $1,000,000, and enough to provide posts for the defense of the whole frontier. The necessity of caution in making the sale had been particularly noticed. These views had been enforced by a recent report of Secretary Davis, and unusual caution urged, in order to secure the Government against loss in making the sale, especially in providing a minimum, which should be up to the value of the property. In addition to this, the improvident and lawless sale of that part of the reservation adjoining Minneapolis, which had, a short time before, been detached by law from the same reservation and brought to market, admonished him of the importance of rare sagacity, caution, and judgment, in officers appointed to this duty.

Then followed the brief transaction. Early in April, 1857, without advice, without seeking advice, from any persons connected with the military service, Secretary Floyd sent Major Eastman to Minnesota to survey and subdivide the Fort Snelling reservation with a view of bringing it to sale. Eastman's instructions were limited to making the survey, for the Secretary of War told him that he would afterwards send another person to make the sale. At the same time, Mather and Schell, for some inscrutable reason, suddenly appeared at Washington. They at once learned what no one else knew, and what could only have been known at the Department of War, that the Fort Snelling reservation was about to be sold, and entered into a mutual combination to buy the post and its thousands of adjoining acres—not to occupy, for Mather, a citizen and Senator of New York, and, by the statement of the Secretary of War, a highly respectable individual, only wanted an investment; and Mr. Schell, who is also a citizen of New York and a Senator, with a larger public spirit, wished to buy it, as he afterwards expressed a willingness to buy the Capitol, for the profit of the thing. How did these favored individuals know that Fort Snelling was to be sold, to induce them into such a combination, when it was unknown to everybody else? Soon after, in the same month of April, Dr. Graham, of Lexington, Virginia, ambitious, though without money, of an investment in Minnesota, stops at Washington on his way, and asks his particular friend, the Secretary of War, the modest question, if he has anything out West to be done for his Department, that will pay? The Secretary answers, "Nothing, unless you will sell some old forts." The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] has expressed a high sense of the ability and character of Mr. Graham. His shrewdness is not doubted. The defense of a transaction that has plundered the Government of hundreds of thousands, and changed a principal northwestern defense into private ownership, is put only on presumptions of character. All the parties in connection with it have had their advocates. Doctor Graham is defended by one gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] and Mr. Heiskell, by another, [Mr. HOPKINS,] while the Secretary of War exalts Mr. Mather. Schell dwells in the security of his own invulnerable mail. The public has suffered in its tenderpoints of military defense and money; but these gentlemen argue that the public loss is mitigated from having been occasioned by an association of very honest gentlemen. On the same evening, Graham is brought in conjunction, by an extraordinary chance, with Mather and Schell. None of them can explain the accident; but, suddenly, these three persons are melted into the same combination, and the valuable public property of Fort Snelling, more than a thousand miles away, is the object. But there is a condition to the admission of Doctor Graham. He is to unite Franklin Steele in the transaction. Mr. Steele has long been the Army sutler at that post, and is now the only resident on that large reservation; and the forthcoming instructions of the Department of War will require that any settlers on the reservation shall be provided for by the commissioners that make the sale. Such an instruction means Franklin Steele, and nobody else. How does this triumvirate, in advance of "the rest of mankind," get the information that the instructions of the Secretary of War will take care of Mr. Franklin Steele, as a particular ward of the Government, and make it important for the success of their plans to unite him in the combination? Doctor Graham accepts the condition and proceeds to Minnesota in search of Mr. Steele. Thus, Graham, Mather, Schell, and Steele, have the only knowledge that the reservation is to be sold, and have already effected a combination to buy; Graham investing his character, Mather and Schell the money, and Steele, the singular advantage of having lived on the reservation as Army sutler.

In the mean time, Mr. Heiskell, of Abingdon, Virginia, has been refreshing the Secretary of War with a recital of his political services, and asking for an appointment, some good office, one that will pay, worth not less than four or five thousand dollars a year. The Secretary of War writes him to come on to Washington. He receives an appointment to make sale of the Fort Snelling reservation with reluctance, because he is disappointed in not getting five per cent. commissions on the sale; but now, from modesty, he wishes some one to be appointed with him; and for the first time the name of Major Eastman is thought of and put in the commission. But Heiskell is the principal, obtaining first the appointment, then advising the appointment of some other person with him; and, as he himself testifies, recommending the manner of sale, in which Major Eastman complacently concurs. The arrival of Mr. Heiskell at Washington is signalized by the return of Dr. Graham from Minnesota, in company with Mr. Mather, who has been taken up at New York. The unsuspecting Heiskell proceeds with Dr. Graham on his way to Minnesota, communicates to him his business, makes him familiar with the official instructions under which he is to act. It cannot be doubted that, in the progress of this journey, the capable Dr. Graham instructed the artless and untraveled Mr. Heiskell on all important matters connected with his duty—how the Government might be wronged by combinations, the importance of keeping his counsels secret, and all other things that were useful to keep him under the private management of the combination. Of course, whatever was known to Dr. Graham was freely told to his associates.

At the same time, Mr. Mather was unwilling to make an unprofitable journey to Minnesota. It somehow happened, as can be best explained by the Secretary of War, that that officer was suddenly struck with the rare merits of Mr. Mather, and that Mather received from him a commission, first to make an examination of Fort Ripley, with a view of bringing it to sale, and then a commission to sell it; his first commission being dated just one day after the commission to Heiskell and Eastman. Thus Fort Snelling was thrown in the way of Mr. Mather's duties. He was, accordingly, present with Graham and Steele when this important reservation was silently sold, himself preparing the first written agreement for the sale. It was not used, however, for Heiskell testifies that he afterwards used nearly a "quire of paper" in getting it into proper form. At the time of the sale the survey was incomplete. This important public duty was dashed off in two or three days after Mr. Heiskell met Major Eastman. The progress of it was unknown to everybody. The transaction was complete, without the knowledge of any officer at the post, or of any person of the neighborhood, except Mr. Rice, in the midst of that populous community, feverish with speculation and anxious for an interest in the rich lands surrounding Fort Snelling. The transaction was extraordinary and shameless. Mather returned, and soon after obtained from the Department information that the sale had been confirmed, and telegraphed so to Steele. The manner and circumstances of sale are the more remarkable, from the attention of the Secretary of War having been frequently called by letters to the great value of the reservation, and the general interest to buy in it. It is not known that any answers to these various letters were received from the War Department. These facts have been referred to because they have been deemed necessary as a means of explaining the conclusions to which the committee has come.

From what has already been said, it is plain that under the acts of Congress of 1819 and 1857, which have been referred to, the sale of this reservation was utterly without authority of law.

But, in the judgment of the committee, it has been deemed no less a fault—indeed, has been regarded by the committee as a grave official fault—that the Secretary of War should have attempted the sale without first consulting with persons in superior military command, and connected with the defense of this most dangerous frontier, and one that so freshly had been the scene of Indian atrocities unknown in the recent settlement of any part of the West. But yet it was unknown to any officer of the whole service until Fort Snelling had been silently sold, in this manner, from under their very feet. The committee does not attempt to bring in question his superior authority over all matters in his Department, but yet his duties are esteemed principally administrative, and rather civil than military. The arrangement of the public defenses must be made and kept up on system, and the details of defense must be supervised by persons in actual military service. The carelessness of the Secretary of War in this instance, is shown in the fact, that while under his authority, the sale of Fort Snelling and the reservation was being made, under the same authority, by his own authority, the first officer in command under General Scott, was, at the same time, in Minnesota, in the midst of thousands of unfriendly Indians, reinforcing one post, reestablishing another, and making additional posts, all to be made dependent on Fort Snelling. But this subject has already been examined by the committee, in its views already submitted, and I shall not press it further.

The next subject is the fitness and competency of the commissioners appointed to make the sale. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] has done the committee injustice in supposing it intended to wrong the good name of Major Eastman. Nothing of the kind has been meant or said. The utmost complaint against him was his extreme unfitness for the particular duty he was acting in, in no manner questioning his good conduct and ability in his proper province of duty. But he was out of place. He confessed it, and the objection is not to Major Eastman for performing a duty to which he had been commanded by his superior, but against the Secretary of War for not selecting agents qualified for this particular office, and having the rare ability, under the necessities of the occasion, of providing that the public interest should not suffer. Perhaps, as much might be said of the merit of Mr. Heiskell, though he seems to have acted without any definite purposes of good or evil. It was a weakness in Major Eastman, after having stated, in his official report, that the overflowed lands along the rivers were of no value, to wish to buy afterwards, on the same river shore, city blocks of a half dozen acres, at thousands of dollars. But the committee has ingeniously allowed for the contagious speculation that afterwards caught him, and does not in any manner ascribe this act to considerations affecting the propriety of his conduct at the time of the sale. Mr. Heiskell is not to be described. It is true, as shown by the evidence, that the Secretary of War appointed, to make sale of a valuable public property, worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, two commissioners, who did not even know the law under which they acted, the manner of subdividing and making sales of public lands, and the minutiae of business in this Department, indispensable to a reasonable performance of their duty. They accordingly first sold the Fort Snelling reservation of several thousand acres in bulk, when they were only authorized to sell in the well-known legal subdivisions of forties, eighties, and quarters. They made this extraordinary sale on time, and reported to the Secretary of War the ability of Mr. Steele to give security, when the law allowed the sale to be made for cash only. The law demanded publicity as a first condition of the sale; but they sold secretly and without advertising, and, with a studied purpose, hid the transaction for weeks from the community living in the neighborhood, most anxious and most interested, and altogether unknown, until the meritorious Mather telegraphed the confirmation of it by the Secretary of War to Steele, to the astonishment of Minneapolis, St. Paul, and St. Anthony. They sold with the agreement that the Government should "make a deed" on the payment of the first installment, when the law expressly forbade it, except on the full and final payment of the purchase money. Steele disclaimed that he had any claim as a preëmptioner, legal or equitable; but the commissioners had extraordinary reasons for treating him as such, and for that cause preferred him as the purchaser of the whole reservation. The preëmption law forfeits every preëmption right where a settlement on the land ceases, or where it has been sold. But the commissioners witnessed a pretended transaction, in violation of this just law, between McKenzie and Steele, and reported the fact to the Secretary of War as a consideration for confirming the sale, because McKenzie would then have no claim upon the Government; when, in fact, McKenzie was without such claim, and when, in fact, no such arrangement as had been reported had been made. They even innocently believed that a preëmption right lawfully extended over a thousand acres, and perhaps indefinitely. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] says "no" to this, and quotes the statement of the committee as one of two blunders he has been pleased to impute to me as the organ of the committee in expressing its opinions in the report. I respectfully submit that that usually cautious gentleman is himself mistaken, and in proof of it I quote confidently from the report of the sale made by the commissioners to the Secretary of War:

"Upon questioning Mr. Steele, he very frankly said that he did not go on the reservation, neither did he make or purchase improvements upon the same, with the expectation of having the preëmption right extended to him; and we could not come to the conclusion that he should have the right to purchase the lands covering his improvements at $1 25 per acre. It is true that his improvements have cost a large amount; but then, for each separate and valuable one to permit him to purchase one hundred and sixty acres, the amount of land he would be enabled to obtain, at that price, would amount to nearly one thousand acres, or one seventh of the reservation."

Let this decide the question of accuracy between us. The commissioners attempted to agree with Steele in regard to the possession; as if, after a military site had been sold, for the reason that it was useless, any residuary discretion remained with any one. They sold on credit, they say, because "Steele wished to purchase in that way."

Let me here correct another error imputed to the committee by the gentleman from Kentucky; for, with these two, he exhausted his fault-finding. It is objected that Major Eastman, in the report of the majority, is said not to have known the difference between a private and a secret sale. The language of the gentleman from Kentucky is, "not one word of it." My answer is, that Major Eastman, in his testimony, and in connection with the particular subject of not letting any one know that the sale was being made, said: "we did not advertise, because it then would not have been a private sale." Heiskell's language is, "if it had been advertised, it would have been a public sale." Both little seemed to think that the law required that a knowledge of the sale should be made public.

Such a variety and magnitude of official blunders cannot be found, it is believed, in the records of any public office. Heiskell sunk into absolute nonsense. He says:

"I remarked to Steele that I looked upon the sale about like this: 'If the sale had been made to anybody else, the Black Republicans in Congress would have been unscrupulous enough to have given you $50,000 for your buildings. You are a Democrat, it is true; but for all that the Black Republicans would have given you $50,000 for your buildings; so that I looked upon the sale as in reality made for thirty or forty thousand dollars more than the price named.'"

This is not sense. It is absolute, paltry, unmitigable nonsense, to be got on the modest expectation of four or five thousand dollars a year. Nothing is right. Everything is done wrong. And such are the agents employed by the Department of War to determine the military importance of Fort Snelling, and to manage the public riches sufficient, according to General Jesup, for the defense of the lives and property along thousands of miles of frontier! Scott, Jesup, Persifer F. Smith, passed by, and questions of public defense put in the safe keeping of William King Heiskell! It may well be supposed that such counsels might lead to the winter campaign, which history promises to make immortal, of thousands of troops left, a thousand miles from supplies, to freeze and starve in the mountains about Fort Bridger.

Of this extraordinary sale, the modes by which it was conducted are the most extraordinary. The importance of the post and of the reservation, and of other reservations like it, had often been a matter of consideration in the Department of War. The means of protecting such large interests were not difficult. If practice and precedent were wanting, the suggestions of common sense at once proposed a means of keeping the public from loss. The gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Kentucky, and various other gentlemen, seem to think that it was easy, in this instance, to form combinations by which the Government would be defrauded. The word "combination" is alarming. It was the perpetual nightmare of Mr. Heiskell. The gentleman from Kentucky particularly has referred to the improvident sale of that part of the Fort Snelling reservation in the neighborhood of Minneapolis, now worth thousands of dollars per acre, sold a few years ago at Stillwater. Why, the majority of the committee has referred to this very act of improvidence and lawlessness as a reason why the Secretary of War was bound to unusual caution, in order to prevent the remainder of the reservation from being sold at a sacrifice. But he will please remember that that portion of the reservation had already been by law detached from the Fort Snelling reservation, and added to the common stock of public lands, giving the right of settlement at once, as upon other public lands—a right which is never acknowledged on a military reservation. In that instance, that very right of settlement made inducements to combinations. In this instance, there was no right of settlement, and combination was impossible. Indeed, the Government title could never be divested until the public had first received an adequate price for it.

The concern, therefore, of the gentleman from Kentucky, about combinations, may be dismissed. No combination was possible; no combination was probable. Though asserted by Heiskell and Eastman, each upon the authority of the other, it is indignantly denied by all who had the means of knowing the public feeling in the vicinity at the time of the sale.

But, if combinations were threatened, the Department of War furnished examples by which they could be successfully met. Not this only, but the Department of War furnished the only safe precedents by which such sales could be conducted; for the reason that military reservations being chosen because they are sightly and valuable positions, before being brought to sale are usually retained by the Government, on the verge of the frontier, until population has crowded densely around them, and they have become greatly appreciated in value. Then, it is not reasonable that they should be settled and preempted as other public lands; and, being thus valuable, the Government has a profit in their retention; and, in order to secure their full value, great caution and judgment are necessary in making the sale.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] has argued that the danger of making combinations in cases like this is so great that the only public safety is to make sales secretly, as in this instance. If that gentleman in fact respects, as he pretends to do, the opinions of the Secretary of War, he will find himself at once in antagonism with that distinguished functionary; for, within two days of the time that this committee submitted its report to the House, the Secretary of War having occasion to make sale of the Fort Armstrong reservation on Rock Island, adopted the very recommendations of the majority of the committee, in utter contempt of the opinions held by the gentleman from Kentucky. The advertisement will be found in the Washington Union of April 29. It will be seen to be of that date, and subscribed by John B. Floyd, Secretary of War. This advertisement states that sealed proposals will be received at the War Department until the 31st day of May, for parts of "not less than one legal subdivision of the unsold land of the 'island of Rock Island,' in the State of Illinois, heretofore reserved for military purposes." The descriptions and areas of the unsold tracts for which proposals are invited, are set out by catalogue. No parcel of the descriptions exceeds fifty acres, and then occur the following specifications of purchase:

"Bids will be received until twelve o'clock, m., of the 31st day of May, at which hour all then before the Department will be opened."

"Bids will be received for the purchase of the lands in gross, or for separate parcels, as above described; the Department reserving to itself the right to accept or reject either or both, as may be deemed most advantageous to the Government."

"Proposals should be sealed, and indorsed 'proposals for the purchase of the island of Rock Island.'"

"Payment to be made in cash to the assistant Treasurer at St. Louis, or to the Treasurer at Washington, within fifteen days after the acceptance of the bids, and receipts transmitted immediately to this Department."

It is unpleasant to bring, in this manner, my good friend from Kentucky in conflict with the Secretary of War; but that distinguished Cabinet officer has one memorable instance to justify his conduct and convince me that his action now is right, and that the gentleman from Kentucky is wrong. When the Fort Dearborn reservation at Chicago was brought to sale in 1839, Secretary Pointsett prescribed the same course. The population, within a radius of half a dozen miles, was then less than five thousand—not one sixth of the population now living in equal vicinity to Fort Snelling. In that instance the sale occurred in the midst of great pecuniary distress. In this instance speculation was feverish, money easy, and prices extravagant. That a full price was not realized at the sale of the reservation at Fort Snelling, is due only to carelessness and unconcern in not making proper provisions for it. In that instance less than fifty-five acres of land realized to the Government a net profit, exclusive of expenses, exceeding one hundred thousand dollars. In the judgment of the gentleman from Kentucky, it is perhaps a public calamity that Mr. Heiskell was not present to manage the sale of the reservation at Fort Dearborn.

In the sale of Fort Snelling, so soon as the commissioners had determined, against all usage and propriety, that they would not sell the Fort Snelling reservation in parcels, so as to enable persons of small means to buy, as so many desired to do, but one thing remained, and that was to get the best price. The minority of the committee rests on the evidence of some witnesses that $90,000 was an adequate price. What they have said I esteem of little importance, as I am confident it is little worthy of credit, for the reason, principally, that the witnesses had but little means of judgment. Some of them had never been on the reservation; some of them had only crossed it in a carriage-drive from St. Paul to St. Anthony; and the manner in which, by interested parties, they were ingeniously brought before the committee, does not add to their credit. But I dismiss this. The true question, then, was, what could the Government get for it, if put up properly to sale? There is no difficulty in the answer. The testimony is demonstrative, that at that very time, at least four hundred thousand dollars could have been realized from the sale. Even the parties themselves, when put to their oaths, do not express themselves willing to dispose of their interest at less than twice the price. Some portions have already been sold to other parties, who have been supposed to be able, from wealth, and other reasons, to give great appreciation to the rest, at double the price. The purchasing company has subdivided a single section, only six hundred and forty acres, of the whole reservation, into city lots; and has sold, and is quoting that part only, at more than half a million dollars. The partner of Mr. Steele, Mr. Prince, soon after the sale, offered a detailed account of the value of the reservation, to Mr. Matthew Johnson, now United States marshal of the northern district of Ohio, at the larger figures of $1,400,000. From such facts as these, the committee has been warranted in declaring, as it has done in its resolution, now submitted to the House, "that provision for, and management of the sale, were so negligently, carelessly, and injudiciously made, as to induce a successful combination against the Government, exclude all competition, and bring loss on the Government."

This brings the inquiry back to the point of the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] that the petitions of three hundred and sixty-six people of Minnesota—the uncorrupted people, as he pleasantly calls them—were here, in addition to the report of the military commission, modestly suggesting to us now the confirmation of this most remarkable sale, whereby, by reason of an indulgent credit, Mather, Schell, Graham, and Steele, on an investment of $30,000, can now go into market and realize $500,000 on their bargain. It can well be conceived that after the profound judgment of Mr. Heiskell on the military importance of retaining Fort Snelling, the Secretary of War might feel it of consequence to detach the public heroes now on their march to Utah, General Harney at the head, for the sake of putting at rest a question of no great consequence, except to the reputation of the Secretary, a year after the Fort Snelling reservation had been sold. But it is not so plain how these extraordinary petitions to confirm this extraordinary sale were inspired, without looking at the papers themselves. The gentleman from Virginia brought them here, and asked them to be printed. He knows the reason for it, and at whose instance it was done.

The petitions are all in the same language. Most of them are in the same handwriting. The leading and imposing signatures are registers and receivers of land offices, United States marshals for the Territory and district of Minnesota, territorial justices, surveyors, postmasters, &c. Of course, they are in favor of the confirmation of the sale. The most imposing one is headed by H. H. Sibley, who subscribes himself "Governor elect of the State of Minnesota," and who, by the evidence, has an interest in thirty acres of the most valuable part of the reservation, which may be fairly quoted at a thousand dollars per acre. Of course, he is in favor of a confirmation of the sale, and "protests against any action of Congress to the contrary, and submits his statement expressive of his views thereon." The gentleman from Virginia may well feel proud of such auxiliaries in his gallant defense.

The rest of the transaction, and that upon which the committee has felt confident in declaring the invalidity of this sale, is made plain by the proofs. Mather was foremost in the invention of the means by which this outrage to the public was done. He was present at the outset. Schell's notion of morals rose only to the "profit of the thing." Mr. Mather thus obtained an indorser. With an appetite for profit, as the reward of the virtues of political life, both were at Washington, waiting for something to turn up. In an inscrutable manner, they gained from the Department of War the mysterious knowledge that the Fort Snelling reservation was to be sold. It is singular that their attention was turned in that direction. Then followed Dr. Graham, bent on making investments without money, and with the same hearty appetite for Fort Snelling. These three gentlemen may be supposed to have been drawn together by moral affinities, for the conference and subsequent combination, to buy Fort Snelling, is only explicable on this reason. Then, the importance of embracing Steele becomes apparent to them because the instructions of the War Department—mysterious knowledge—were to embrace Mr. Steele. Then, Graham is dispatched to Minnesota, afterwards returns, reports his success to Mather at New York, and reaches Washington in time to accompany the unsuspecting Heiskell, blushing with the fresh honor of his commission, to Minnesota. In this way Heiskell is rewarded for past political services, but short of his expectations. In the same time, Mather's appointment to Fort Ripley sends him necessarily past the gates of Fort Snelling. Heiskell and Eastman are present, devising modes of opposing and defeating combinations. Two or three short days of public service there, and Heiskell and Eastman are caught in the trap of Mather, Schell, Graham, and Steele, and the public is at once plundered of hundreds of thousands of its wealth.

The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] on yesterday, in recounting the story of this transaction, was pleased to speak of it, if I understood him right, as an official blunder. If I am correct in that, the conclusion of the majority, as expressed in its report, avers no more; and he, in turn, has been faithless to the inquiry committed to him, in not having said so much in his report.

Mr. FAULKNER. The gentleman will remember that I said this: that the very worst aspect that the worst enemy of the Secretary of War gave to the transaction was to characterize it as an official blunder.

Mr. PETTIT. I stand corrected, having had no opportunity of examining a full report of his remarks, and not catching his words with entire distinctness. Then, sir, it was an official blunder. The facts themselves are singular. There is no law that indicates, or that attempts to indicate, that Fort Snelling was to be sold in the summer of 1857. The act of 1857 no more meant Fort Snelling than it meant the defenses of the entry of the port of New York, or Charleston, or Boston, or New Orleans. It meant just what it said—a large discretion in the Secretary of War, to be applied on proper occasions.

It is singular, in this connection, that, soon after Mather and Schell were attracted here, by reasons they can best explain, they were aware of this fact that could only have been communicated by some person in connection with the Department of War; that Graham should have been combined with them; that they should have been aware of the unusual instructions soon to come from that Department, to embrace Franklin Steele, and nobody else, and that he should have been brought into the combination; that Graham should go out for the purpose; that Graham should return at the moment the commission was to go into the hands of Heiskell, empowering him, with Major Eastman, silently and secretly to dispose of one of the most important defenses of the Government, unknown to everybody, and without consultation with superior Army officers on whom the Secretary of War must principally rely to advise him in the execution of duties connected with the field. It is singular that such a person as Heiskell was appointed to so important a trust. It is singular that Mather should obtain a kindred appointment in the same section, on the succeeding day. It is singular that, of our whole people, Mather should, of the Secretary's own choice, receive that kindred appointment. General Jesup, in order to secure the Government against loss, had recommended the adoption of a minimum, which should not be less than the full value of the reservations; and it is no less singular that, with an offer on the files of the Department of War for the Fort Snelling reservation at fifteen dollars per acre, the Secretary should have adopted a minimum of $7 50 per acre; and it is no less so that while, at one time, Mather, quick in gaining the knowledge that the sale of the reservation had been confirmed to Steele, was telegraphing to him that fact, the Hon. ROBERT SMITH, soon after, at the War Office, protested against the fairness of such a sale, and that, on the next day, it was confirmed by Secretary Floyd; but that, under such circumstances, the disastrous and shameless result followed, is in no manner singular.

However these facts may affect the Secretary of War, it is conclusive, from these facts, that Mather, Schell, Graham, and Steele, conspired in a transaction against the known policy of the Government, disposing, as they well knew, of one of its most important defenses, violating law and usage in regard to the sale of public lands, and deliberating and executing an enormous fraud on the Government.

From such considerations as these, the committee, in the discharge of its duty, has had no alternative left but to characterize it in this manner. If, on the part of the Secretary of War, it is a blunder, it has, in its consequences, the dignity of crime. The purchasers, at least, are complicated in fraud, and the duty of the Government is to declare an abandonment of the sale. To these arguments, and to the solid law on which these conclusions are based, the minority of the committee, though complaining of faults, wrong quotations, and wrong conclusions, have made no answer. No single word of reply has been made to any of the specifications insisted on by the majority of the committee, unless to the first, which asserts, that in making this sale the Secretary of War acted without authority of law. Even the argument of the gentleman from Virginia, as it is stated on the fifty-fourth page of his report, admits this, but insists only that the discretion of the Secretary is unlimited, and beyond question. Sir, if I apprehend rightly the authority of this House, which, as it provides the means for revenue, is likewise authorized to prescribe the manner of its disbursement, this transaction is not above its inquiry. I do not speak of its power of impeachment, which, if applicable to this case, is clearly within the competency of the body, but in that other sense, that it is especially the guardian of the public riches, and may at all times inquire how the resources from which its revenues are derived are wasted by weakness, fault, or crime. The badges of fraud are over this whole transaction, if not in its inception, at least at its end.

Mr. Speaker, I am admonished, as I proceed, that I have entered on the last minute of time allowed for this argument. Other topics multiply before me, some of which have, so far, escaped my notice; but now, having done this duty, as well as I might, I leave the question for the action of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know whether I understand the state of the question. I wish to know of the Chair whether there will be an opportunity to vote upon the resolutions of the majority of the committee or not?

The SPEAKER. That depends upon whether the amendments are adopted as a substitute.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. There will be a final vote, as I understand it, between the amendments, if any of them are adopted, and the resolutions of the majority.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether he has determined upon the right of the House to have a separate vote upon each of the several amendments?

The SPEAKER. One amendment was offered this morning by the gentleman from Virginia, and subsequently another amendment by the gentleman from New York. The Chair stated when a division was called, so that separate votes should be taken upon each resolution embraced in the amendments, that each amendment must be treated as an entirety, unless by the unanimous consent of the House, separate votes should be taken upon each of the resolutions in the amendments as well as in the original proposition. The unanimous consent of the House was then given to the proposition for a division of the question. The question, therefore, will first be upon agreeing to the first resolution offered by the gentleman from New York, then to the second, then to the third, then to the fourth, and that portion of the amendment which the House may agree to, if it should agree to any of the resolutions, will then be voted upon as an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] if that prevails the question will arise upon the amendment as amended and the original propositions of the committee. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York fails, the proposition will then be upon the first resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, then upon the second, and then between the two, if they should be agreed to, and the original resolutions of the committee. The Chair will endeavor to propound the questions in such way that the House can have an expression of opinion upon each of the resolutions contained in the several propositions.

Mr. BOCKOCK. Do I understand the Chair to say that if any one of the resolutions of the gentleman from New York should be agreed to, that would be considered as a substitute to the resolutions offered by my colleague, [Mr. FAULKNER,] and that the resolutions offered by my colleague would be excluded?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that if any one of the resolutions offered by the gentleman from New York, should be adopted, the question would then be as between the amendment thus adopted and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia. It is the same as if it were an entirety, the House taking the preliminary votes in order to determine in what shape the amendment of the gentleman from New York shall be presented as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. What would be the effect on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, if I should permit his first resolution to be received as a substitute for my first resolution? The vote might then be taken upon the others, and, to that extent, disembarass the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. That could only be done by unanimous consent, inasmuch as the main question has been offered.

Objection was made.

Mr. SEWARD. We now vote between the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] and that of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CLARK;] and afterwards the vote will be between the amendments adopted and the original proposition.

The SPEAKER. The House will have an opportunity of expressing an opinion on every proposition that is submitted.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Will there be an opportunity when we come to vote on the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia to affirm his first resolution, and put the amendment in lieu of his second resolution? I understand that we vote separately on the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia. At some stage of it, should we adopt a portion of the resolutions of the gentleman from New York, I understand that then the choice will be between these resolutions and the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia. We will vote separately on the various clauses of the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia, and may we not affirm the first clause, negative the second, and take the amendments of the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. If the House should adopt any portion of the resolutions proposed by the gentleman from New York and the question comes up between those adopted and the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, one or the other must fall—both of them cannot be adopted.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to know whether gentlemen see any difference between the first resolution of the gentleman from New York and the first resolution of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. PHILLIPS. If one of the resolutions of the gentleman from New York be adopted and the others rejected will that one be considered a substitute for the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia?

The SPEAKER. If one be adopted and the others rejected, the question will arise as though that had been the original proposition. The question will be between the resolution adopted and the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia.

The resolutions were again reported.

Mr. FOLEY. I move to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Mr. FOLEY. I withdraw it.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Missouri. I desire that the gentleman who asked for a separate vote on each resolution of the proposition of the gentleman from New York shall withdraw that call. We have three sets of resolutions presented; and it seems to me that every gentleman can find in one of three sets his opinions clearly expressed. Let us take the vote on the proposition of the gentleman from New York as a whole.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I insist on a vote on the question as it now stands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD demanded the yeas and nays on the first resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The first resolutions of both propositions are precisely the same; and I do not see the necessity of voting twice on the same thing. I hope, therefore, that the first resolution of the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Understanding that the first resolution of the proposition of the gentleman from New York is the same as that of the gentleman from Virginia, I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs first on the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the evidence reported by the select committee as to the recent sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling has failed to exhibit any fact or circumstance to impeach the personal or official integrity of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LETCHER. I renew the call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 133, nays 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bingham, Bishop, Boeck, Bonham, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Estis, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hopkins, Horton, Houston, Howard, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, John C. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Leidy, Letcher, MacLay, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Maynard, Miles, Milson, Moore, Niblack, Nichols, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ricard, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Scott, Searing, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Tripp, Underwood, Vallandigham, Ward, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Wood, Woodson, Wortendyke, John W. Wright, and Zollcoffer—133.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burroughs, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Edmundson, Estis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gartrell, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Granger, Greenwood, Groesbeck, Grow, Harlan, Hoard, Kellogg, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Morgan, Morrill, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Potter, Pottle, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Spinner, Tappan, Thompson, Tompkins, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, and Wilson—60.

So the resolution was adopted.

Pending the above call,

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina, stated that on this question he had paired off with Mr. ERIE.

Mr. DAWES stated that his colleague, Mr. DANRELL, had paired off with Mr. CARUTHERS.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois, said, that not having had an opportunity to explain his position, he would refrain from voting.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object to debate.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled a joint resolution authorizing Commander M. F. Maury to accept a gold medal awarded to him by the Emperor of Austria; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. J. B. HENRY, his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had approved and signed the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 323) to confirm the sale of the reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

SALE OF FORT SNELLING.

Mr. DAVIDSON. As this report is going to take up the whole day, I move to lay the subject on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I rise to a point of order. It is, that after we have voted for the first resolution, it is not in order to lay the subject on the table, the House having agreed by common consent that there should be a separate vote taken on each resolution.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order. The effect of the motion is to lay the whole subject on the table, together with the proposition voted for.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. That is not the point. The question is, whether this motion is not a breach of good faith?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question for the Chair to decide.

Mr. DAVIDSON. If that is the view taken of it, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BURNETT. I was in the House when this matter was discussed, and I say there was no such understanding or agreement with me.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As the first resolution has been voted upon as a substitute, it is but fair that we should have a vote on the other.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I have withdrawn my motion.

Mr. CLEMENS. I renew it; and call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 140; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Anderson, Arnold, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Bonham, Bowie, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Chapman, Clemens, Cockerill, Corning, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Dimmick, Dowdell, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gillis, Goode, Gregg, Lawrence W. Hall, Hawkins, Hopkins, Hughes, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Scott, Searing, Shorter, Samuel A. Smith, Vallandigham, Ward, White, Whiteley, Winslow, and John W. Wright—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Atkins, Billingshurst, Bingham, Bliss, Boeck, Boyce, Branch, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cox, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Edmundson, Estis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gartrell, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Granger, Greenwood, Groesbeck, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hatch, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Houston, Howard, Huyler, Jewett, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Leidy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Milson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, John S. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Seales, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Singleton, Robert Smith, William Smith, Spinner, Stallworth, Stanton, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, Talbot, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, and Zollcoffer—140.

So the whole subject was not laid upon the table.

The next of the resolutions proposed by Mr. CLARK, of New York, was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the management of the sale by the agents authorized by the Secretary of War, to conduct the same, was injudicious and improper, and resulted, by reason of its want of publicity, in the exclusion of that competition among persons desiring to purchase, which, under the circumstances, should have been permitted.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 123, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Atkins, Avery, Billingshurst, Bingham, Bliss, Boyce, Buffinton, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Estis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foley, Foster, Gartrell, Gilman, Gilmer, Goode, Goodwin, Granger, Groesbeck, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Houston, Howard, Jewett, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Milson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Seales, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stallworth, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Winslow, Augustus R. Wright, and Zollcoffer—123.

NAYS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Barksdale, Bishop, Bonham, Bowie, Burnett, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clemens, Corning, Cox, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, Florence, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Hawkins, Hopkins, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Lamar, Landy, Leidy, Letcher, Miles, Miller, Niblack, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Powell, Reilly, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Scott, Searing, Shorter, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stephens, Stevenson, James A.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, JUNE 4, 1858.

NEW SERIES....No. 167.

Stewart, Talbot, Vallandigham, Ward, White, Whiteley, Wood, and Wortendyke—64.

So the resolution was agreed to as a part of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BURLINGAME stated, during the call of the roll, that he was compelled to be absent from the House at the time his name was called, or he should have voted in the affirmative.

The third resolution was then read, and agreed to as a part of the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

Resolved, That the terms of sale adopted by the agents appointed by the Secretary of War to make said sale, are disapproved of for the reasons, first: that a credit, unauthorized by law, was given to the purchasers; and second, that the right of possession, after the sale, reserved to the Government, was calculated to prevent a fair sale at a fair price.

The fourth resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the evidence taken by the select committee, appointed under authority of the resolution of this House, of January 4, 1858, be transmitted to the Secretary of War, to the end that, in conjunction with the Attorney General of the United States, he may adopt such measures in respect of the sale as they shall be of opinion, in view of the facts developed by such evidence, that the public interest require.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays on the resolution.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon agreeing to the resolutions of the gentleman from New York, as an entirety, in lieu of the two resolutions offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER.]

Mr. CLEMENS. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STANTON. I supposed that those resolutions had been adopted as a substitute for the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so state. The Chair stated that the vote would first be taken on the resolutions of the gentleman from New York seriatim, and that the vote would then be taken on such of the resolutions as the House might adopt, as an amendment to the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Virginia. It was in that way only that a vote could be obtained, as the House desired, upon each of the resolutions.

The Chair will be permitted to say further, that if the House agrees to the resolutions of the gentleman from New York as a substitute for the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia, the question will then recur between the amendment thus amended, and the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee. If the proposition of the gentleman from New York shall be voted down, then, under the understanding of the House, a separate vote may be had upon the two resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia; and then the question will be presented between the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia as an entirety and the original proposition. If the resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia are voted down, then the House can have a separate vote upon each of the original resolutions.

Mr. GROW. We are to vote now on substituting the resolutions of the gentleman from New York for the entire resolutions of the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. That is the question. The proceeding is an unusual one; but, as the Chair stated this morning, it is the only way in which a separate vote could be had upon all the resolutions.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 116, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Billingshurst, Bingham, Bliss, Burlington, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, Coffax, Combs, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, East, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Garnett, Gilmer, Goode, Goodwin, Grossbeck, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Houston, Howard, Jewett, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Millson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Quinman, Ready, Reagan, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Seales, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stallworth, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, Wood, and Augustus R. Wright—116.

NAYS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Bocoek, Bonham, Bowie, Branch, Burnett, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clemens, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Corning, Cox, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Mississippi, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Gartrell, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Lawrence W. Hall, Hatch, Hawkins, Hopkins, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Leidy, Letelier, Maclay, McQueen, Miles, Miller, Moore, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Keilly, Ruffin, Russell, Savage, Scott, Searing, Shorter, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Vallandigham, Ward, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—86.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, stated that his colleague, Mr. Covone, was absent from the House in consequence of a death in his family.

Mr. GILMAN stated that he had paired off with Mr. SANDIDGE.

Mr. ATKINS. I voted upon the resolutions offered by the gentleman from New York as an expression of opinion upon the whole transaction. I understand that the last resolution proposes an expression of opinion upon the part of the House as to the proper course to be pursued in reference to this sale. As the President and Cabinet can take charge of this matter and prosecute it if they desire to do so, feeling that it would be an improper instruction, I therefore change my vote, and vote "no."

The question then recurred upon the amendment as amended; or, in other words, between the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARK] and the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. FAULKNER. Can I, by the consent of the gentleman from New York, and by the unanimous consent of the House, have an amendment placed at the end of the last resolution, so as to make it the duty of the Attorney General and Secretary of War to report to this House?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent.

Several members objected.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Is the question now between the resolutions reported by a majority of the committee and the resolutions offered by the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Well, sir, I am opposed to all of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 88, nays 108, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Billingshurst, Bocoek, Bonham, Branch, Bryan, Caskie, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Cox, Cragin, James Craig, Crawford, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Iowa, Durfee, Edmundson, East, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Grossbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Horton, Houston, Howard, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, Kelsey, John C. Kunkel, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Millson, Moore, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Nichols, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Pottle, Purviance, Quinman, Ready, Reagan, Kelly, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Ruffin, Seales, Scott, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, Stanton, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Underwood, Winslow, Wood, and Zollicoffer—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Ahl, Andrews, Arnold, Barksdale, Bingham, Bishop, Bliss, Bowie, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burnett, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Chapman, Ezra Clark, Clemens, Clark B. Cochrane, Coffax, Combs, Corning, Curry, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Din-mick, Dodd, Elliott, Fenton, Florence, Foster, Gillis, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Gregg, Grow, Hawkins, Hoard, Hopkins, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kellogg, Kelly, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, Leidy, Leiter, Letelier, Lovejoy, Maclay, Miles, Miller, Morgan, Morrill, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Powell, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Searing, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Samuel A. Smith, Spinner, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, Talbot, Tappan, Tompkins, Tripp, Vallandigham, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, Ward, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—108.

So the amendment, as amended, was not agreed to.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. BURNETT said: I am opposed to the resolutions of the gentleman from New York, but prefer them to those of the committee, and shall therefore vote "ay."

Mr. SAVAGE. If the proposition of the gentleman from New York fails to be adopted as a substitute, what will be the next question?

The SPEAKER. The resolutions proposed by a majority of the committee.

Mr. SAVAGE. I shall then vote "ay."

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. As everybody is making explanations, I desire to ask whether, if I vote "no," and the substitute is lost, I then vote against the resolutions reported by the committee and they are lost, if there will be anything before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. PEYTON. I desire to know, if the report of the committee be voted down, and the resolutions of the gentleman from New York be voted down, whether there will be anything before the House?

The SPEAKER. Upon further consideration, the Chair thinks that the report of the committee will remain undisposed of.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire simply to say, that I vote between these two propositions as a choice of evils.

Mr. BURNETT. Upon further consideration, I cannot vote for the last resolution of the gentleman from New York under any circumstances. I therefore change my vote, and put it "no."

Mr. KILGORE stated that he had paired off with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, stated that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, had paired off with Mr. ROYCE.

Mr. CLARK, of New York, stated that his colleague, Mr. THOMPSON, had paired off with Mr. ENGLISH.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by J. BUCHANAN HENRY, his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had, on this day, approved and signed a bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, for the year ending 30th of June, 1859.]

The SPEAKER stated that the question recurred on agreeing to the resolutions reported by the committee.

Mr. CLARK, of New York, called for a division.

Mr. RUSSELL moved to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. KELSEY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL withdrew his motion.

Mr. CLEMENS renewed the motion to lay on the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 90, nays 95; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Barksdale, Bishop, Bocoek, Bonham, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Corning, Cox, Curry, Davis of Mississippi, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Lawrence W. Hall, Hatch, Hawkins, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, J.

Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Leidy, Letcher, Maclay, McQueen, Miles, Miller, Millson, Moore, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Reagan, Reilly, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Scales, Scott, Searing, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, William Smith, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Vandaligham, Ward, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Wood, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—90.

YAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Billingshurst, Bingham, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, James Craig, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Eustis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Polite, Purviance, Robbins, Roberts, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stallworth, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Trippe, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, and Zollcoffer—95.

So the motion was dissented to.

Pending the call,

Mr. BRYAN stated that he had voted for the substitute in good faith, but that now he must vote against the original report.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee, stated that he had paired off with Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania, until five o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD stated that he had paired off with Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi.

The question then recurred on the first resolution reported by the committee, as follows:

Resolved, That the sale of the military post of Fort Snelling, and so much of the reservation attached to it as was necessary for military purposes, made on the 6th day of June, 1857, under the authority of the Secretary of War, the same being then and now retained under the authority of that Department, because necessary for military purposes, was without authority of law.

Mr. BURNETT demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 81, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Billingshurst, Bingham, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Eustis, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Robbins, Roberts, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Trippe, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, and Wood—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Barksdale, Bishop, Bocoock, Bonham, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Hatch, Hawkins, Hopkins, Houston, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Leidy, Letcher, Maclay, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Miles, Miller, Millson, Moore, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, William W. Phelps, Powell, Quitman, Reilly, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Scales, Scott, Searing, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, William Smith, Stallworth, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Vandaligham, Ward, Whiteley, Winslow, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—86.

So the resolution was rejected.

Pending the call,

Mr. WARD stated that his colleagues, Mr. KELLY and Mr. PALMER, had paired off.

Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. Speaker, as the leading resolution reported from the committee has been rejected, I move to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Has there been any change in the question which will make the repetition of the motion to lay upon the table in order?

The SPEAKER. A vote has been taken since, and a resolution rejected.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 83, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Barksdale, Bishop, Bocoock, Bonham, Bowie, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Curry, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, Eustis, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Gartrell, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Hopkins, Houston, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Leidy, Letcher, McQueen, Miles, Miller, Moore, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Reilly, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Scales, Scott, Searing, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, Singleton, William Smith, Stallworth, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Vandaligham, Ward, Whiteley, Winslow, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—83.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Murray, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Robbins, Roberts, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Robert Smith, Spinner, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Trippe, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, and Israel Washburn—76.

So the subject was laid upon the table.

Pending the call,

Mr. PURVIANCE stated that he had paired off with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. MOTT stated that Mr. CLAWSON had paired off with Mr. PHELPS, of Minnesota.

Mr. FLORENCE stated that Mr. SHORTER had paired off with Mr. CRAGIN.

The vote was then announced as above reported.

Mr. CLEMENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the subject was laid upon the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; but subsequently withdrew both motions.

JOHN HOLLAND.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have received letters which require me to go home tomorrow. There is only one bill on the Private Calendar in which a constituent of mine is interested, and he is an invalid soldier, ninety-three years old. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up his case. [Cries of "Agreed!"]

Then I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of House bill (No. 631) granting an invalid pension to John Holland, of Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GREENWOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. BILLINGHURST. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of House bill (No. 246) entitled "A bill for the relief of certain settlers on the public land in the State of Wisconsin," and that said bill be considered at this time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, objected.

Mr. BILLINGHURST moved to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, withdrew his objection.

Mr. CURRY. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin by taking up Senate bill No. 262.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain more than two propositions at a time. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to say that I objected the moment the resolution was offered; and I never withdrew my objection.

Mr. BILLINGHURST. I move to suspend the rules, so as to enable me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I move that this House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I withdraw my objection; but I give notice that I will object to everything out of order.

The question was taken on Mr. BILLINGHURST's resolution; and it was adopted.

The bill (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Wisconsin was then taken from the Speaker's table.

The bill directs that so much of the even-numbered sections of land selected by Wisconsin in June, 1849, to satisfy the quantity of land due the State under the act of Congress of August 8, 1846, granting land in aid of the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, as have been sold, or contracted to be sold, by the State or its assigns, under the laws thereof, be confirmed to the State, as part of the grant, and the title of the purchasers declared to be valid as though the selections had been made in conformity with law; provided, that nothing contained in this act shall be construed to increase the quantity of land to which the State is entitled under that grant; and provided further, that a schedule, duly certified by the owner, of the lands sold and contracted for to be sold, prior to the passage of the act, shall be filed in the General Land Office within six months from the date of the act.

The second section enacts that every person, being the head of a family, widow, or single man over the age of twenty-one years, who, on the 11th of June, 1849, was, or since that time has become, an actual settler and housekeeper, and has made other improvements on any tract embraced in the even-numbered section selection, which Wisconsin or its assigns has not sold or contracted to sell, is entitled to the same right of preemption, and upon the same terms and conditions as are prescribed by an act entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and to grant preemption rights," approved September 4, 1841; provided, that this act shall not be construed to convey to Wisconsin any parts or portions of the even-numbered section selections which the State or its assigns have not actually sold, or contracted to sell, and the title to which is not confirmed by the first section of this act.

Mr. BILLINGHURST moved the previous question on the engrossment of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under its operation, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BILLINGHURST moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. QUITMAN. I would inquire whether this bill has come from a committee; and if so, from what committee?

Mr. BILLINGHURST. This bill has been before the Committee on Public Lands at the last session, and at this; and has received the unanimous sanction of that committee, and is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. BILLINGHURST moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOCATION OF LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 47, with a view to putting it on its passage.

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move to suspend the rules, so as to take the bill from the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (S. No. 47) confirming the locations of land warrants under certain circumstances, was taken from the Speaker's table, and was read a first and second time.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I desire to say that the Committee on Public Lands of the House, of which I am a member, have had a bill exactly like this under consideration, and have unanimously recommended its passage. It has been in my drawer for the last three months, and I have not had an opportunity to report it. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends its passage.

The bill directs that in all cases in which locations have been made with bounty land warrants on lands which were subject to entry at private sale, but upon individual competition were put up to the highest bidder, and excess paid for in cash, such locations shall be confirmed, if in all other respects regular; and authority is given to issue patents accordingly; provided, that such confirmation shall only extend to cases existing prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under its operation, the bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I move to take up the report in the case of the Delegate from Minnesota.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to present a report which it is important to have acted upon?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. Yes, retaining the right to the floor, however.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE WATROUS.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to submit the following report:

Resolved, That the chairman be authorized to report to the House the memorials, answers, and testimony, taken by the Judiciary Committee, on the charges against the Hon. John C. Watrous, district judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Texas.

Resolved, That the chairman be further authorized to report the two following resolutions, offered in committee, each of which failed to receive the sanction of the committee by an equally divided vote, namely:

Resolved, That John C. Watrous, United States district judge for the district of Texas, be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Judiciary Committee, there was not sufficient grounds furnished by the testimony in the case against Judge John C. Watrous, district judge of the United States, for the district of Texas, to authorize his impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Resolved, That the chairman ask leave of the House for each minority of the committee to submit their views to the House by Saturday next.

The portion of the committee—consisting of eight members—which examined into the subject of the proposed impeachment of Judge Watrous, were unable to agree upon a resolution. The committee was equally divided upon these resolutions, and so each failed. Under a previous order of the House authorizing the committee to have the testimony printed for their own examination, the original papers have been sent to the printing office; and I presume they are there now. I therefore ask an order that the papers, memorials, answers, and evidence, shall be printed. They are in fact printed; but it is necessary, in order that they may be delivered to the members, that a general order for their printing shall be made. The latter part of the report asks that the two branches of the committee shall be permitted to present each its separate report on next Saturday. I do not know that they will be ready to report at that time. If not, I am satisfied that the House will grant a further indulgence. I ask the order for printing, and that the resolutions and the subject-matter be postponed till Saturday next. I do not know that they will be called up at all.

The resolutions were agreed to; and an order to print was made.

WIDOW OF LIEUTENANT HERNDON.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up Senate resolution (No. 32) for the benefit of the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon, of the United States Navy, and to discharge the Committee of the Whole from its further consideration.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

The resolution, which was read, provides that Mrs. Herndon shall be entitled to receive a sum equal to three years' full pay of a commander in the Navy.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SEWARD demanded the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. RUFFIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SEWARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVES OF GEORGE FISHER.

Mr. SINGLETON. I believe the objection made by the gentleman from Virginia is withdrawn. I will say to the House that if they will give me about three minutes now, I do not think I will open my mouth again this session, except to vote.

Mr. HUGHES. I regret very much to interfere; but I understand that the regular order of business is the report of the select committee on the Doorkeeper, and I want to get at that.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of joint resolution (S. No. 22) devolving upon the Secretary of War the execution of the act of Congress, entitled "An act supplemental to an act therein mentioned," approved December 22, 1854. It only proposes to carry out a law passed at a former session of Congress. There is no money in it, nor will it affect the interests of any gentleman's constituents.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (who had made several efforts to get the floor.) I am representing a case of crying necessity of twenty-five years' standing; and that I should give way for new cases is entirely out of the question.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Virginia as objecting?

Mr. SINGLETON. No, sir; he does not object to mine.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that the duties imposed, or required to be performed, by the act of Congress entitled "An act supplemental to an act therein mentioned," approved December 22, 1854, including the act to which it is supplemental, be transferred to the Secretary of War, who shall proceed de novo to execute them in their plain and obvious meaning; provided that, from any amount which may be found just and equitably due to the legal representatives of George Fisher, deceased, there shall be deducted all sums which may have been heretofore allowed and paid by the United States.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution; and it was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SINGLETON moved the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under the operation thereof, the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOUTH OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. EUSTIS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House with copies of the contracts entered into between the United States and Messrs. Craig & Rier, on the 13th of December, 1856, for deepening the channel of the Southwest Pass and the Pass à l'Ouvre, at the mouth of the Mississippi river, together with the report of the board of engineers appointed to examine the several proposals made therefor, the reports of the officers superintending said work, and all the information in the possession of the Department, respecting the progress and fulfillment of said contract.

HEIRS OF RICHARD D. ROWLAND.

Mr. CURRY obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. How does the gentleman get the floor?

Mr. CURRY. By the consent of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARRIS.] I shall not take two minutes.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I represent a claim that is twenty-five years old, and for the benefit of persons who are starving, and I will not yield any longer. I must stop somewhere.

Mr. CURRY. I appeal to the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Well, I will do it this once, but for the last time.

Mr. CURRY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 262) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, and others.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs, executors, administrators, or legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, late of Alabama, the sum of $3,200; and to the heirs, executors, administrators, or legal representatives of whomsoever possesses whatever title the United States gave to the southeast quarter of section two, township fourteen, range eight east, of the lands selected in Alabama, and sold under treaty of March 24, 1832, with the Creek Indians, for the benefit of the orphans of the tribe, the sum of $2,260, with interest, at the rate of five and a half per cent. per annum, upon both aforesaid sums, from November 1, 1836.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. CURRY. I move to suspend the rules, so as to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to it, because not three gentlemen here heard the bill read, owing to the confusion in the House.

Mr. PEYTON. I would like to hear the report read.

Mr. CURRY. The report explains the bill fully, and I hope the House will hear it read.

The report was read, as follows:

By the treaty of 24th March, 1832, with the Creeks, twenty sections of land were to be selected, under direction of the President, for the orphans of that tribe. The land was to be subdivided and retained by them, or sold for their benefit, as the President might direct. The lands were selected in Alabama, subdivided, sold, and proceeds funded by the United States in trust for benefit of the Creek orphan fund in five, five and a half, and six per cent. stocks. Cureton, Smith, and Heifner were joint purchasers of one half of the southeast half of section two, township fourteen, range eight east, for $2,260; and Richard D. Rowland, purchaser of the other half of same half section, for $3,200. The sales were approved by the President, and patents issued to vendees. Sally Ladign, a Creek, living upon this half section, claimed it under another provision of the same treaty.

Her claim was rejected by the United States locating agent when he selected the lands, but was subsequently prosecuted in the courts, and after a tedious litigation, during which the case reached the United States Supreme Court, the final decision was in her favor, and the original purchasers from the United States, and those holding under them, were rejected. The parties in interest now claim that the Government should refund the purchase money, with eight per cent. (Alabama) interest, and indemnify them for all expenses of litigation. As Government received the money as proceeds of sale of land to which the courts have decided it had no title, and could convey none, the claim for repayment of principal is indisputable; and as the money thus received was and is invested in either five, five and a half, or six per cent. stocks, upon which interest has been regularly received, the committee think it will be but just to pay claimants five and a half per cent. interest from time of such investment. They can see no good reason why Government should allow a higher rate of interest, nor why it should be held responsible for expenses incurred in defending title, as it gives no warranty, and has had no interest in the land, but has acted only in good faith as trustee of the Creeks' orphan fund.

The committee coincide with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that it will be better to retain the orphan fund in the security of its present investments than to selling of its stocks to meet this claim. If any of the stocks are sold for such purposes, a subsequent appropriation will be necessary to supply the deficiency; they, therefore, report a bill for a direct appropriation from the Treasury for the satisfaction of the claim. The parties claiming can probably satisfactorily establish their legal right as representatives of the original purchasers; but as such right is not fully established by the papers before the committee, the bill directs payment to such representatives when ascertained.

Mr. CURRY. I now ask for the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CURRY moved to reconsider the motion by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DELEGATE FROM MINNESOTA.

Mr. BLAIR. I believe I have the consent of the House to take up Senate bill No. 230.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the bill is in the hands of the Printer.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the consent of the House to take up Senate bill No. 230.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I think I had better go on and dispose of the case in reference to the Delegate from Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I appeal to the generosity of my colleague to allow this bill to come up.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I must object to this mode of obtaining the floor. I have a case of twenty-five years' standing, which I wish the House to take up.

Mr. FENTON. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will give way to me for a moment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I have a single request to make of the House; and if I can be permitted a moment to explain it, there will be no objection.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It is not worth while to explain it; I shall object.

Mr. FLORENCE. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois yields, to allow Senate bill No. 291 to come up. It is a bill granting half pay to certain widows and orphans.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I cannot yield further to any one. So far as I am concerned, I have been willing to yield; but if it continues, at the end of the hour there will be the same demand for the floor that there is now. I must go on.

I wish to take up the case of the Delegate from Minnesota Territory. If the House will give its attention, the matter need not occupy it more than fifteen minutes. If the reports of the minority and majority of the committee are read, I presume that the House will then be prepared to vote. If the House is content with that, I shall not occupy a minute of its time, further than to ask that a couple of letters bearing on the case shall be read.

Mr. HUGHES. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to the resolution of the Committee of Elections.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I will hear the gentleman's resolution.

The Clerk reported the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union with the boundaries prescribed in the act of admission operates as a dissolution of the territorial organization of Minnesota, and that so much of the late Territory of Minnesota as lies without the limits of the present State of Minnesota is without any distinct legally organized government, and the people thereof are not entitled to a Delegate in Congress until that right is conferred upon them by statute.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I cannot yield for that purpose. It raises a new issue in the case, not necessary for its determination.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the resolution of the House of Representatives directing an inquiry into the right of W. W. Kingsbury to a seat in the House of Representatives as a Delegate from that portion of the Territory of Minnesota not included within the limits of the State of Minnesota; and the memorial of Alpheus G. Fuller, requesting to be admitted to a seat in the House of Representatives as a Delegate from the Territory of Dacotah; and a certificate from certain officers of Midway county, in the Territory of Dacotah, of the election of said Fuller as such Delegate, respectfully report:

That by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1849, entitled "An act to establish the territorial government of Minnesota," the boundaries of said Territory were defined and fixed as follows:

"Beginning in the Mississippi river, at the point where the line of 43° 30' of north latitude crosses the same; thence running due west on said line, which is the northern boundary of the State of Iowa, to the northwest corner of the said State of Iowa; thence southerly along the western boundary of said State to the point where said boundary strikes the Missouri river; thence up the middle of the main channel of the Missouri river to the mouth of the White Earth river; thence up the middle of the main channel of the White Earth river to the boundary line between the possessions of the United States and Great Britain; thence east and south of east along the boundary line between the possessions of the United States and Great Britain to Lake Superior; thence in a straight line to the northernmost point of the State of Wisconsin, in Lake Superior; thence along the western boundary line of said State of Wisconsin to the Mississippi river; thence down the main channel of said river to the place of beginning."

The fourteenth section of said act provides, "That a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve for the term of two years, may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly, who shall be entitled to the same rights and privileges as are exercised and enjoyed by the Delegates from the several other Territories of the United States to the said House of Representatives."

Under this provision the Territory of Minnesota has been, without interruption, recognized in the House of Representatives by a Delegate, elected in conformity with law. It further appears that William W. Kingsbury was regularly elected on the 13th day of October, 1857, as such Delegate; and in that capacity was, at the opening of the present session of Congress, admitted to, and has held, a seat in the House of Representatives, until the passage of the act of May, 1858, for the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union, when his right to retain it was brought in question. Of the legality of the election of Mr. Kingsbury as the Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota there seems to be no doubt. A copy of his credentials, signed by Governor Medary, and attested by the seal of the Territory, is appended to this report. The number of inhabitants in the Territory not included in the bounds of the State is not very clearly settled; but, as far as can be learned, it amounts to several thousands, and is said to be rapidly increasing. There were five counties established by law, and two of them fully organized, with the proper officers for regular municipal government.

By the act of Congress approved February 26, 1857, "to authorize the people of the Territory of Minnesota to form a constitution and State government preparatory to their admission into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," the boundaries of the State were limited upon the west by the line of the Red River of the North, the Bois des Sioux, the center of Lake Traverse, a direct line from the southern extremity of Lake Traverse to the head of Big Stone lake, the center of Big Stone lake to its outlet; thence, by a due south line, to the State of Iowa. The inhabitants of all that portion of the original Territory of Minnesota east of this line were by this act "authorized to form for themselves a constitution and State government by the name of the State of Minnesota, and to come into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, according to the Federal Constitution," and the question is presented, does the admission into the Union of a State formed out of a part of the original Territory of Minnesota annul the election of the Delegate, repeal or set aside the law creating the Territory, and all other laws; deprive the people inhabiting that part of the Territory not included in the limits of the new State of the right or privilege of being heard in the House of Representatives by an agent or delegate; substitute anarchy for a government of law, and resolve society into its original elements? Such is not the opinion of your committee. There is nothing in the act authorizing the people of Minnesota to form a constitution and State government, nor in the act for the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union, which repeals in anywise the law creating the Territory, or deprives the people inhabiting that part not included in the new State of any rights or privileges to which they were entitled under any laws existing at the time of the admission of that State. It matters not whether one State or half a dozen have been carved out of an organized Territory; if a portion remains, and, more especially, if inhabited, and counties and towns, with their corporate governments, exist, created by law, it would seem to be a most violent presumption to hold that they became, eo insidente, upon the admission of the State, a disfranchised people—a mere mob or rabble. The fact that the admitted State bears the same name as the Territory may lead to some confusion of ideas, but it does not alter the fact. The existence of the State of Minnesota does not destroy the existence of the Territory of Minnesota, nor deprive the inhabitants of such Territory of any of their rights. No such result can be by implication. The territorial law must be repealed before such consequences could follow, and even then a grave question would arise here how far such repeal could operate upon the rights of the people.

These views and conclusions are not without precedent. By the act of Congress of May 1, 1802, the State of Ohio was authorized to form a constitution and enter the Union. On the 6th of December following, a question was raised as to the right of Mr. Paul Fearing to a seat, who had been elected before the passage of the act of May 1, 1802, a Delegate to Congress from the Territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, and took his seat in the House of Representatives. On the 24th day of January, 1803, a resolution was introduced declaring that, inasmuch as Paul Fearing had been elected by the late territorial government of the Territory northwest of the river Ohio, he was no longer entitled to a seat in the House. This resolution was referred to the Committee of Elections, and they reported in favor of his retaining his seat, and he was retained by the House. This case seems directly in point.

The case of Henry H. Sibley, in 1848-49, a Delegate from the Territory of Wisconsin, is similar in character to that under consideration. He was elected as a Delegate from the Territory of Wisconsin after the State of Wisconsin had been admitted into the Union. He was elected from that portion of the original Territory of Wisconsin not included within the boundaries of the State.

The question as to his right to a seat was raised and referred to the Committee of Elections, who reported in his favor, and the House, by a vote of 141 to 62, gave him his seat. These precedents, based as they are upon the soundest reason, seem conclusive of the case, and establish the right of Mr. Kingsbury to his seat as the Delegate in this House from the Territory of Minnesota.

Having arrived at this conclusion, it seems to dispose of the question involved in the memorial of Mr. A. J. Fuller and his certificate of election under the hands of the county officers of Midway county, in the Territory of Dacotah. There is no Territory of Dacotah, known to your committee, which is authorized to elect a Delegate to the House of Representatives. It is also conceded by Mr. Fuller that this so-called "Territory of Dacotah" is the same geographical area as that portion of the Territory of Minnesota not included within the limits of the State of Minnesota. In other words, the so-called "Territory of Dacotah" is the Territory of Minnesota, the Delegate from which Territory is already recognized in the person of William W. Kingsbury. The committee are informed, on what they consider good authority, that on the 13th of October last, at the election for Delegate to Congress, the people of this so-called Territory of Dacotah, or a part of them, did vote for Mr. Kingsbury for their Delegate, and they so claim him to be, notwithstanding the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union. The committee append to this report a copy of Mr. Fuller's certificate and memorial, but they discern nothing in them to authorize or render expedient his admission to a seat in this House.

The committee submit to the House, for adoption, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That William W. Kingsbury be allowed to retain his seat in the House of Representatives as a Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota.

Resolved, That the Committee of Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Alpheus J. Fuller, asking to be admitted to a seat in the House of Representatives from the Territory of Dacotah.

Exhibit 1.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, MINNESOTA,
ST. PAUL, December 4, 1857.

I, Samuel Medary, Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, hereby certify that, at an election held in the Territory of Minnesota on the 13th day of October, 1857, William W. Kingsbury received the highest number of votes cast for territorial Delegate to Congress, and, having received a majority of all the votes so cast at said election for said office, was decided by the board of canvassers duly elected as Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Minnesota, and entitled to his seat as such.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and the great seal of the Territory, this 4th day of December, 1857. S. MEDARY, Governor.

Exhibit 2.

OFFICE OF REGISTER OF DEEDS,
MIDWAY COUNTY, DACOTAH TERRITORY.

At an election held in the several precincts in the counties of Midway, Big Sioux, Pipe-Stone, Rock, and Pembina, on the 13th of October, A. D. 1857, in pursuance of public notice thereof, for the election of a suitable person as Delegate to Congress to represent that portion of the former Territory of Minnesota not included in the lines of the State of Minnesota, returns of the several precincts in said counties were made to the register of deeds of Midway, the senior county, and were canvassed by the register of deeds in the presence of the county commissioners and sheriff of said county; and William E. Brown, register of deeds and clerk of board of county commissioners, and D. F. Brawley, chairman of said board of commissioners, and Andrew J. Whitney, sheriff of said county of Midway, do certify that, upon the canvass of all the votes polled at said election in the several precincts in the counties of Midway, Big Sioux, Pipe-Stone, Rock, and Pembina, Alpheus G. Fuller received a majority of said votes, and was duly elected a Delegate to Congress to represent that portion of the former Territory of Minnesota not included in the State of Minnesota.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto affixed our hands and the seal of Midway county, at Midway, the county seat of Midway, this 23d day of November, anno Domini 1857.

WILLIAM E. BROWN,
Register of Deeds.

D. F. BRAWLEY,

Chairman Board of County Commissioners.

A. J. WHITNEY,

Sheriff of Midway county.

Exhibit 3.

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States.

The memorial of the undersigned would respectfully represent to your honorable body, that he has been selected by the citizens of that portion of the former Territory of Minnesota not included within the limits of the State of Minnesota, known as the Territory of Dacotah, as Delegate or agent of said citizens to the House of Representatives of the United States, and presents the following statement, relative thereto, for your consideration:

The Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Minnesota, at its session in May, 1857, enacted laws resulting in the apportionment of that portion of the Territory within the limits of a proposed State, into districts, preparatory to the election of a new Legislative Assembly at the then ensuing fall election, which election took place on the 13th day of October last.

By this apportionment, those persons residing outside of said proposed State limits, were not permitted to participate in said election for members to compose said Legislative Assembly. Section fourteen of the act organizing the Territory of Minnesota, approved March 3, 1849, provides that a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly, &c.

An election was held under this provision of the organic act, in which citizens residing without the limits of the apportionment did not participate. In addition to the election of a Delegate, by the voters of the proposed State, to represent them until the admission thereof into the Union, members of Congress were also elected by the same voters, at the same time and places, to represent them after said admission.

The citizens residing without said proposed State limits, now settlers on a portion of the public domain, subject only to future legislation of Congress—all territorial laws and offices being abrogated—deemed it expedient, without the form of law, but on the inherent principle of self-government and protection, to send a Delegate to the House of Representatives who was known to be identified with their interests, believing Congress, in its discretion, had the power to admit and recognize such Delegate, though elected by a people resident in an unorganized portion of the public domain. This people, numbering from ten to fifteen thousand, are settled principally in the eastern portion of said Territory.

Within the valley of the Big Sioux river large settlements have sprung into existence as if by magic, and scarce twenty miles can be traversed on its banks without passing a compact settlement.

The steam engine is already at work there; the black smith, carpenter, mason, and various other mechanics, are at their daily avocations; the merchant has there displayed his stock of merchandise; the farmer, with his prairie team, is busily engaged turning the broad furrow, preparing the soil to receive the seed.

Thus, improvements are being made, and not the least shadow of law to protect those who are making them.

Entire counties, which once formed a portion of Minnesota, are now destitute of law.

These, added to the fact that they are on the extreme frontier, surrounded by bands of hostile savages, daily exposed to their predatory excursions, are some of the reasons which induced those settlers to send a Delegate here to request and urge that, after the admission of the State, which sundered the last legal tie which connected them with Minnesota, you would, as the least you could do for them, acknowledge their Delegate, and give them an ordinary territorial government.

Very respectfully,

A. G. FULLER.

Views of a minority of the committee:

In the case of W. W. Kingsbury, who claims to represent that portion of Minnesota not included in the State of Minnesota, by virtue of an election, held on the 13th of October, 1857, the undersigned, a part of the Committee of Elections, find and report the facts to be as follows:

The territorial act included a larger space. The enabling act divided the Territory into two parts: that which now composes the new State, and the balance that which Mr. Kingsbury now claims to represent as a Delegate. Mr. Kingsbury was elected by the people resident in the limits of the State, and by no others; those resident in the balance of the Territory, outside the proposed State limits, not being allowed by law to vote in his election.

On the said 13th day of October, 1857, the people resident in the limits of the State voted entirely to themselves. They elected a Delegate, (Mr. Kingsbury,) who had opposition; also elected Representatives. On the same day, the inhabitants outside said State limits held a separate election for themselves and elected A. G. Fuller their Delegate, said Fuller also having an opponent. The people outside the State limits acted and voted separately and independently; so did the inhabitants within the State.

Section fourteen of the act organizing the Territory of Minnesota, approved March 3, 1849, provides that a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly. The election for Governor, State officers, members of Assembly, and Representatives, as well as Delegate, was confined to the voters within the limits of the proposed State. No polls were opened for these elections to the people outside the limits of the proposed State.

We further find and report, that the said W. W. Kingsbury is not a resident of the Territory which he now claims to represent, but resides within the limits of the State, whose inhabitants alone elected him, and that he received no votes from the people of the Territory without the State limits.

We further find and report, that the people residing out of the limits of the proposed State, after being separated, in anticipation of a separate territorial organization for the remaining territory, under the new name of Dacotah, held an election for a Delegate on the 13th of October, 1857, as stated in the memorial of A. G. Fuller, when the said A. G. Fuller received a large majority of the legal voters resident in the said Territory, and he holds the best evidence thereof which the present imperfect legal provisions in the Territory will admit of; and, according to the precedent in the case of H. H. Sibley, from Wisconsin, would be entitled to his seat as a Delegate representing the resident citizens of the remaining territory, who voted for him, and who were not by law allowed to vote for or against W. W. Kingsbury.

We present, for the approval of the House, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That W. W. Kingsbury is not entitled longer to retain a seat in this House as a Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota.

Resolved, That A. G. Fuller be allowed to qualify and take a seat in this House as a Delegate from the said Territory without the limits of the State of Minnesota.

JAMES WILSON,
EZRA CLARK, JR.,
JOHN A. GILMER.

May 31, 1858.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I have thus caused the reports of the minority and majority of the committee to be read with a view of presenting the facts sufficiently full to enable the House to vote on the question. I wish to make one remark and that is that the views of the minority, as presented here, in my judgment, embrace statements that are entirely erroneous. I wish to call the attention of some of the members who signed that report to some of the points. First, it is stated in the views of the minority that Mr. Kingsbury was elected by the people, residents of the State, and by none others. That statement is in direct conflict with the report of the committee; as a question of fact the report of the committee states that Mr. Kingsbury was voted for as the Delegate by the people outside of the limits of the State. The views of the minority assert directly the contrary. To settle that question, if anything need be had to settle it, I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, two letters, one from a civil officer of the Territory, residing out of the State limits, and the other from the Secretary of the Territory, who canvassed the votes, both showing fully that a large number of votes were cast, and that the only ones cast were for Mr. Kingsbury.

Mr. WILSON. Were those letters before the committee when this question was up?

Mr. HUGHES. I object to any yielding of the floor. When the gentleman gets through I want to have an opportunity to offer my proposition.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I might, with equal propriety, ask the gentleman [Mr. Wilson] where he derived the information that no votes were cast for Mr. Kingsbury? The statement made in the presence of the committee was, that votes were cast for Mr. Kingsbury. These letters were not before the committee, but, as they are in print, I ask that they be read.

Mr. WILSON. If they were not before the committee—

Mr. HUGHES. I want my colleague to be heard, and I want to be heard myself; but I do not want members upon this floor to hold the right to speak on important questions from either the gentleman from Illinois or any other gentleman.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana cannot indicate when the gentleman from Illinois desires to hold the floor for gentlemen to speak at his pleasure. He has no right to indicate or intimate any such thing. He can make a point of order, but he need not interlard what I have to say on this question with remarks of that kind.

Mr. HUGHES. The gentleman has pursued that course heretofore on this very question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman has no authority for the statement he makes.

Mr. HUGHES. The statement is true.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. It is false.

Mr. HUGHES. You are a liar.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. If the gentleman takes the charge of falsehood, he can wear it at his pleasure.

The Clerk read the letters, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 31, 1858.

SIR: Having had a conversation with you, in which you desired some information concerning the number of votes cast for Hon. W. W. Kingsbury, Delegate from Minnesota, west of the present boundary line of that State, I have the honor to say: that I acted as secretary of the board who canvassed the votes for Delegate, and that Mr. Kingsbury did receive votes west of the line, which were counted for him. My recollection is, that about two hundred votes returned from the county of Pembina were so counted; and that votes cast for him in precincts on the Missouri river were also canvassed. As I have not the returns at hand, I cannot give you the exact number; but my recollection is distinct, that votes cast for Mr. Kingsbury in the Territory west of the present State boundary line, were returned, and canvassed by the board.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully yours,

EDWARD M. MCCOOK.

HON. THOMAS L. HARRIS, Chairman of Committee of Elections.

WASHINGTON CITY, May 31, 1858.

SIR: In a conversation had with you to-day, you desired me to give you such information in regard to the election held last fall for a Delegate in Congress from Minnesota as was in my possession.

I have the honor to state, such an election was held on the Missouri river, at the precinct of Kennerly, on the 13th of October, 1857, at which I was present and administered the prescribed oath to the judges of election, in my official capacity as one of the notaries public for the Territory of Minnesota.

At this election there was but one candidate voted for for the office of Delegate, and the Hon. W. W. Kingsbury received every vote which was cast, of which number mine was one.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. B. S. TOND.

HON. THOMAS L. HARRIS, Chairman Committee of Elections, House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I caused these letters to be read, because one is from the officer of the Territory who canvassed the votes, and the other from a functionary in the Territory who swore the judges of election in one of the precincts—both outside of the present State of Minnesota.

Mr. KELSEY. I wish to know whether the election at which Mr. Kingsbury received votes west of that line was the same election at which Mr. Fuller received votes; or were there two separate elections?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. If the gentleman had observed the statement in the report he would have found his question answered. It is there distinctly stated that both elections, or alleged elections, were held on the same day. One was held under the existing law of the Territory, and under all the forms of law. The votes were returned to the capital of the State by the returning officers in due form of law.

Mr. KELSEY. It is here stated that Mr. Fuller had an opponent at the election. What I want to get at is, whether Mr. Kingsbury was that opponent.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. That statement in the views of the minority was something that I was not aware of before. There was nothing said in the committee as to Mr. Kingsbury having an opponent. The committee having arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Kingsbury was properly elected, the question of Mr. Fuller's election was not considered, as is stated in the report of the committee.

It appearing that this election was held in conformity with law, and that Mr. Kingsbury received a large number of votes outside of the limits of the present State of Minnesota, I cannot conceive why it should be stated that Mr. Kingsbury was not voted for at that election, and only received votes inside of the State.

Mr. KELSEY. I desire to ask one question further. It is, which of these two candidates received the majority of the votes outside of the present State limits?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. There is not one word of testimony before the committee as to Mr. Fuller's number of votes. There was nothing furnished to the committee stating the number of votes which Fuller did receive. It appears, from the statement of the Secretary of the Territory, that in Pembina county alone, which lies entirely west of the Red River of the North, and outside the limits of the State, Mr. Kingsbury received two hundred votes.

The statement of one of the officers was, that Kingsbury received all the votes cast at his precinct on the Missouri river, and that Fuller received none.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether, if Mr. Kingsbury be allowed to retain his seat, he does so as the Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota? or is there such a Territory now?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The views of the committee are presented in the report. They are of opinion that, where an act of Congress establishes a territorial government, and fixes the area of the Territory, and that subsequently a State is carved out of a portion of it, the territorial law is not repealed by implication; and the precedents sustain that view.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is the law authorizing the election of a territorial Delegate in Minnesota regarded as still in force, outside of that which has been formed into a State? Could a new election for territorial Delegate in that part be held now under the law?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I can never answer that inquiry more plainly than I have answered it. It is true, we are not now dealing with an election held subsequent to the admission of the State. We are dealing with an election held when the Territory was one unbroken whole. The only question is, whether, a portion of the Territory having been admitted as a State, that annuls the law creating the Territory, and vacates the seat of a Delegate who was elected partially by votes outside of the limits of the State? I cite the precedent in the case of Wisconsin. There the Delegate, Mr. Tweedy, was elected for the whole Territory. A portion of the Territory was admitted into the Union as the State of Wisconsin. After the State was admitted, Mr. Tweedy resigned. Mr. Sibley was then elected as Delegate in Congress for the remaining portion of the Territory of Wisconsin. He came here, and was admitted to his seat by a vote of more than two to one. That case was put on the same ground that this is: that the law creating the Territory, of Wisconsin was not abrogated by the admission of a State carved out of a part of that Territory.

There are other cases where the judges held over and performed their official functions, and were recognized by all the officers of the Government; and I may add further that I am informed even now that the President has sent in the nomination of officers for this very Territory of Minnesota not included within the limits of the State, and recognizing it as still continued.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The Constitution of the United States requires that the Representatives shall be residents of the States which they undertake to represent. Do I understand the gentleman to say that by analogy those who claim to represent Territories must not necessarily be residents therein?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I really do not see what that inquiry has to do with the question presented.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand that this Mr. Kingsbury does not reside in the present Territory of Minnesota.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I do not know how that fact is. There was no testimony before the committee as to where either of the gentlemen resided, and there is none before the House—not a word relating to the subject. What I understand is, that as Mr. Kingsbury was elected by the people of the Territory of Minnesota, when a portion of it is taken and created into a State, he has a right to elect his residence, and to continue to represent those people who participated in his election, whether he resides in the territorial portion or in the State. A Delegate from a Territory is admitted to a seat here as an act of courtesy. There is nothing obligatory on the House as to his residing in the Territory, and it is entirely within the competency of the House to require residence, or not, as it may please. But on examining the territorial acts that have been passed, I have not noticed one of them where it was required that the Delegate should be a resident of the Territory. It is simply provided that they shall be entitled to a Delegate to represent them in the House of Representatives; but not that he shall be a resident of the Territory.

Now, sir, there are some other statements made by the minority of the committee to which I might allude; but they were made without any evidence before the committee, and I have answered the main point in issue by presenting the letters which have been read. As I stated before the committee, Governor Medary, who was one of the canvassing officers, has stated that the votes cast outside of the limits of the State were canvassed; that Mr. Kingsbury did receive votes, and that Mr. Fuller received none. With all these facts before them, the committee could come to no other conclusion than that Mr. Kingsbury was entitled to a seat as Delegate.

Now, if any of my colleagues upon the committee desire to make any remarks, I will yield for that purpose; but I wish to have this question disposed of, and disposed of speedily.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to say that I concur entirely in the positions taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRIS] in reference to this question. The Territory of Minnesota embraced a much larger area than is now embraced within the limits of the State of Minnesota. The enabling act passed by the last Congress declared that the people of a certain portion of the Territory of Minnesota should be authorized to form a State constitution, and become one of the States of the Union.

A constitution was accordingly prepared, and an election was ordered to be held upon the 13th of October. Now, at that time it was not known that the constitution would be adopted by the people, or that Minnesota would be admitted by Congress, and of course it was proper for the people of the Territory of Minnesota, of the whole Territory, to elect a Delegate, as they were authorized to do by the act organizing the Territory of Minnesota. They did elect a Delegate at that time, by votes which we are bound to presume and infer were cast wherever in all the Territory the people were authorized and permitted by law to vote. We must infer, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it is the legal presumption, that men voted for a Delegate to Congress in every county and at every precinct within the limits of the Territory, where they ever had a right to vote, and at that election, the people not knowing whether the State would be admitted or not, a Delegate was chosen. He presented his credentials here, was admitted and sworn, and no objection was ever made that he was not legally here as the Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota. Now, he having been duly elected by the people of the whole Territory, not merely of that part of it which is now the State, but of the whole Territory, the simple question is, whether, by the admission of the State, we have so destroyed and extinguished the Territory, that it can have no Delegate here? I think it has been shown very clearly and satisfactorily by the report of the committee, sustained by precedents in all the Departments of the Government, and by this House, as long ago as 1803, and since, in 1847, by a vote of two to one, John Quincy Adams leading off in the majority, that by the admission of a State, carved out of a portion of a Territory, you do not destroy the organization, so far as the remainder of the Territory is concerned. Well, if that doctrine be true, then,

Mr. Kingsbury, having been properly and legally elected, is now the Delegate from Minnesota Territory, for there is a State of Minnesota and a Territory of Minnesota. The Territory is all that portion of Minnesota which has not been included in the State limits, and it strikes me that the conclusion is irresistible, that Mr. Kingsbury should be allowed to occupy his seat here, as Delegate from the Territory, for the time for which he was elected by the people.

I will state that there are organized precincts and organized counties outside of the State limits, containing, I believe, in all, a population of something like fifteen thousand souls, and it would be as inexpedient and impolitic, as it would be against principle and precedent, for us, by voting that that Territory has been destroyed, and that Mr. Kingsbury is not here properly as its Delegate, to resolve the society there into the original elements from which the Territory was formed, and leave the people, who were the citizens of an organized society, in a state of disorganization—without officers, or law, or protection.

Mr. Speaker, so far as the claim of this other gentleman (Mr. Fuller) is concerned, it is founded upon an election held, not under the authority of any territorial election officer, but under the authority of the register of deeds for a single county, (and he is no officer for any purpose if there be no existing territorial organization;) and I understand, though I may be mistaken, that the only votes which he received were given in a single county, and I believe at a single precinct. He introduced no evidence of any kind before the committee, tending to show how many votes he received, or whether he received votes at more than one precinct. It has been shown, on the other hand, that Mr. Kingsbury was voted for outside of the State limits, that the facts of this case run with the presumption of it, that at one place more than two hundred votes were given for him, and that he was voted for at other places, at some of which he received all the votes cast. So that we have neither law nor popular sovereignty to justify us in admitting Mr. Fuller to a seat or in ousting the sitting Delegate from Minnesota.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the misunderstanding which took place between my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARRIS.] The gentleman from Illinois had very courteously yielded the floor to me to allow me to ask him a question, and he had not answered that question when he was interrupted by my colleague.

Mr. GILMER. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me just five minutes to make a brief statement?

Mr. WILSON. Not just now. Mr. Speaker, this question was hastily decided in the Committee of Elections. I think the committee gave not more than half an hour to the consideration of the entire case. I was not present in the committee-room during a portion of that time, and, for that reason, I asked the chairman of the committee if the papers which he presented to the House had been before the committee, because they might have been before the committee before I came in. But they were not in evidence, as the chairman himself admits, before that committee, for the purpose of making up either the majority or the minority report; and I will now make a statement of the evidence upon which the minority came to the conclusion that they did in regard to the right of the Delegate from the so-called Territory of Minnesota.

In the first place, we have the memorial upon which that report was in part founded, in regard to the right of Mr. Fuller, who claims to represent that portion of the Territory of Minnesota which is outside the limits of what is now the State of Minnesota. What does that memorial set forth?

"The Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Minnesota, at its session in May, 1857, enacted laws resulting in the apportionment of that portion of the Territory within the limits of a proposed State, into districts, preparatory to the election of a new Legislative Assembly at the then ensuing fall election, which election took place on the 13th day of October last.

"By this apportionment, those persons residing outside said proposed State limits were not permitted to participate in said election for members to compose said Legislative Assembly."

This was never denied in the committee-room or elsewhere.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman will bear with me one moment. He has made too broad a statement—unadvisedly, of course. He was not in the committee-room when these papers were read. It was then stated in the committee-room, as I have stated to the House, that persons residing in that Territory outside the present State limits, did vote.

Mr. WILSON. I stand corrected. But, sir, I read further from the same document:

"Section fourteen, of the act organizing the Territory of Minnesota, approved March 3, 1849, provides that a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States may be elected by the voters qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly."

Now, sir, there were two elections held on the 13th day of October, 1857. Within the limits of the Territory of Minnesota, W. W. Kingsbury received a majority of the votes as a Delegate to this House. In regard to that part of the Territory which is without the limits of the State, in what is commonly known as the Territory of Dacotah, but which is of course no Territory organized by law of Congress, it being that part of the Territory of Minnesota outside the limits of the State, we have direct evidence that those persons residing outside of the present State limits, did not participate in the election, either for the purpose of electing a Delegate to the House of Representatives, as stated in the memorial, or for the purpose of electing members to the Legislative Assembly.

Now, then, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] says, there were no votes cast for Mr. Fuller, except in one county. Why, sir, here is a certificate that an election was held in the several precincts of the counties of Midway, Big Sioux, Pipe-Stone, Rock, and in Pembina—some five counties. And what further does it state? That Alpheus G. Fuller received a majority of the votes cast outside the limits of the present State of Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I wish to ask the gentleman if all the evidence here of the fact that votes were cast for Mr. Fuller in the several counties which the gentleman has named, is not the certificate of the register of deeds in the county of Midway? And, if so, I desire to know what authority a register of deeds of one county has to certify to votes cast in another county?

Mr. WILSON. It is not all the evidence we have of the fact.

Mr. KELSEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana how the officers of one county could certify to the votes cast in other counties?

Mr. WILSON. They do certify that votes were cast, and that all the votes were cast for Fuller. And, now, I will ask the gentleman from Maine whether there was before the committee any evidence that one single vote was cast for Mr. Kingsbury outside the limits of what is now the State of Minnesota?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The evidence was this: it is proved that there were organized courts in the Territory outside the State limits, and it is to be presumed that the people in those counties had the right to vote, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that they did vote in the election of a territorial Delegate. There is no proof that there were any votes at all cast for Mr. Fuller, except the certificates presented by Mr. Fuller, which are no evidence at all, and were not received by the committee as such. I will state further, that we now have evidence of the fact, that two hundred votes were cast in one county outside the State limits, for Mr. Kingsbury, and that votes were cast in several of the precincts in other counties.

Mr. WILSON. There was evidence satisfactory to three members of the committee that votes were cast for Mr. Fuller. But the gentleman from Maine says he has the right to infer that votes were cast for Mr. Kingsbury outside the limits of the State. What right has he to infer that, when we have a certificate that all the votes were cast for Mr. Fuller? He relies on a presumption; I on proof. He makes a presumption; I bring a certificate, and that certificate shows clearly and conclusively that Mr. Fuller received a majority of the votes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. My friend from Indiana speaks of a certificate. I would like to know what certificate he has?

Mr. WILSON. The certificate of three persons, officers of the county of Midway, who certify that Mr. Fuller received a majority of the votes cast.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. Where is the county of Midway, and who are the men that gave that certificate?

Mr. WILSON. Here is the certificate.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. On what authority have they given any such certificate?

Mr. WILSON. They are officers of a county in the Territory of Minnesota, outside the limits of the State.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. What authority have they to certify to the election of a Delegate to this House?

Mr. WILSON. They do not certify that. They only prove the votes cast outside the limits of the State.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. There is evidence that Mr. Kingsbury received votes over the whole Territory.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the gentleman what evidence there is that Mr. Kingsbury received any vote outside the limits of the State?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. There is a statement of Governor Medary, which is quite as good evidence as that which Mr. Fuller produces.

Mr. WILSON. The statement of Governor Medary was not before the Committee of Elections. The evidence of Mr. Fuller was before us. But, sir, I have no feeling in regard to the matter. I have no political bias in regard to the matter. Both of these gentlemen are of opposite politics from me. The majority of the committee have presented the case on the part of Mr. Kingsbury, and the minority have merely presented that on the part of Mr. Fuller. I admit frankly that the only evidence we have of Mr. Kingsbury being within the limits of the State, and therefore outside the Territory—for which it is proposed to admit a Delegate here—is the statement made by Mr. Fuller himself. In fact, almost the entire evidence before the committee is made up of the statements of one or the other of the parties.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether either of these gentlemen reside within the limits of the Territory, and outside the State of Minnesota?

Mr. WILSON. I understand that Mr. Fuller lives outside the limits of the State.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I understand he was never in the Territory outside the State but once in his life, which was on the day of election; and that then he came back the next day.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that he resides outside the limits of the State. But, sir, these facts were all hastily passed upon by the committee. I do not think the matter was under consideration there for more than half an hour. The minority determined to present every fact they could obtain, and then let the House determine the matter as they think proper. I shall be perfectly satisfied whichever one of the Delegates they admit; and I shall be satisfied if they send them both back.

Mr. HUGHES obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. GILMER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state all I know about this matter. I voted against Mr. Kingsbury holding his seat, not entirely for the reasons which appear in the minority report. It struck me as an anomaly that when, by the organization of a State, the Governor, and other territorial officers, were superseded, the Delegate's office here was not also superseded. After the committee adjourned, I was met by Mr. Fuller, who complained that he had not been notified to appear before the committee, and that the facts of his case had not been made known. I heard him, agreed that he might state the facts, and that I would present them to the House as a matter of personal favor to him. Well, sir, I am satisfied that Mr. Kingsbury was not voted for by any except citizens living within the confines of the State; and the case of Mr. Fuller is completely made out, if members will turn their attention to the provisions of the State constitution, and the legislation which took place under it. None are authorized to vote for Delegate except those who are authorized to vote for members of the Territorial Legislature. How could a man vote outside the confines of the State? If he did, he voted against the law.

On the 13th day of October there was an election held in the State of Minnesota. There the citizens elected State officers, members of the General Assembly, three members to Congress, and also a Delegate. There were opposing candidates in the State, and opposing candidates outside of the State—separate and distinct elections. Mr. Kingsbury had an opponent. The Democratic members who ran for Congress had opponents. A similar election was held in the Territory outside of the State. Mr. Fuller was the Democratic candidate for Delegate, and he was opposed by a candidate of different politics. The election was held regularly outside of the Territory, as regularly as the imperfect organization of things would permit. Mr. Fuller was elected and returned. He has advised me that the attempt to retain Mr. Kingsbury in his seat any longer has entirely taken him by surprise. I state from the best investigation that I could give to the subject, that my mind is clear that Mr. Kingsbury has no right to be here. Whether Mr. Fuller has or not, may be another question.

Mr. HUGHES. I submit as an amendment, the resolution which was read from the Clerk's desk a short while ago—

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. A great many gentlemen desire to leave the Hall, and I will give notice now that I will call the previous question to-night, and ask for a vote to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of no small importance, and not to be too hastily dispatched to decide whether or not a man has a right to a seat upon this floor. When this question was first presented to this House, believing that although it in part pertained to matters which lie within the jurisdiction of the Committee of Elections, yet it also embraced a large field of inquiry proper for the Committee on Territories, of which I am a member, I endeavored to get a motion before the House to refer the matter to that committee, but was prevented by the previous question.

I have carefully read the reports of the minority and majority of the Committee of Elections, and I have examined the precedents which are referred to in both of them; and, sir, I must be permitted to say, that if either of the gentlemen applying for a seat upon this floor, as a Delegate from Minnesota Territory, is entitled to a seat, it is Mr. Fuller and not Mr. Kingsbury. But I do not admit that the fact that Mr. Fuller received a majority of the votes cast in the area outside of the limits of the State of Minnesota, alone entitles him to walk in here and take his seat upon this floor, although there is a precedent for it. That precedent is in the case of Sibley, the former Delegate from Wisconsin, which the majority of this committee relied upon in their report to sustain the claim of Mr. Kingsbury. I assert that it is directly in the face of, and opposed to, the claim of Mr. Kingsbury, and directly a precedent for the admission of Mr. Fuller upon this floor; and I make that statement upon the authority of the report of the Committee of Elections in that case.

On that occasion there was a majority and a minority report. Mr. Thompson, of Indiana, made the majority report. Mr. Sibley in that case occupied the status that is occupied by Mr. Fuller here. He claimed to be the representative of that portion of the Territory which lay outside of the State limits. Mr. Tweedy, who occupied the status now occupied by Mr. Kingsbury, believing his right to a seat upon this floor doubtful, voluntarily resigned, and then the question came up whether the House would admit Mr. Sibley. The majority reported in favor of his admission, and the minority against it. The House admitted him. If that is a precedent to govern our action in this case, then Fuller is entitled to a seat on this floor, and Kingsbury is not.

But how far is that precedent binding on the House? The cases are exactly parallel. Mr. Sibley was admitted to a seat on this floor in the month of January, and the Territory was not organized till March following. The Territory of Dacotah is not organized. That is the Territory which Fuller claims to represent. A bill is pending before Congress to erect it into a separate territorial government; but it is a matter to be passed upon by Congress. Congress is to say whether or not any Territory ought to be organized there.

I suppose that each case will stand on its own merits. In that case, I apprehend, it was plain to the Congress that admitted Mr. Sibley that the territorial bill organizing the Territory of Minnesota would pass, and therefore they felt no hesitation in admitting Sibley to his seat. But is it at all clear, is it at all certain that the Territory of Dacotah will be organized into a separate and independent territorial government? That is a question yet to be passed upon. How many inhabitants are there in those counties? May it not be ultimately found to be the wiser and better policy, instead of going to the expense of a Governor, Legislative Assembly, and all the machinery of a territorial government there, to attach these counties to the Territory of Nebraska, and give to that Territory an additional judicial district? That would dispose of the whole question. Then what right would Fuller or Kingsbury have to a seat on this floor?

I am not in favor of hot haste in admitting men to this House before the people of a Territory have fairly asked for a Delegate. I understand the facts in this case to be as stated in the report of the minority of the committee. A paper has been handed to me, which I wish to have read, to show who received the votes in these outside counties. The fact appears to be, if these papers are true, that while the people inside of the limits of the present State of Minnesota were voting for Kingsbury, the people, in what is called Dacotah, were voting for Fuller; and that Kingsbury lives within the limits of the State, and not of the supposed Territory.

Mr. CAVANAUGH. Do I understand the gentleman to say, that the elections within the State, and outside of the State, were held on the same day?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; it is so stated in the reports of the committee.

The paper was read, as follows:

MEDARY, November 23, 1857.

The following is the result of the election for Delegate to Congress in Dacotah Territory:

Midway County.

Medary precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	103 votes.
Flandrau precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	77 "
Renshaw precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	45 "

Rock County.

Colan Perce precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	83 votes.
Split Rock precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	34 "

Big Sioux County.

Sioux Falls City precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	97 votes.
Emanaja precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	51 "
Summit City precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	29 "

Pipe-Stone County.

Pipe-Stone City precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	47 votes.
---	-----------

Pembina County.

Big-Stone Lake precinct, A. G. Fuller.....	47 votes.

The above is a true copy of the record filed in the office of the register of deeds of Midway county.

WILLIAM E. BROWN,
Register of Deeds.

D. S. BRAWLEY,
Chairman Board of City Council.
A. J. WHITNEY,
Sheriff of Midway county.

Mr. KELSEY. If the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me, I will submit a motion which I think will accomplish the object he has in view, and dispose of this matter at once. I agree with the principles of his amendment offered here, but it would be idle for us to waste more time on the subject; and, if the gentleman will yield to me, I will submit a proposition to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. HUGHES. After I shall have redeemed my promise to my colleague, [Mr. Wilson,] I will do so. I promised to yield the floor to him to allow him to submit his proposition.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the resolution offered by the majority of the committee, by striking out all after the word "resolved," and inserting the following:

That W. W. Kingsbury is not entitled longer to retain a seat in this House as a Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota.

Resolved, That A. G. Fuller be allowed to qualify and take a seat in this House as a Delegate from the said Territory without the limits of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. HUGHES. This proposition of my colleague is offered as an amendment to the resolutions of the majority of the committee. I offer my proposition as an amendment to his amendment. I simply wish to say, in addition, that I would be perfectly content to see the whole subject go to the table; but it seems to me that, if this House is not satisfied to exclude both these claimants, and disposed to take further action on the subject, the wiser and better mode of deciding the question as to who is entitled to the seat is, to refer the whole matter to the Committee on Territories, and let them inquire into the facts, the number of the population, and the necessity for organizing a territorial government there.

Mr. KELSEY. Does the gentleman from Indiana allow me to submit my motion?

Mr. HUGHES. I do.

Mr. KELSEY. Then I move to lay the whole subject on the table; and on that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I think the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion when I tell him that the Delegate from Minnesota, who is more familiar with the matter than either of us, desires to be heard.

Mr. KELSEY. I am under the directions of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HUGHES. If the discussion is to go on, I will desire to submit the remarks I intended to submit.

Mr. KELSEY. I am urged by gentlemen on both sides to withdraw my motion, and to hold on to it. I think the House is in possession of everything necessary to form its judgment, and therefore that we should come to a vote.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I gave notice to the House some time ago that no vote would be taken to-night, and I doubt whether there is a quorum in the Hall now.

Mr. KELSEY. I understood that that proposition was objected to on this side of the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I heard no dissent. A great many members have left under the impression that no vote will be taken to-night.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. KELSEY. This matter can be passed over informally till the morning. Let the motion that I have made stand, and let us proceed with other business.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I am willing to agree to that arrangement. If the House choose to lay the whole subject on the table, it is a matter of no consequence to me. I only object to taking the vote in an empty House, when members have left with the understanding that there was no vote to be taken to-night.

Mr. CLEMENS. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw that motion, as many gentlemen have left under the impression that no vote would be taken to-night.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the Chair if the motion cannot stand, and let the subject go over till to-morrow at twelve o'clock?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The motion of the gentleman from New York is in order at any time, and it does not prejudice his motion, to wait till to-morrow. If no other business can be done to-night, and gentlemen wish to speak to-night on this subject, it certainly interferes with no other business in the world.

Mr. RUFFIN. If there are members enough here to determine other important business, it seems to me that there are enough to vote on this question. I do not approve of this plan of doing business with less than a quorum; and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say that, on the last vote to lay the resolutions in the Fort Snelling case on the table, I had paired off with Mr. HAWKINS; otherwise I would have voted "no."

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BUFFINTON, and CLARK of Missouri, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 20.

So the motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at five minutes after seven o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 3, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

An act (No. 47) confirming locations of land warrants under certain circumstances;

An act (No. 262) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland and others;

A resolution (No. 21) devolving upon the Secretary of War the execution of the act of Congress entitled "An act supplemental to an act therein mentioned," approved December 22, 1854; and

A resolution (No. 32) for the benefit of the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon, United States Navy.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 246) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Wisconsin; and

A bill (No. 631) granting an invalid pension to John Holland, of Arkansas.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GREEN presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Kansas, in Missouri, on the subject of a railroad to the Pacific ocean, by the valley of the Kansas river, or the route of the thirty-ninth parallel of latitude; which was referred to the select committee on the Pacific railroad.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 246) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Wisconsin—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 631) granting an invalid pension to John Holland, of Arkansas—to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of citizens of the county of Pembina, in the Territory of Dacotah, praying for an early organization of the Territory, and for the establishment of the capital at St. Joseph, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial from citizens of Medary, in Dacotah, praying for the organization of a territorial government, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of citizens in Big Sioux and Midway counties, in Dacotah, praying the organization of a territorial government, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of J. Grimes and others, citizens of Illinois, praying for protection for the overland mail route to California, through Arizona Territory, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of J. Knox Walker and others, members of the Legislature of Tennessee, praying for protection for the overland mail route to California, through Arizona Territory, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of A. P. Cook and others, citizens of New York, praying for protection to the overland mail route to California, through Arizona Territory, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of James M. Wright and others, citizens of Illinois, praying for protection for the overland mail route to California, through Arizona Territory, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 502) for the relief of S. W. and A. A. Turner, reported it without amendment.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 399) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend preemption rights to certain lands therein mentioned," approved March 3, 1853, reported it without amendment, and that it ought not to pass.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Hosea B. Horn and others, praying for a grant of land on Green river, in the Territory of Utah, for the purpose of making a settlement, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Taylor county, Iowa, praying the enactment of a law for the relief of settlers from wrongs in consequence of the closing of the land offices in that State to enable the railroad companies to make their surveys and selections, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William Nicholson, praying that the children of Marvel Nicholson, deceased, be authorized to locate or assign a land warrant granted to her, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Richard H. Long, praying permission to locate upon the reserves on St. Andrew's bay, in Florida, certain preemption claims, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 243) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1859, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Robert Morris, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, the Secretary of the Navy having jurisdiction to grant the redress prayed for; which was agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred a report of the Secretary of War in relation to the claims of Blocker & Gurley, and James F. Davis, reported a bill (S. No. 425) for the relief of R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and James F. Davis; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the claim of Russell Fitch, reported a bill (S. No. 426) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Russell Fitch, of Ohio; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Marblehead, Massachusetts, relative to bounty land to privateersmen in the war of 1812, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 395) to authorize the increase of invalid pensions in certain cases, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Anna M. McKenney, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of James Munroe, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 461) granting an invalid pension to John Lee, of the State of Maine;

A bill (H. R. No. 513) granting an invalid pension to William Howell, of Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 530) for the relief of William Bullock; and

A bill (H. R. No. 533) for the relief of Shove Chase, of New York.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a letter of the Secretary of the Senate in relation to the compensation of the Senators from Minnesota, reported:

"That there is no express provision in the act regulating the compensation of members of Congress applicable to the particular case presented; but, in the opinion of the committee, a correct construction of the act of August 16, 1856, forbids the allowance of compensation until the State of Minnesota was admitted into the Union, and that the compensation to the Senators from that State should commence on the day of admission—May 11, 1858."

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 353) for the relief of Eli W. Goff, reported it without amendment; and that it ought not to pass.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 486) for the relief of Alonzo and Elbridge G. Colby;

A bill (H. R. No. 573) for the relief of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster; and

A bill (H. R. No. 569) for the relief of Gardner & Vincent, and others.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas W. Ward, reported a bill (S. No. 427) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late United States consul to Panama; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel S. Powell, and others, praying an examination of a plan proposed by Samuel Nowlan, for bridging the East river, at New York, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of J. Hosford Smith, praying additional allowance during the time he was United States consul at Beirut, in Syria, reported adversely thereon, a bill for his relief having been already passed.

Mr. REID, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of David Bruce, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 452) for the relief of Dr. Thomas Antisell, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Robert Hale, for compensation for improvements in war rockets, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ebenezer Ballard and Rishworth Jordan, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Michael Nourse, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Charles Vinson, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of James Myer, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 428) for the relief of James Myer. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Jane J. Wingerd, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 429) for the relief of Jane J. Wingerd. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed:

A bill (S. No. 22) for the relief of certain citizens of Sioux City, in the State of Iowa; and

A bill (S. No. 220) for the relief of the citizens and owners of property in the city of Omaha, Nebraska Territory, and Sioux City, State of Iowa.

Mr. HARLAN submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Public Lands on the subject; which were ordered to be printed with the report made by Mr. STUART.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Claude Samory, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Commissioner of Patents, on Agriculture, and a resolution for printing sixty thousand additional copies of the report, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate, thirty thousand extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Patents, on Agriculture, for the year 1857, five thousand copies of which for distribution by the Interior Department and the Patent Office: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages contained in said report shall not exceed five hundred and sixty-eight, including ten pages of illustrations on wood: And provided further, That the entire amount of copy necessary to complete said report, be placed in the hands of the Superintendent of Public Printing on or before the 31st day of August next.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. This is only half the number which has heretofore usually been printed.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and a motion to print extra copies, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That ten thousand additional copies of the report of the board of regents of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1857 be printed—five thousand for the use of the Senate, and five thousand for the use of the Smithsonian Institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages contained in said report shall not exceed four hundred and forty, without wood-cuts or plates, except those furnished by the Institution: And provided further, That the entire amount of copy necessary to complete said report be placed in the hands of the Superintendent of the Public Printing before the commencement of printing any portion of said report.

Mr. IVERSON. I object to the resolution, unless the five thousand copies for the use of the Senate be stricken out. I have no objection to the other five thousand being printed for the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I do not care whether it be published or not. I submit to the will of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

D. O. DICKINSON.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 446) for the relief of D. O. Dickinson, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and as it is a small matter to which nobody will object, I ask for the passage of the bill at the present time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for the payment to D. O. Dickinson of the sum of $108 75, being the amount due him by the United States for services rendered by him in connection with keeping a light in Waukegan harbor, Illinois.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIANA M. LEWIS.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Naval Affairs to whom was referred the memorial of Georgiana M. Lewis, widow of Armstrong Irvin Lewis, late a lieutenant in the Texan navy, have instructed me to report a bill for her relief.

The bill (S. No. 424) for the relief of Georgiana M. Lewis, was read the first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to consider the bill now. I will make a statement about three minutes long, and then the Senate can judge of it. Congress passed an act to pay the surviving officers of the Texas navy five years' waiting-orders pay, not full pay, and it has been paid. There are two widows whose husbands were officers in the Texas navy, and lived five years after annexation, but were not living at the time of the passage of the act. Mrs. Lewis is one; the other widow has since married, so that in fact Mrs. Lewis is the only widow that is left. Her husband survived the five years, but died before the passage of the act; and this bill proposes to give her what she would have got if her husband had been living last year. That is the whole of it.

The bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that the twelfth section of the naval appropriation act passed March 3, 1857, shall be so construed as to allow to Georgiana M. Lewis the five years' pay for which it provides, which would have been paid to her deceased husband, Armstrong I. Lewis, if he had been living at the time of the passage of that act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOUGLAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 431) to revive and put in force the provisions of "An act giving to the President of the United States additional powers for the defense of the United States in certain cases against invasion, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1839, with modifications; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KENNEDY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 430) to establish a line of mail steamships between certain ports of the United States and Great Britain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

FORTS JEFFERSON AND TAYLOR.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to inquire into the condition of Forts Jefferson and Taylor, at Key West and Tortugas, and the expediency and expense of putting them in a defensible condition.

RECOMMITTAL OF A REPORT.

On motion of Mr. JONES, it was Ordered, That the memorial of James Munroe, with the adverse report of the Committee on Pensions thereon, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES moved that an additional member be placed upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills; which was agreed to; and Mr. Rice was appointed.

GEORGIA VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. IVERSON. Yesterday, I introduced a joint resolution asking for the application of a small balance in the Treasury to the State of Georgia for payments which she has made to her troops under a former bill, which appropriated a certain amount to pay those troops. The Senator from New York [Mr. KING] objected. He is willing to withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. I will state, that having looked at the resolution, I waive my objections.

Mr. IVERSON. I move that it be taken up. It is the joint resolution (S. No. 48) for the payment of an unexpended balance to the State of Georgia for militia services.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. DAVIS. I think some explanation ought to be given of that resolution.

Mr. IVERSON. By the act of 1842, $175,000 was appropriated to refund to the State of Georgia amounts which she had paid to her troops or militia engaged in the Seminole, Cherokee, and Creek wars. All that has been paid back to the State of Georgia with the exception of $7,000 now in the Treasury unexpended. Since the passage of that law, the State of Georgia has paid three or four of the companies engaged in that service who had not been paid by the State at the time the law was passed. Upon application to the Secretary of the Treasury the accounting officer declines to pay it, on the ground that the law of 1842 limits the payments to those which had then been made by the State of Georgia, and these companies were paid about three years subsequent to that time. The State has paid for three or four more of those companies, and this resolution is to allow about $7,000 to go to the State of Georgia to pay the troops which have been employed subsequent to that time. That is the whole case. The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. YULEE. I ask the Senate to oblige me by taking up the bill (S. No. 143) to create the office of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. I presume there will be no debate upon it.

Mr. SEWARD. What is the bill?

Mr. YULEE. It is the bill to create the office of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. It has been heretofore before the Senate and sufficiently explained. Further explanation is not necessary. I think it will not require longer than to vote.

Mr. SEWARD. I think it will give rise to debate; I must therefore interpose an objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to take up is in order, subject to a vote of the Senate.

Mr. SEWARD. If there will be no debate, I have no objection to the vote being taken.

Mr. BRÖDERICK. I hope the motion of the Senator from Florida will not prevail. I intend to oppose that bill, and I shall occupy as much time as possible, if I can prevent its passage. I give the Senator from Florida notice now that I shall do so.

Mr. YULEE. In the face of such a threat, I hope the Senate will take the bill up and dispose of it. It is necessary to the public service. I trust the Senate will not be thwarted in its legislation upon matters interesting and proper to the public service, by a threat that, as much time shall be occupied upon the subject as possible for the purpose of defeating its action. I hope the Senate will take up the bill.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the Senator will waive his motion, until I can call up the resolution for extending the session.

Mr. YULEE. Certainly; I withdraw it for that purpose.

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution submitted by me a few days ago, proposing to extend the session; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Collamer, Davis, Doolittle, Douglas, Fitch, Foot, Green, Gwin, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Crittenden, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Hammond, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, Pearce, and Toombs—20.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. If it be in order, I move to amend the resolution by substituting the 14th for the 21st.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is the amendment now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the resolution directing the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on the first Monday in June next, at twelve o'clock, meridian, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded, and that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned on the 21st of June next, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to amend the resolution by substituting the 14th for the 21st.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that he modify his motion so as to strike out the proposed day for adjournment and leave it blank, so that it can then be perfected with such day as he proposes, or any other day the Senate prefer.

Mr. SLIDELL. I do not insist on the amendment in that form, and I move to strike out the date and leave it blank.

Mr. CLARK. I move to insert the 14th.

Mr. HAMLIN. When this resolution was up the other day, I moved to strike out the 21st and insert the 14th, and it was so stated when it was passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That being the state of the question, it cannot be modified.

Mr. GWIN. Cannot the motion be divided, and the question be first taken on striking out, and then on inserting?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No, sir. A motion to strike out and insert cannot be divided.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. When different days are proposed, is the longest or the shortest put first?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In filling blanks, the largest sum and the longest period are put first.

Mr. HALE. This is not to fill a blank, but a motion to strike out and insert. I move to strike out the day proposed, and insert Saturday, the 12th. I do not see any need of staying here over Sunday; and if we can do up our business, we can just as well adjourn on Saturday as on Monday morning. I do not see the sense of keeping us here on Sunday. I move to insert "Saturday, the 12th."

Mr. COLLAMER. The 14th would be first in order, would it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. COLLAMER. Is not the longest time to be first put?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was no blank in the first instance to be filled.

Mr. COLLAMER. It will cost the Government nothing for us to stay here from Saturday to Monday.

Mr. HALE. It will cost us something.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The adjournments have always been on Monday in consequence of the difficulty of making up the records. That is the reason why we always adjourn on Monday.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my amendment, but I protest against the clerks working on Sundays to make up our records.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CLARK,] to strike out the "21st," and insert the "14th."

Mr. CLARK. That is the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 39, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Green, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Toombs, Wilson, and Wright—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Brown, Gwin, Hammond, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Polk, Seward, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, and Yulee—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, subsequently said: I rise to a privileged question. The vote on the resolution for adjournment was taken so quickly that I did not observe it, and I find that several others did not. I am entirely opposed to the extension of time; and I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution fixing the day of adjournment for the 7th was repealed, and another day substituted in its place.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope that will be done. I was in the position of my friend from Arkansas. I did not observe the announcement of the vote, and I desire very much that there shall be a yeas and nays on the question of extending the day of adjournment. I do not want it to seem to pass sub silentio. I am very much opposed to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded to reconsider the vote by which the resolution to change the time of adjournment to the 14th of June was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask for the yeas and nays on the reconsideration.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. We had better agree to the reconsideration, and take the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By general consent, the call for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 32, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Chandler, Collamer, Davis, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Foot, Green, Gwin, Hamlin, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Mallory, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clark, Clay, Crittenden, Dixon, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Hale, Hammond, Harlan, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, King, Pearce, Pugh, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Yulee—21.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HALE afterwards said: I rise to a privileged question. I happened accidentally to be in the House of Representatives a few minutes since, when our resolution for adjournment came over, and it was announced that we had voted to adjourn on the 21st. I find by the record, what I supposed to be the fact, that we voted to adjourn on the 14th. I know the resolution has gone to the House of Representatives that we voted to adjourn on the 21st. I move that a message be sent to the House requesting the return of that resolution to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The mistake occurred in the Secretary's office.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Does the Senator say that the resolution was to adjourn on the 21st?

Mr. HALE. I said the House have been so notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution was to adjourn on the 14th; but by some mistake in the Secretary's office, it was made to adjourn on the 21st. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that a message be sent to the House asking the return of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The resolution was returned from the House of Representatives, and the error rectified.

ANTHONY S. ROBINSON.

Mr. POLK. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 158) for the relief of Anthony S. Robinson, heir and legal representative of John Hamilton Robinson.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the payment to Anthony S. Robinson, heir and legal representative of John Hamilton Robinson, deceased, for services rendered by John Hamilton Robinson to the Republic of Mexico, of the sum of $16,956, with a proviso that this sum shall not exceed the residue of the $3,250,000 mentioned in the fifteenth article of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded at Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the 2d of February, 1848.

Mr. TOOMBS. I should like to have some explanation of these services, or what claim this party has on this fund.

Mr. POLK. I will state to the Senator. The present claimant, Anthony S. Robinson, is the only heir and legal representative of John Hamilton Robinson. John Hamilton Robinson was a citizen of the United States, resident at one time in Missouri, and at the time of his death at Natchez, in Mississippi. He went to Mexico during the struggles for independence there, and was a major general in the Mexican army. This is a claim against the Government of Mexico for services rendered by him to that Government; and, therefore, I suppose, is in the class of cases intended to be covered by the provision of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which appropriated a certain amount of money in favor of claims of American citizens against the Government of Mexico. I will state also, while I am on this ground, that the amount of that fund unexpended is ten times as large as the amount proposed to be given here.

Mr. TOOMBS. This case is clearly outside of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. We did not undertake to pay the contracts of Mexico, but damages done to our citizens illegally; not agreements which she had made for military services, such as this man Robinson rendered to Mexico. We did not undertake to pay the debts of Mexico arising ex contractu. He has no claim on the fund. If the United States chooses—and I do not see why she should not do so, as in other cases—to pay the debts of Mexico, that is a fair question for the Senate to determine; but to pay our citizens who go off and enlist in the service of a foreign Government, will not do. If we are under obligations to pay it, it is all right, but it is not under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. It is not of the class of cases that comes under that treaty. It is no charge on the fund of $3,250,000.

Mr. POLK. I think the Senator is mistaken in that entirely. The treaty was not confined to cases of tort.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator from Georgia is clearly right in his objection to this bill. It is out of the question for us to construe the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo as meaning that this Government is to provide for the payment of the debts of the Mexican Government to our own citizens ex contractu; that we are to provide for the payment of sums due by Mexico to her own generals for their salaries, their pay in her army. That never was pretended. The sum of $3,000,000 was reserved by the treaty stipulations with Mexico for the purpose of settling the claims of our citizens against that Government, which our Government was bound to support and protect. Our Government does not go down to Mexico, and protect contracts of the Mexican Government with our own citizens for furnishing supplies, making sales, and furnishing labor to them. I have no idea that any precedent can be found for this. I never so understood the treaty. I think it is wrong.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object to the engrossment of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then it cannot receive its third reading to-day.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I withdraw my objection to taking the vote on it. I suppose we may as well take the vote to-day.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and rejected.

Mr. HAMMOND afterwards moved to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill; and the motion was directed to be entered.

S. W. AND A. A. TURNER.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move to postpone other prior orders, and take up the civil appropriation bill.

Mr. WADE. The time for that has not come. I hope the Senator will allow me to take up a bill to which there is no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. I will wait until one o'clock.

Mr. WADE. Then I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 502) for the relief of Samuel W. and Alvin A. Turner.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $23,825 to Samuel W. and Alvin A. Turner in full for their services in transporting the United States mail on their steamers from Cleveland, Ohio, and Detroit, Michigan, to Mackinaw, Sault Ste. Marie, Marquette, Copper Harbor, Eagle Harbor, Eagle river, and Ontonagon, Michigan, and La Pointe, Bayfield, and Superior City, in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. KING. Is there any report in that case?

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear the report, or some explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a report from the committee of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. HORTON on the 17th of April:

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of S. W. and A. A. Turner, report:

This claim is for compensation for transportation of the United States mails, in steamboats, between Cleveland, Ohio, and Detroit, Michigan, and the several post offices on Lake Huron and Lake Superior, during the years from 1851 to 1857, both inclusive, viz:

From Detroit to Sault Ste. Marie, 500 miles, and back, summer of 1851.....	27 trips.
From Detroit to Sault Ste. Marie, five hundred miles and back, summer of 1852.....	25 "
From Detroit to Sault Ste. Marie, five hundred miles, and back, summer of 1853.....	29 "
From Detroit to Sault Ste. Marie, five hundred miles, and back, summer of 1854.....	26 "
From Cleveland to Sault Ste. Marie, 1854.....	9 "
From Cleveland to La Pointe, one thousand one hundred miles, 1855.....	34 "
From Cleveland to La Pointe, one thousand one hundred miles, 1856.....	15 "

Making..... 165 trips.

For which $125 per round trip is charged, amounting to $20,625; and from Cleveland to Superior City, about one thousand two hundred miles, and back, during the summer of 1857, sixteen trips, at $200 per trip—$3,200; making a total of $23,825.

It appears from a statement furnished by the Post Office Department, in answer to a call from the chairman of this committee, that prior to 1852 there was no contract in existence for the service on Lake Superior, but in June of that year the postmaster of Sault Ste. Marie was authorized to engage steamboat service between his office and Ontonagon, including the supply of intermediate offices, at fifteen dollars per trip. Under this arrangement the claimants appear to have received $1,410, and for this special service no further charge is made, and that item is not included in this claim.

In May, 1856, the claimants were offered fifty dollars per trip to carry the mail between Cleveland and Ontonagon three times a week. They claim to have performed fifteen trips that season, but have received no pay. They claim $125 per trip, which the Department declines to admit.

It does not appear from the statement from the Department that any portion of the service for which compensation is now claimed has been paid for, and the committee are entirely satisfied that such payment has never been made.

The actual performance of the service seems to be fully proved by the affidavits of the masters of the several steamboats engaged in it, and the certificates of postmasters.

Benjamin G. Sweet deposes that he was master of the steamer Northerner from the spring of 1851 to the close of 1853, and of the North Star from September, 1854, to the close of 1856, and that these vessels performed the service for which payment is claimed. He states that "the mails were put on board at Detroit by the employé of the post office at that place, and received by the postmasters at the other points, who, in return, made up and redelivered the way mail, which was changed at each office west of the Sault."

He states the usual quantity of bags each trip, for each boat, from thirteen to twenty, and in the fall and spring a much larger number, making the average for the season as high as twenty bags per trip; that the mail bags were put in the baggage-room, in charge of the porter, and took up a large amount of room that might have been profitably employed; that it was sometimes necessary to deliver the mails in a boat, because of the danger and difficulty of getting into the harbor.

The most abundant evidence of the performance of the service is to be found in the testimony of Captain John Wilson, confirmed by the testimony of E. P. Door. Captain Wilson was engaged in similar service, and at the times in which this service is alleged to have been performed. His evidence is so full in relation to the service, its risks, and its value, that your committee propose to make it a part of their report, and hereto append it, marking it "A."

The table attached to it is an epitome of the service, the time when rendered, the distance passed over, and the charges made for said service.

The committee can only refer to the testimony of the other witnesses, without recapitulating it at length.

John E. Turner deposes "that while he was master of the Northerner, he heard the master, acting under instructions of said Turners, refuse to take the mails at Detroit, assigning as a reason that no compensation was made, and the postmaster at Detroit assured him that an allowance would be made, and upon that assurance they continued to carry the mail."

Hon. HENRY M. RICE, and J. S. Watrous, Esq., state that they are familiarly acquainted with the services performed by these claimants, and that they are fully satisfied that the amount charged for the service ($125 per trip) is a moderate remuneration, and ought to be allowed.

Hon. George W. Manypenny (late Commissioner of Indian Affairs) and Hon. S. A. DOUGLAS, speaking from personal knowledge, state that the price charged is reasonable, and that the service is worth the amount asked for it.

The committee are satisfied, from the evidence in the case, and from the statements and certificates of reliable persons having a personal knowledge of the facts, and competent to form a reliable judgment, that the services for which compensation is claimed were actually and faithfully performed; that the interests of a large and active business community, engaged in the development of an important source of national wealth, required the facilities which those services afforded, and that no compensation has been made therefor.

It is the general policy of the Post Office Department to limit the amount and grade of the mail service by the revenues derived from the particular routes. This is illustrated by the fact that fifteen dollars per trip was offered for the service between Sault Ste. Marie and Ontonagon, a distance of five hundred miles, and fifty dollars per trip between Cleveland and Sault Ste. Marie, a distance of five hundred miles.

It is clear that these prices bear no reasonable proportion to the cost of performing the service, whatever relations they may have to the revenues of the offices supplied; and, although the service was performed in compliance with the earnest solicitations of the business community, and the assurances of postmasters that compensation would be made, the inadequate offers of the Department were declined.

The rate charged for this service is less than an average of ninety dollars per mile (reckoning one way only) for daily steamboat service throughout the year, while the price paid from San Francisco and Stockton is $200 per mile per annum, and from $100 to $200 per mile is paid on many other routes.

It is doubtless true that the expense of the service will considerably exceed the revenues directly derived from it; but the same is also the fact of nearly all the other steamboat service, particularly in newly developed sections of the country, like California and the Lake Superior regions. But it will not be denied that the general interests and business of the country demand that these facilities should be afforded to the progressive spirit and energies of our people, and that the wise policy of the Government, in opening such facilities, is amply remunerated in the rapid development of great sources of our national wealth and prosperity. The committee, therefore, being satisfied that the service has been performed, that it has been useful and valuable to the country, and that the compensation asked is reasonable, report a bill for its payment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HUNTER. Can the Senator state whether the services were in pursuance of contract?

Mr. WADE. I am not able to state. The bill comes from the Post Office Committee.

Mr. RICE. I am somewhat acquainted with the service performed, and I would say to the Senate that it was done in pursuance of an order given by the postmasters on the various routes, that the post offices on the northern lakes and in the eastern portion of Minnesota should be supplied during the summer season for several years by this line of boats. I know the service was performed in good boats. I believe the amount is justly due, as several of the postmasters informed me that they had requested the service to be performed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY C. HAMILTON.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I ask the consent of the Senate now to take up a bill which passed this body at the last session, but was not reached in the House of Representatives for want of time. It has now passed that body and come here. The lady has been without her pension for eighteen months, and she is in great distress. It is one of the most meritorious cases presented. I am sure it will not take two minutes to act on it. It is the bill (H. R. No. 518) to continue the pension heretofore paid to Mary C. Hamilton, widow of Captain Fowler Hamilton, late of the United States Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to continue the name of Mrs. Mary C. Hamilton on the pension rolls, at the same rate of pension allowed her under the act passed for her benefit and approved March 1st, 1854, the payment to commence from the expiration of that act, and to continue for five years from the date of the passage of this.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. YULEE. I now renew my motion to take up the bill (S. No. 143) to create the office of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

The VICE PRESIDENT put the question, and decided that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. YULEE. I ask for the yeas and nays. I desire to know whether the Senate is disposed to act on the subject.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRODERICK. I have seen the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads since this question came up a few minutes since, and he says it is very necessary that the office should be created for the benefit of the Post Office Department. I do not agree with the chairman of the committee, but I shall not make any factious opposition to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. YULEE. I will state that it is not at all possible this bill can occupy exceeding ten minutes. There may be some gentlemen desirous of debating it, but I am sure there will be no protracted discussion on our side.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Collier, Davis, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Bröderick, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Pearce, Reid, Seward, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—20.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the appointment by the President, with the consent of the Senate, of a Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, to receive the same compensation which is paid to each of the other Assistant Postmasters General; and the Fourth Assistant is to send and receive letters, packages, and other matters on official business, through the mails, free of postage, subject to the same restrictions and penalties as the other Assistant Postmasters General.

Mr. YULEE. Having, on a former occasion, explained the reasons of the Department for requesting this addition to the organization of the Department, I refrain from repeating them.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall vote against the bill, and I will very briefly state the reasons. I think the whole organization of the system of Assistant Secretaries is bad. It is a mere cover to conceal the salary of a clerk. We cannot transfer the responsibilities of the head of a Department by calling them assistants. Every clerk is his assistant. I think, in the classification of clerkships, there should be salaries fixed to command the highest abilities, and that the lower clerkships should have less than they now receive. Young men should be taken and trained to the special duties of each Department, and, as they acquired the ability to occupy higher positions, they should be advanced to them with an increase of salary. I am perfectly willing the higher clerks should receive the salary given to the so-called Assistant Secretaries. I think the whole organization a bad one—a misnomer. I am opposed to increasing it; I am opposed to doing anything which will fix it on the country; and I hope, some day or other, to see it repealed.

Mr. YULEE. The objection of the Senator from Mississippi is only to the name, the designation of the officer. It is not an objection to the necessity for the creation of this office, but only to the designation of the officer. Inasmuch as the law, as it now stands, has organized the Post Office Department into different divisions, at the head of which are Assistant Postmasters General; and inasmuch as the duties belonging to the division which it is proposed to place under the direction and superintendence of a Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, require the supervision of an officer of equal grade with those who superintend the other divisions, I hope the Senator will not press an objection to the mere designation as an objection to the bill. If the organization of the Post Office Department is defective, let it be amended by general reform; but, while the organization stands, as the law now requires, we may perfect that organization as far as may be necessary for the due administration of public business.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to inquire the difference in salary between a first class clerk and an Assistant Postmaster General?

Mr. YULEE. The pay of chief clerk, I think, is two thousand or perhaps eighteen hundred dollars. The pay of an Assistant Postmaster General is $3,000. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General proposed to be now created will receive the same pay as is paid to the other Assistant Postmasters General.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to inquire the difference between the salary of the chief clerk and that of the Assistant Postmaster General?

Mr. YULEE. About a thousand dollars, I think.

Mr. KING. While I concur in the objection which the Senator from Mississippi presents to this bill, my objection is chiefly to the increase of salary at this time. I regard this bill as designed chiefly for that object, and that, with me, is a more important objection than the name by which the officer shall be called. I do not propose to discuss the question; everybody understands it. I shall vote against the bill. I voted against taking it up because I was opposed to the bill.

Mr. YULEE. The objection of the Senator from New York is that the purpose, as he supposes, is simply to increase salary. The Senator could not have attended to the contents of the letter of the Postmaster General which was read on a former occasion. The reason of the necessity for this office is that the very large business of inspection and distribution of mail-bags, &c., is much beyond the ability of either of the three Assistant Postmasters General to superintend. The consequence is that the Postmaster General, for the last ten or twelve years, has been obliged to appropriate his chief clerk to that duty. The effect has been to withdraw entirely from his service the aid of a chief clerk, and he occupies the anomalous position of being the only head of a department in the Government who has no chief clerk. It is because the chief clerk has been obliged necessarily to be devoted entirely to the duties of the superintendence of the inspection office. The inspection office employs seventeen clerks, and has as large a mass of business as either of the other divisions, involving a great deal of responsibility and very important judicial questions. In fact, it is one of the four divisions into which the business of the Department naturally divides itself, especially judicial, and requires an officer of high character. The consequence of the present arrangement is not only that the Postmaster General loses the services of a chief clerk, but besides that, the grade of character and ability which can be employed at the salary of a chief clerk is not that which is required for the performance of the very large duties of the inspection office. In order that Senators may understand how important and extensive those duties are, I will read a schedule which enumerates the duties of the inspection division of the Post Office Department:

"Inspection Office.—G. C. Poindexter, Esq., chief clerk"— he has resigned since the date of this—

"—and seventeen clerks. To this office is assigned the duty of receiving and examining the registers of the arrivals and departures of the mails, certificates of the service of route agents, and reports of mail failures; of noting the delinquencies of contractors, and preparing cases thereon for the action of the Postmaster General; furnishing blanks for mail registers, and reports of mail failures; providing and sending out mail bags and mail locks and keys, and doing all other things which may be necessary to secure a faithful and exact performance of all mail contracts.

"All cases of mail depredation, of violation of law by private expresses, or by the forging or illegal use of postage stamps, are under the supervision of this office, and should be reported to it.

"All communications respecting lost money, letters, mail depredations, or other violations of law, or mail locks and keys, should be directed 'Chief Clerk, Post Office Department.'"

The duties are very large. They are connected with very large disbursements of the Government. It is important to the economical as well as successful administration of the Department, that this very large and important division of its duties should be superintended by a competent agent. It will be an economical measure. It is indispensable. Formerly, and before the chief clerk was appointed to this business, it was a desk in one of the other divisions of the Assistant Postmasters General; but by our increase of territory, the business of that Department has increased so much that the experience of all gentlemen here must have acquainted them that it is impossible for the First Assistant Postmaster General to do more than attend to the appointments; for the Second Assistant to do more than attend to matters of contract; and for the Third to do more than attend to the financial affairs of the Department. This office is necessary to perfect the organization of the Department; and I trust the Senate will allow what the present Postmaster General, concurring with two or three of his predecessors, has pressed on the legislative department as necessary.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator from Florida be good enough to inform me who is the person that now discharges the duties?

Mr. YULEE. I cannot tell the gentleman. Mr. Oakford discharged them under Mr. Campbell. Mr. Poindexter was appointed in his stead by the present Postmaster General; but he resigned a month or two ago, and I cannot inform the Senator who succeeded him.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the objection stated by the Senator from Mississippi is one which cannot be answered. I think this whole matter lies in a nutshell. It is a simple question of increasing salaries—no more, no less—call it chief clerk, or Assistant Postmaster General, it matters not which. I believe the Senator from Mississippi is right when he says—and the position he has occupied entitles the declaration to great weight—that you cannot change the responsibility from the head of a Department to a secondary officer, whether you call him clerk or Assistant Secretary. I think this bill is objectionable because it increases salaries at this time, when it ought not to be done.

I object also to giving this appointment to the President. I would trust the head of a Department, who knows what the duties to be discharged are, to judge of the qualifications better than the Executive, who would not know those duties as well as the head of the Department, who is responsible. But the other objection I make is a broader one, and which ought to control us, and will control me; it is this: I presume the same person who now discharges the duties of the office will continue to discharge them, and receive the increased salary under this bill, if it should pass. You can go into every Department of the Government and find chief clerks who are required to discharge as onerous and responsible duties as any that are discharged in the Post Office Department; and you do injustice to another class of chief clerks, by simply changing the name of one in one Department, and giving him an increased salary. I concur with the Senator from Mississippi, when he says the chief clerks ought to be very competent men, and perhaps we ought to pay them more than we do now, though I think we pay them two thousand or two thousand five hundred dollars. I do not believe in taking one class in one Department, styled by one name, and giving them an additional compensation over the same class in another Department. That is the objection I make to this bill. If you are going to make the compensation of this chief clerk higher, or if you choose, on account of the name, to give him a compensation of $3,000 a year as Assistant Postmaster General, go into the other Departments, and see whether their chief clerks ought not to be assistant secretaries, and mete out to them the measure of justice, if it be justice, that you are meting out in this case.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the hour for the special order has arrived.

Mr. YULEE. We can soon get through with this subject.

Mr. HUNTER. I must insist on the special order. I have given up two hours this morning.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to say a word. When this proposition was first brought into the Senate, I was inclined to vote for it; but the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has convinced me that I ought to vote against it. My opinion is, that the division of responsibility always does harm. I was at first under the impression that the person was to be selected by the Postmaster General, and that the whole responsibility of the Department would be under its chief. I perceive, however, that it is otherwise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must announce to the Senate that the hour has arrived for the consideration of the special order.

Mr. YULEE. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, I should be very much gratified if this bill could be proceeded with to its termination. It is not likely to occupy more than five or ten minutes. I shall have nothing more to say.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us go on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. YULEE. I move to postpone the appropriation bill, with the expectation that this measure will not occupy the Senate more than five or ten minutes.

Mr. HUNTER. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion. ["Oh, no!"]

Mr. BIGLER. I hope the Senator from Florida will withdraw his motion.

Mr. YULEE. I promise that if the bill occupies more than ten minutes I will yield.

Mr. HUNTER. Other Senators may want to debate it.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1859.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If a motion to reconsider a little amendment of mine is in order I will make it, that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs may add an amendment to it. I do not think it necessary; I think the existing law is right; but I hope by general consent the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will be allowed to make his amendment. I see no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read:

"For making the surveys of the confirmed private land claims in California"

Mr. HUNTER. I withdrew that amendment. It is not pending.

Mr. BRODERICK. I hope that amendment will be taken up. My colleague is now in his seat. I believe it was postponed for the purpose of giving him an opportunity of explaining it. I wish to hear his explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California may renew the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I renew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The Senate will allow the Chair to state that he thinks strictly the first question in order is the motion of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SLIDELL] to reconsider the amendment in regard to the St. Clair flats. With the unanimous consent of the Senate, however, he will permit that to lie over.

Mr. SLIDELL. I changed my vote for the purpose of moving a reconsideration; but I am not aware that I did move it yesterday. I enter the motion now. I think the Journal will show, probably, that I did not make the motion then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is mistaken, then, in that respect.

Mr. GWIN. I offer the amendment which was withdrawn by the Senator from Virginia; after line one hundred and thirteen to insert:

For making the surveys of the confirmed private land claims in California, the surveyor general is hereby authorized to pay such sum as he may deem reasonable, according to the circumstances connected with each case, not exceeding at the rate of twenty-five dollars for each mile of the boundary line of any claim, and also for such lines as may necessarily be run, and marked or measured, in order to connect the lines of such claim with those of the adjacent public surveys.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I offer this as an addition to the amendment:

Provided, That any survey executed under this provision shall be deemed and held void for fraud in all cases where it shall appear that additional compensation shall have been accepted by the surveyor, directly or indirectly, from the owner or owners of the claim.

Mr. GWIN. I am perfectly willing to agree to the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas. In the act "to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," approved March 3, 1851, it was provided:

"And for all claims finally confirmed by the said commissioners or by the said district or supreme court, a patent shall issue to the claimant on his presenting to the General Land Office an authentic certificate of such confirmation, and a plat or survey of the said land duly certified and approved by the surveyor general of California, whose duty it shall be to cause all private claims which shall be finally confirmed to be accurately surveyed and to furnish plats of the same."

It is made the duty of the surveyor general under the law, after a claim has been confirmed, to have it surveyed. The necessity for the legislation now proposed, as I stated a few days ago, arises from the fact that nearly all the finally confirmed private land claims have accumulated in the surveyor general's office within the last year. The late Attorney General, Mr. Cushing, before he went out of office dismissed a great number of those cases, and they are now ready for final survey; the United States having withdrawn its opposition, they were finally confirmed to the claimants. The surveyor general, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior, has given the following statement in regard to this very question:

"It is ten years since we took possession of California, which was soon followed by the discovery of its vast mineral wealth, and a consequent influx of immigration unprecedented in the annals of civilization. Many of these immigrants soon found that independent of the mineral attractions, the agricultural advantages were also superior to those of any of the older States. It was soon ascertained, however, that the best lands of the State were, in the main, covered by numerous large grants derived from the former Government, with limits, in most instances, but very loosely defined; and hence the settlers were often in doubt whether particular tracts formed portions of the public domain to which they could acquire preemption rights, or whether they were within the limits of a grant. The uncertainty incident to this state of affairs not only created much ill feeling between the settlers and the rancho claimants, but it has very greatly retarded permanent improvements, as well as the development of the agricultural resources and capabilities of the country, few being willing during this state of doubt to make permanent improvements. Under the operations of the act of 1851, for the examination of land titles in this State, very many cases have already been finally decided; and in a short time the great mass of them will be definitely settled, as far as the titles are concerned, and only the action on the part of this office will be needed to discriminate between the private claims thus recognized and the contiguous public lands.

"As soon as this discrimination and segregation shall be effected, a brighter day will dawn upon the prospects of the agricultural portion of our citizens, who will be enabled to secure titles to their homes, either by preemption from the United States, where they are on public lands, or by purchase from the confirmees, where they are within the limits of a private grant. In either event they will go on with renewed vigor and spirit in the great work of proving the vast agricultural advantages of this country. Permanent and valuable improvements will take the place of their temporary ones, and they will speedily demonstrate the fact that the proper cultivation of our productive soil is as certain a road to competency, if not to wealth, as the working of our gold placers and quartz veins.

"So soon as the ranchos are properly surveyed, then the adjacent public lands can be safely subdivided and brought into market; and as those lands are generally the most valuable and desirable farming lands in the State, they will be speedily entered, and the Government will begin to derive a revenue therefrom. Hence it is, in my opinion, the true policy of the Government, having regard for the interests of all concerned, to see that every effort be made to draw the lines between the confirmed claims and the public lands at the earliest period possible. But to enable this office to do so, not only must the means be provided by timely and ample appropriations, but further legislation is needed in respect to the compensation which this office is allowed to make for the performance of such service, as well as other matters connected with such surveys.

"The business of surveying these claims is one requiring not only the highest grade of professional qualifications on the part of the deputy, but it should be confided only to those of known ability and of the most incorruptible integrity, as during the process of the work they will have, in very many cases, to act and decide upon testimony which may be adduced in explanation of doubtful questions of boundary.

"The work, as it will be readily perceived, will not be one continuous course of field operations, as in cases of the ordinary surveys of the public lands, but will have to be performed at intervals, and frequently in places widely separated from each other, and not of great extent at any one period, and involving much loss of time in making preliminary examinations, receiving and examining evidence, and also in making the laborious calculations, and other clerical work, necessarily connected with such surveys. As the best and clearest method of presenting my views as to the legislation which is required to meet the necessities of the subject, I have taken the liberty of placing them before the Department in the form of the accompanying "bills," marked (B), to which, and the explanatory remarks connected therewith, I beg leave to solicit your consideration, with the hope that you will concur with me as to the necessity of some such legislation being requisite to obviate the difficulties now retarding the efficient execution of this branch of my duties."

In explanation of the bill here referred to, the surveyor general says:

"SEC. 1. The present price allowed for surveying the claims alluded to is such that it is almost impossible to procure competent deputies to execute the work. Hence the present state of uncertainty as to the lines which are to separate the private claims from the public domain will have to continue, unless the additional sums requisite to compensate the deputies for their time and labor in making such surveys shall be paid them by the confirmees. The injustice of this throwing additional burdens upon the land claimants must be acknowledged by all. Not only so, but the impolicy of making the deputy dependent upon the claimant for compensation, and thus creating a mutual interest between them, is a prominent objection to such a course. Therefore the maximum allowance for making such surveys should be increased, leaving it to the surveyor general to decide what sum, under all the circumstances growing out of the locality of each claim and the nature of its boundaries, would be a fair and reasonable compensation for the services performed. In many cases the proposed maximum would not be more than a just allowance for the execution of the field work."

This is the official report of the surveyor general of California to the Secretary of the Interior. Following that was a recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Secretary of the Interior, that the increased compensation shall be given for the purpose of facilitating the surveys of private land claims in Cal-
